Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, does the Senator from Louisiana object to the present consideration of these resolutions?

Mr. ELLENDER. Unless I can get time to look into them further, I do.

As I said, I would not object to the immediate consideration of resolutions that would expire on June 30, 1951, in all cases where the special committees have been created and actually at work.

Mr. HAYDEN. I can report them and have them placed on the calendar, and then the Senator can take his own time, if he so desires.

Mr. ELLENDER. I should like to have some additional time. At this time, Mr. President, I object to the request for the immediate consideration of the resolutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard, and the resolutions will be received and placed on the calendar, for consideration later.

The resolutions reported by Mr. HAYDEN from the Committee on Rules and Administration were ordered to be placed on the calendar, as follows:

GRANTING OF CITIZENSHIP TO CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide that alien mothers and fathers whose sons lost their lives in the Armed Forces of the United States in time of war may be granted United States citizenship notwithstanding their inability to speak, read, or write the English language or to sign their names. This proposed legislation is suggested to me by the action of State Senator Michael LoPresti, of Boston, who has just introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature a resolution memorializing Congress in favor of such legislation. I understand that the parents of children who have died in the service of their country must still register as aliens because of their inability to read and write English. These men and women have given their flesh and blood to the country of their choice. No citizen can do more. They richly deserve citizenship, and have unquestionably proven their right to have it.

The bill (S. 660) to waive certain requirements of the naturalization laws in the case of persons whose sons or daughters were killed while serving in the Armed Forces of the United States, introduced by Mr. LODGE, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

APPOINTMENT OF MALE NURSES IN ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for the appointment of male citizens as nurses in the Army, Navy, and Air Force, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have prepared explaining its purpose be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 661) to provide for the appointment of male citizens as nurses in the Army, Navy, and Air Force, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. IVES, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR IVES

This bill would provide for equal status for male nurses in the Army and Navy Nurse Corps. In World War II, and in the years ensuing, men, performing the same duties as women nurses, received no officer status and were subordinate to women officers. I raise no objection to the fact that women served in superior command posts, but I strongly feel that men should be given an opportunity to have equal rank for equal duties.

Therefore, I am introducing this bill in collaboration with Congresswoman BOLTON in the House. In the past objection to this proposal has been raised by the Department of Defense on the grounds that such a realinement would necessitate great administrative and legislative difficulty within the Department. I do not feel this to be an adequate ground for rejection of the proposal, inasmuch as male officers in the Nurse Corps could be housed with Regular officers—or in the same quarters as male doctors who also have officer status. I can see no administrative difficulty that would be serious enough to deprive qualified men from attaining appropriate rank as members of the Nurse Corps.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 406 OF NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend section 406 of the Nationality Act of 1940, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have prepared, explaining the purpose of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 662) to amend section 406 of the Nationality Act of 1940, introduced by Mr. IVES, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR IVES

The Nationality Act of 1940 provides that a naturalized citizen of the United States is subject to loss of citizenship should he reside outside the United States for five continuous years after having been naturalized. The act also exempts veterans of the Spanish-American War and World War I from this provision of the law. I believe that veterans of World War II should be given the same privilege as is afforded to the previous veterans.

Great injustices are being wrought because the act has not been thus amended. Men who have served their adopted country with valor and heroism are being denied the same opportunities enjoyed by their counterparts of our previous wars. This to me is unjust and therefore I am introducing this amendment with the hope that the veterans of World War II will be treated with the deference they deserve as far as the Nationality Act is concerned.

ADMISSION INTO UNITED STATES OF ADDITIONAL ITALIAN ALIENS

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for the admission to the United States of an additional number of aliens of Italian nationality, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have prepared explaining the purpose of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 663) to provide for the admission to the United States of an additional number of aliens of Italian nationality, introduced by Mr. IVES, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR IVES

This bill would provide for the issuance of a number of visas to Italian immigrants equal to the unused number forfeited during the last period of hostilities. During that time, 1939–46, travel between Italy and the United States was at a standstill; consequently many persons who would have had the opportunity to come to the United States were unable to do so.

In the spirit of humanity and fairness, I urge that this bill be given full consideration, for if it is enacted, we shall know that we have thus afforded to the Italian people an opportunity they deserve and we shall have corrected an inequity which exists in our present immigration procedure.

PERSONNEL STRENGTH OF MARINE CORPS

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUFF], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from California [Mr. NIXON], the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to fix the personnel strength of the United States Marine Corps at four full-strength combat divisions, four full-strength air wings, and other organic units, and to fix the personnel strength of the Marine Corps at not less than 400,000, and, in addition, to make the Commandant of the Marine Corps a permanent member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does that mean that it is to be the permanent establishment, or is it merely to apply in time of war?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is to be a permanent establishment.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is to be a permanent establishment of 400,000 men. Is that correct?

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the present strength?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think it is approximately 160,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. The bill would more than double the present number, would it not?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It would.

Mr. President, I should like to add that identical bills have been introduced in the House by 60 Members, and there will probably be introduced today at least from 5 to 10 more identical bills.

The bill (S. 677) to fix the personnel strength of the United States Marine Corps, and to make the Commandant of the Marine Corps a permanent member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, introduced by Mr. DOUGLAS (for himself and other Senators), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

TRANSFER OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES—REPEAL OF A PORTION OF THE WHITTEN AMENDMENT

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to repeal that portion of the so-called Whitten amendment, dealing with the transfer of Government employees, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, and a statement which I have prepared in support of the bill, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and statement by the Senator from Illinois will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 678) to prevent undue increases in the number of permanent personnel, and to facilitate the transfer of employees from nondefense to defense agencies, in the Federal Government, introduced by Mr. DOUGLAS, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after September 1, 1950, and until the termination of the national emergency proclaimed by the President on December 16, 1950:

(a) In making appointments in the Government service the Civil Service Commission shall make full use of its authority to make temporary appointments in order to prevent increases in the number of permanent personnel and no employee in the Federal civil service promoted or appointed to a position of higher grade shall be eligible, in the event of separation from the service through reduction in force, to reinstatement at a grade above the grade held by such employee on September 1, 1950; and all reinstatements or promotions to positions in the Federal civil service shall be temporary and for positions subject to the Classification Act of 1949 shall be made with the condition and notice to the individual reinstated, transferred or promoted that the classification grade of the position is subject to postaudit and correction by the appropriate departmental or agency personnel office or the Civil Service Commission;

(b) The names of all persons to be terminated under reductions in force in the departments and agencies of the Government shall be certified as eligible for appointment to positions in agency programs determined by the President to be related directly to national defense, if qualified, at not to exceed the grade and salary last held in the terminating agency or department; and

(c) The Department of Defense is authorized to call on other departments or agencies for such additional personnel as it may require within the limits of its funds.

SEC. 2. Section 1302 of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1951 (Public Law 843, 81st Cong.), is hereby repealed.

The statement presented by Mr. DOUGLAS is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR DOUGLAS

A serious problem has developed under the so-called Whitten amendment (sec. 1302 of Public Law 843, 81st Cong.—Supplemental Appropriations Act for the fiscal year 1951). Its present operation prevents an orderly flow of Federal personnel from nondefense to defense agencies. At a time when we must severely curtail the expense of the nondefense agencies, we should facilitate the movement of personnel away from them.

This would serve the dual purpose of reducing nondefense expenditures and at the same time, make fuller use of experienced personnel where they are needed.

The Whitten amendment provides that in making appointments in the Government service the Civil Service Commission shall make full use of its authority to make temporary appointments in order to prevent increases in the number of permanent personnel. But it also provides that all transfers to positions in the Federal civil service shall be temporary.

The provision instructing the Civil Service Commission to make full use of its authority to make temporary appointments is reasonable and just. It prevents loading down the Federal Government with a tremendous number of permanent employees many of whom might be retained long after the need for them had passed. It also simplifies the problems connected with the return of veterans to their old jobs and with the employment of future veterans.

The provision that all transfers to positions in the Federal civil service shall be temporary, however, is open to serious question. Federal employees with permanent status in an old-line agency are hesitating to transfer to a defense agency where their status would be only temporary. In some cases, not even the lure of promotions is sufficient to overcome the lack of security which is the result of the provisions of the Whitten amendment.

As a matter of fact, the Whitten amendment fails to accomplish its stated purposes for the returning veteran. Take the employee who, for patriotic reasons, transfers to a defense job, thereby assuming an indefinite status: Such employee—if later drafted or if he volunteers for military service—would lose all rights to restoration either to his old or new job.

All possible steps should be taken to facilitate the flow of present Federal employees to the new emergency agencies and units which are of necessity being established. In most instances, I believe, the old agencies will find that they can continue to operate without replacing the transferred employee. The total number of Federal employees would thus be held to a considerably lower level than would be the case if all emergency agency employees had to be recruited from the outside. Also many present employees possess certain skills or forms of expertness not elsewhere available, and are familiar with the proceses commonly used in the Government, thus requiring less training.

For these reasons that portion of the Whitten amendment which operates to prevent the flow of Federal employees from the nondefense to the defense agencies should be repealed, and the bill I am now introducing would do this by repealing the Whitten amendment references to transfers. As it now operates, the Whitten amendment is hampering rather than helping our defense effort. We must take all possible steps to facilitate the prompt and efficient staffing of the defense agencies and cut down on the number of employees in the nondefense agencies.

I believe my bill will accomplish the desirable objective of the Whitten amendment, yet provide protection to the employee so that transfers from nondefense to defense agencies will be facilitated, not hampered.

In my judgment, the whole problem of personnel during a period of defense mobilization should be thoroughly studied and appropriate legislation introduced. My bill will accomplish one of the desirable ends, but it is my hope that when this bill is referred to the Post Office and Civil Service Committee they will take up the broad problem as well. I understand that the chairman of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Mr. JOHNSTON, has indicated that his committee will make such a study. I want to congratulate Senator JOHNSTON for making this move, which indicates his acute awareness of our personnel needs.

AMENDMENT OF RULE RELATING TO CLOTURE

Mr. IVES (for himself and Mr. LODGE) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 52), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That the second paragraph of subsection 2 of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate (relating to cloture) is amended by striking out "by two-thirds of the Senators duly chosen and sworn" and inserting in lieu thereof "by the vote of a majority of the authorized membership of the Senate."

ALASKA STATEHOOD—AMENDMENT

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 50) to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union, which was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred, as indicated:

H. R. 1. An act to authorize the payment by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs of a gratuitous indemnity to survivors of members of the Armed Forces who die in active service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1724. An act to provide for the renegotiation of contracts, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution amending section 5012 of the Internal Revenue Code; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 1726. An act to provide for the organization of the Air Force and the Department of the Air Force, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

COMMISSION ON INTERNAL SECURITY AND INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS—STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a press release from the White House and the Executive order establishing the President's Commission on Internal Security and Individual Rights.

The President is to be congratulated upon the selection of Admiral Chester W. Nimitz as Chairman of this new Commission. I am sure he will function in his usual excellent manner.

There being no objection, the release and order were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, JANUARY 23, 1951

I have today established a Commission on Internal Security and Individual Rights. The Commission will be composed of nine members. Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz will serve as Chairman.

The Commission will consider in all its aspects the question of how this Nation can best deal with the problem of protecting its internal security and at the same time maintaining the freedoms of its citizens. It will consider the harm that comes from the wrong kind of action as well as the good that comes from the right kind of action.

The Commission will make a thorough examination of the laws, practices, and procedures concerning the protection of our Nation against treason, espionage, sabotage, and other subversive activities, and of the operation of and any need for changes in such laws, practices, and procedures. The Commission will also consider the methods used by public or private groups for the purpose of protecting us against such activities. It will consider these matters from the standpoint of protecting both the internal security of our country and the rights of individuals, and will seek the wisest balance that can be struck between security and freedom. The Commission will report its conclusions and recommendations for legislative, administrative, or other action it deems appropriate.

I consider the task of this Commission to be of extraordinary importance. The world is in the midst of a struggle between freedom and tyranny. The United States is one of the leaders of the free world—not just because we are powerful in material things, but because we have preserved and expanded the freedom of our people. We have built our society in the faith and in the practice of freedom—freedom of worship, freedom of speech, freedom of association and political belief.

We in this country have always been ready to protect our freedom—to protect it against external or internal enemies and to protect it against unwarranted restrictions by Government. From time to time in our history we have faced the need to protect our freedom from these different kinds of encroachment. Each of these occasions has presented our Nation with new and often conflicting considerations. To reconcile these considerations, and to find the proper national policy is always difficult, and is especially so at times like the present, when our freedom is severely threatened abroad and at home.

Today we are particularly concerned by the threat to our Government and our national life arising from the activities of the forces of Communist imperialism. In addition to the vigorous action we are taking abroad to meet this threat, we must be sure that our laws and procedures at home are adequate to protect our system of government against unconstitutional attacks and to preserve our national security against treason, espionage, sabotage, and other subversive acts designed to weaken or overthrow our Government. At the same time, we are concerned lest the measures taken to protect us from these dangers infringe the liberties guaranteed by our Constitution and stifle the atmosphere of freedom in which we have so long expressed our thoughts and carried on our daily affairs.

These are problems of momentous importance for our country and its future, and for the future of our leadership in the world. They should be approached in a serious and fair-minded way by all our citizens. We must not let our differences about how to solve these problems degenerate into partisan controversies. We must continue to protect our security within the framework of our historic liberties, without thought of partisan advantage or political gain.

To keep these great problems from falling into the arena of partisanship, I am appointing this Commission of distinguished citizens on a nonpartisan basis. I believe the people of this country will receive from them an authoritative judgment on these problems, based on the facts and formulated in the national interest, with no question of political advantage.

The Commission will undoubtedly wish to focus its primary attention on Federal laws and procedures. But I do not believe the Commission should limit itself to reviewing Government actions. Instead, I hope it will consider afresh, in all its present-day ramifications, the recurrent question of how a free people protect their society from subversive attack without at the same time destroying their own liberties.

This question is, of course, far broader than the activities of the Federal Government. It concerns State and local governments as well, private groups of all kinds, and citizens in their daily work and in their homes. I hope that the report of this Commission will provide guidelines of sufficiently wide application to be helpful in protecting both internal security and individual rights in every part of our national life.

The field of study for this Commission is very complex and far reaching. Much study will be necessary before a report can be drafted. I am giving instructions that the Commission shall have complete freedom to conduct its study as it sees fit. I am asking the Commission to make such interim reports as it may deem desirable, and I hope the Commission will find it possible to complete its work in a year.

One of the important matters for the Commission to consider is the operation of the Government employee loyalty and security programs. I wish to make it clear, however, that this Commission is not being established as an appeals tribunal for individual cases. The Commission will be expected to report on the effectiveness and fairness of the Government's loyalty and security programs. In doing this, the Commision may wish to inspect individual case files—and it will be authorized to do so to whatever extent it may determine to be necessary.

In connection with loyalty and security procedures, and also in considering the operation of such statutes as the Internal Security Act of 1950, the Commission will necessarily be reviewing information of very high security classifications. I am directing the Commission therefore, to take appropriate measures to safeguard the security of any classified or confidential information it may wish to examine.

I intend to do everything I can to enable this Commission to make a thorough and careful study.

We, in the United States have a special responsibility for leadership in these critical times, when free men the world over are strongly resisting the challenge of the Communist drive for world domination. We must guard our freedom well—guard it from armed assault, guard it from subversive infiltration, guard it from internal suppression and the deadly imposition of conformity. For the kind of freedom we have enjoyed in this country has been the shining goal for millions in other lands—and the results of freedom in this country have been the shattering reply to the false claims of Communist imperialism.

If we are to continue growing in strength here at home—if we are to continue leading the world toward peace with freedom and justice—we must both protect the security of our Nation and safeguard the freedom of our people.

I know the Commission on Internal Security and Individual Rights will undertake its work in full recognition of the immense importance and world-wide significance of its task.

EXECUTIVE ORDER ESTABLISHING THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON INTERNAL SECURITY AND INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS

By virtue of the authority vested in me as President of the United States, it is ordered as follows:

1. There is hereby established in the Executive Office of the President a commission to be known as the President's Commission on Internal Security and Individual Rights, which shall be composed of a Chairman, a Vice Chairman, and seven other members, all of whom shall be designated by the President.

2. (a) The Commission shall make a thorough study of the problem of providing for the internal security of the United States and at the same time protecting the rights and freedoms of individuals. The Commission shall consider how this problem should be met by Government action and by private action. Among other things, the Commission shall examine the laws, practices, and procedures concerning protection against treason, sabotage, espionage, and other matters affecting the internal security of the Nation; and the Commission shall consider the operation of and any need for changes in such laws, practices, and procedures. The subjects considered by the Commission shall include the Government employee loyalty program and the Government employee security program. The Commission shall also consider the need for protecting individuals from unwarranted attacks and from unwarranted infringement of their rights and liberties in the name of security.

(b) The Commission shall make a report to the President of its findings and conclusions (to be preceded by such interim reports as it may find desirable), and shall make such recommendations for legislative, administrative, or other action as it deems appropriate.

3. In carrying out its functions under this order, the Commission shall prescribe its own rules of procedure. The Commission may hold such public hearings and hear such witnesses as it may determine, and it may, in connection with matters relating to Federal employees, examine any and all records and files relating to individual cases in possession of any executive department or agency. All executive departments and agencies of the Federal Government are authorized and directed to cooperate with the Commission in its work and to furnish the Commission such information and assistance, not inconsistent with law, as it may require in the performance of its functions. The Commission shall take appropriate measures to protect the security or confidential character of any security-classified information or information of a confidential nature submitted to it or examined by it.

4. The expenditures of the Commission shall be paid out of an allotment made by the President from the appropriation "Executive Office of the President—Emergencies (National Defense)". Such payments shall be made without regard to the provisions of (a) section 3681 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (31 U. S. C. 672), (b) section 9 of the act of March 4, 1909, 35 Stat. 1027 (31 U. S. C. 673), and (c) such other laws as the President may hereafter specify.

5. Thirty days after the presentation of its final report to the President, the Commission shall cease to exist unless the President shall otherwise direct.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS WEEKS—PROCLAMATION BY GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of a proclamation by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, designating the weeks of January 15–31 as Infantile Paralysis Weeks in New York State, as part of the Nation-wide March of Dimes drive to raise funds for the continuance of the battle against this dread disease.

There being no objection, the proclamation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROCLAMATION

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany.

The most dreaded of diseases are those which attack their victims without warning and without apparent cause. Such an affliction is poliomyelitis, which comes, as it were, like a thief in the night to attack those who are apparently full of health and vigor. The fear of this disease lurks in every American home. The worst of it is that most of its victims are young boys and girls. During the last 3 years it has laid low more than 100,000 people in our country. During the year 1950 alone more than 4,200 residents of New York were polio patients.

In coping with the local and national case load the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis has exhausted its funds available for the care of patients. This indispensable institution is now trying to replenish its treasury through the 1951 March of Dimes, in order that its great work may continue. Despite the gravity of the world situation we cannot neglect the health and welfare of our boys and girls.

Now, therefore, I, Thomas E. Dewey, Governor of the State of New York, do hereby proclaim the weeks of January 15–31 as Infantile Paralysis Weeks in New York State, and I urge the people of the State to recognize the gravity of this cause and cooperate to the limit of their ability.

Given under my hand and the privy seal of the State at the capitol in the city of Albany this 11th day of January in the year of our Lord 1951.

THOMAS E. DEWEY.

By the Governor:

JAMES C. HAGERTY,
Secretary to the Governor.

EGG PRICES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to read a brief letter which I hold in my hand:

BUTTE, N. DAK., January 3, 1951.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER.

DEAR SIR: About 2 or 3 weeks ago my wife took a case of eggs—that is 12 dozen—at 40 cents per dozen and she got $4.80.

Yesterday we took another 12 dozen of eggs, and we got $3.12—it is only 26 cents a dozen. What is going on now? Whatever we buy in the store it is a terrible price for anything we buy. I feed oats to my chickens, and they eat 10 bushels of oats, and the price of oats is 75 cents per bushel. Is there anything that you can do about that?

Your friend,

PAUL NOVAK.

Mr. President, that letter bears out what I said on Monday about the price of eggs: That it is ridiculous to have the farmers receive 21 or 22 cents a dozen for eggs, whereas the consumer is obliged to pay anywhere from 70 cents to $1 for a dozen.

I may say that I sent a copy of Mr. Novak's letter to Mr. Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture, on the 9th day of January. However, up to the present time I have not received a reply.

SPEECH BY GEN. CHARLES DE GAULLE ON THE PRESENT INTERNATIONAL CRISIS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there has come to my attention a speech on the present international crisis, recently delivered by Gen. Charles de Gaulle, at Nimes, France. I regard General de Gaulle as one of the great figures of contemporary history. Whatever may be said of General de Gaulle, no one has ever doubted his courage and flaming patriotism. I do not agree with every line of his speech, but in its entirety it reflects a refreshing and inspiring will to resist communism.

General de Gaulle is a political figure today, but he is also a realist. This is demonstrated by his insistence that Germany be permitted to rearm and that Spain be brought into any plan for the defense of Western Europe. He also insists very vigorously that all the Atlantic Pact Nations, including his own beloved France, make a much greater contribution to the cause of resistence to Communist aggression than is contemplated under present plans.

I believe that his address is a notable contribution to the cause of human freedom, and casts a great deal of light upon the issues which are pending in the Senate at the present time. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed at this point in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH DELIVERED BY GEN. CHARLES DE GAULLE AT NIMES, JANUARY 7, 1951

The battle raging in Korea and Tonkin has finally awakened the world. Rubbing their eyes, the free peoples perceive that the curtain has risen on the harsh light of danger.

Everywhere, in Washington and in Paris, in Rome and in London, in Bonn and in Madrid, the people are forced to give up this sleep on the edge of the abyss, this deliberate illusion, this artificial indifference in which they have been plunged for so long because they were afraid to look the facts in the face.

In the full light of events the joyless games of political partisans seem lugubrious and ridiculous. The concessions made to those whose threats were feared, in the hope of appeasing them by granting them favors—these concessions, too, can be clearly seen for what they are, that is, absurd and ruinous. It is now clear that our only hope lies in strength and firmness.

We in France are also emerging from our torpor. We are beginning to move, despite the pressures to which we have been subjected, despite the drugs with which the present political regime has wished to put us to sleep. The instinct of life, the desire to act which have been stirring in the depths of the nation, are coming to the surface, as unmistakable signs show. Here is one such sign. Look around you today. Look at this immense gathering of French people here at Nimes.

In truth, it is high time that on this side of the Atlantic, as on the other, we cease to dance a hesitation waltz. After so many councils, conferences, committees, plans, studies, and communiqués, it is high time that common action, without which everything might collapse, should really be prepared and organized. But within the whole everyone has his own special duty to perform.

Within the camp of freedom, there are different responsibilities on which the whole future depends and which the nation and the world must clearly understand. At this grave hour, surrounded by this anxious mass of Frenchmen called together at the appeal of the war veterans, I intend to say what these responsibilities are and how they are divided between the United States of America, Europe, and France.

As for our various responsibilities, it is on your shoulders, Americans, that the chief responsibilities rest. As a nation you are intact. As a power, no other possesses the means you possess. As a state, you stand upright, because up till now the circumstances have sheltered you from those misfortunes which destroy institutions.

On the great tablets of history on which the merits and mistakes of the nations are inscribed your name is now inscribed in first place. This is a privilege heavy to bear. We Frenchmen know this, for France was for a long time the chief champion of human freedom. Due to her trials, she can no longer suffice for this task. It is your turn. On the attitude you are now going to take in the drama in which we are all engaged will depend your fate—and to a large extent the fate of the rest of the world.

I appeal to you Americans to defend Europe. Europe needs you. You need Europe.

You no doubt say that Europe is troubled, bitter, divided. That is so. You no doubt say that none of the free nations of the old Continent have yet recovered their equilibrium. I agree. You no doubt say that despite the threat menacing all the European nations, one has to move mountains in order to get them to unite. That is true.

And yet, in spite of what you find uncertain and disconcerting in the old Continent, Europe is there; she exists, full of men and means, linked to your America by a thousand vital links, profoundly involved with Asia and Africa, conscious of her value to the point that today, in the midst of her anguish, she is sure that, in the ultimate outcome, the road the world will follow will be the road that she will have taken. Believe me, Europe being what she is, her salvation is the condition of your own salvation.

For despite its ruins, the old Continent contains immense resources.

In that part of Europe which remains free there are more men, women, and children, more iron, coal, copper, aluminum, wheat, meat, and sugar than in Soviet Russia or in the United States of America. The capacities for work, for production, and for invention of our peoples have been absorbed in the work of reconstruction, but they do not remain any the less enormous for that.

Although their material losses, their moral depression, and their political confusion have so far prevented the rebirth of their armies, they possess a very vast war potential.

Let all that be used and the west will dictate the peace.

To allow the Soviet system to swamp the French, Germanic, Latin, and Scandinavian territories, even after having scorched them, would be to hand over to the Soviet system an incalculable additional source of strength.

And what a jumping-off ground it would be for the Soviet system for more distant conquests. I know full well that some who live on the periphery of the Western World apply the scale of the past to anticipations of the future, and reassure themselves by measuring the width of the Channel, the height of the Pyrenees, the distance to Morocco, and the width of the Atlantic Ocean. But if death and destruction cannot cross these geographical obstacles on foot, in automobiles, or in ships, they can cross them with flying missiles and on wings.

Above all, who can measure the shattering effect on the whole world which would result from the totalitarians becoming masters of Paris, Rome, Vienna, Berlin, and Istanbul? After this forward leap of the conquerors, what currents would carry away the masses in Asia? How, in their resulting confusion, would the Africans react?

In such an eventuality, the men and women of the New World would see the lights going out one after the other in all the windows of the earth while, among general maledictions, the Parthenon, the Coliseum, Notre Dame de Paris would crumble with the rest under their own bombs. Who knows whether in its isolation the New World would not itself be crushed by the terrible burden of war.

No. The camp of freedom must in no event and at no price lose what it still has of Europe. The priority is over here. This implies, evidently, that the Armed Forces of America must be built up with a view to flowing massively and without delay, if the need arises, to this side of the seas. It means that the eventual battle must be prepared on the most forward possible line and that powerful units must be put in place there right away.

What the masters of the Kremlin want to achieve by fixing the largest possible western forces in Asia and by demanding with loud shouts what they call the demilitarization of Germany, is to get America to leave our Continent. If their plan succeeded we should see their policy playing alternatively on the illusions and the fears of the European states abandoned to their fate. We should see them maneuvering from within these states and using the activities and the votes of the Separatists (Communists), the camouflage of the fellow travelers, the opportunism of the politicians, so that they would perhaps conquer the peoples of Europe through the disintegration of their political regimes. The first signs of this attempt are already visible in Paris.

But, on the other hand, what an electrifying effect rapid and powerful aid from across the Atlantic would have on the old Continent. For the whole world knows the courage of your American soldiers and the value of your American chiefs and you are proving it every day.

Then you would see the old values, which, armed with weapons, give nations good armies, flourish again on the ancient territory. Then you would see that sacred solidarity establish itself among the peoples of the Continent which is today being suffocated by doubt.

But if American support must come to the aid of the Europeans, this aid does not have the function of relieving the Europeans of their own responsibilities, any more than it would be intended to infringe on their independence. It is above all up to the Europeans themselves to defend their Continent and one day to make the whole of it free again.

There is a great deal of talk of common defense, but nothing is being done, finally, to assure it. If common defense is to be anything more than an alibi for cabinet ministers, a puzzle for experts, a poster for the Council of Strasbourg, numerous grievances and mental reservations must be forgotten. To make common defense effective all the nations must participate in the effort, whatever the condition in which they find themselves and the internal conflicts which divide them.

At the stage we have reached any excommunications are ridiculous. Today free Europe risks being submerged from one day to the next, and this is really not the moment to prevent it from rallying all its forces. Whatever may be a man's opinions, for example, on the regime governing Spain, this proud and valiant people, whose territory is one of the essential dykes of the west, must be incorporated without delay in the western entity.

Whatever may have been from century to century on both sides of the Rhine the pain and the anger, it is a fact that Germany lies at the heart of Europe and that military cover on the Elbe demands the collaboration of the Germans. As for the Germans themselves, let them take their place without insisting too much on their alarms or their demands. Let them seize the opportunity which history has suddenly offered them. Let them restore to the old occident the chance the Emperor Charlemagne carried to the tomb with him.

To organize Europe we must take Europe as it is, that is to say, as a collection of peoples very distinct from each other, each having its own body, soul, and genius. Each must therefore have its own armed forces. Let us leave to the geometricians the strange plans which claim to mix contingents from different countries in the same military units in order to fabricate a nonnational army. From where would the soldiers of this military Babel draw their virtues? A coalition must of course have a single system on the higher levels of command, but the principle dominating everything is that an army fights for its country under the authority of its government and under the orders of its own chiefs. None of the armies, and I repeat none, which Europe must supply could possibly be created or used on any other terms.

As soon as a solid and resolute system is born on the Continent, the tendency toward insularity, which is sometimes imputed to Great Britain, can and should disappear. Thus it was, for the glory of Britain, when from 1914 to 1919, her armies fought without reserve and to the full alongside our own, or when in the recent war, they participated on a large scale in the Allied enterprise.

On the other hand, Dunkerque was the bitter fruit of a badly coordinated and last-minute strategy. Tomorrow, neither the safety offered by the English Channel nor any illusory African profits to be reaped in the catastrophe would prevent the British Isles from being involved in the disaster of our own collapse. As much as ever, Europe counts firmly on England.

But it is our own Nation which above all must give the example in order to bring about the revival of the Old Continent. There lies the responsibility of France. I know that too many people among us compare our relative former power with that which the vicissitudes of history have left us, and take refuge in passivity and in saying "What is the good?" Those who do and say that understand nothing of their own country nor of the period in which we live. Worse still, they make worse the position which appalls and desolates them by preventing France from playing her role and by delivering her to the influence of others.

Once before we have witnessed a similar state of mind and we have measured its cost to us. At that time the regime had not just been built following a terrible disaster. Today the demons of abandonment are at work at a time when our Nation is being offered the opportunity to influence the course of events decisively.

Surely we can stand up. We can create an army able to strike effectively which would be the essential part of the continental forces, with its 20 permanent divisions, plus 20 reserve divisions, its 5,000 planes, its 350,000 tons of modern warships, its young men of quality, its ardent and able chiefs. We can reestablish national unity by carrying out, through association of labor and capital, the great social and economic reform of the century. We can go ahead toward a direct understanding between the French and the Germans, from which will emerge the unity of Europe. We can make the part which belongs to us a matter of life and death. In our country, which works, produces and trades widely and which is not deprived of outside aid if it justifies it, we can solve without too many shocks the problems of the division of costs, credit, labor power, raw material, and food supplies, which our rearmament will constantly make heavier.

We can reestablish the credit of the state, this essential and traditional source for financing the cost of national defense, once it is established that an extraordinary and temporary effort is needed. Above all, we can regain our soul, that is to say, our faith and our hope.

Yes, we can do that. But on condition that a regenerated government at last leads the nation. The regime, constructed 4 years ago amid boundless confusion by the political parties working for themselves, is condemned by events. As events get worse, the confusion and the impotence of the system gets worse too. Its principle is to form the government by the juxtaposition of political cliques and rivalries. Its type of action is to oppose groups of electors to each other, and that very fact prevents it from ever identifying itself with the French community. All this, and the fact that the regime feels it has been disavowed by the nation renders it incapable of facing the terrible problems which press on us from all sides.

In all fields, the regime drags itself from one compromise to another, offering its weakness to the temptation of the totalitarians, puzzling its allies with its enigmas, and alarming the country, which is less worried about being in danger than about being leaderless.

What a pity it is, in these times, to see many a man of value getting engulfed in these quicksands. If, even within this regime, their conscience and their reason succeeded in overcoming the sectarianism of the cliques, the republic would quickly be restored to its real function which is to be the state for the sole benefit of the nation, and to its proper purpose which is that of the public welfare. A government based on the unity of the French people, above parties, which would call on the people to rally around France and would obtain by democratic elections the ardent approval of the country, would be able to carry out the needed reforms of our existing institutions, to put the country on its feet and lead it towards its destiny.

I have already said this is the north, and I repeat it here in the south. For my part, I am ready, fully ready. Failing this, the consultation of the nation, which must take place this year, unless there is an act of usurpation, will decide the question, despite all trickery, by calling to account those who hang on to this system of sterility and who have thrown away for nothing some of the nation's trump cards.

The hour of responsibility has struck. In the battle now engaged between light and darkness, and which can bring war and catastrophe to the weak or assure life and peace to the strong, may America, may Europe, may France, together do their duty. Long live France.

THE FEDERAL OLEOMARGARINE LAW—REPORT OF SURVEY BY DAIRY ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a release which I have prepared giving my views on the subject of America's dairy industry in relation to the oleomargarine threat. I ask unanimous consent that the text of my release be printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point, to be followed thereafter by the text of a special report of a survey by three great dairy organizations, pointing out violations under the new oleo law.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I have before me a copy of the survey referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin, made on behalf of the American Butter Institute, the National Creameries Association, and the National Milk Producers Federation. It had been my purpose to ask that it be printed in the RECORD, but since the Senator from Wisconsin has made such a request I do not, of course, desire to have a duplication in the RECORD.

I may say, however, that the survey made on behalf of the three leading butter and dairy institutes of America in relation to prevalent restaurant practices in the sale of spreads for bread discloses the startling circumstance that the overwhelming majority of the restaurants visited by the investigators served oleomargarine in violation of the law without notice or advice to the purchasing public.

The survey also discloses, I am proud to say, that there were no violations observed in the State of New York, where production of oleomargarine in imitation of butter is prohibited.

Of course, I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

There being no objection, the release by Mr. WILEY and the report of the survey were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILEY URGES THREE ACTIONS TO PROTECT UNITED STATES DAIRYING—SAYS PREDICTIONS OF HARM TO BUTTER INDUSTRY FROM NEW OLEO LAW ARE STARTING TO BE BORNE OUT

"American dairying must be aided by three specific Federal and State actions," Senator ALEXANDER WILEY, Republican, of Wisconsin, stated today, "if the Oleo Trust is to be prevented from causing lasting damage."

The Wisconsin legislator contended that "the artificial supply and demand for food products during the present defense effort may have blinded some folks to the real facts. Thus, the new oleo law has already severely harmed dairying although that fact is not generally understood. Just look at farm papers and see the auction sales being conducted on dairy farms."

The Wisconsin legislator had led the fight for the butter amendment to the oleo bill—a battle which ended in January 1950 with the temporary defeat of the dairy forces.

SENATE SHOULD STUDY OLEO MONOPOLY

WILEY accordingly urged new action which he reported could "only partly help the present situation," as follows:

1. He recommended that the Senate take action on a bill which will shortly be reintroduced by Senator LEHMAN, Democrat, of New York, with cosponsorship by Senators from Wisconsin and other dairy States. Purpose of the resolution is to secure an investigation by the Senate and the Federal Trade Commission of the monopolistic character of the oleomargarine industry. "The FTC," said WILEY, "should also investigate unfair trade practices by that industry.

"In addition, it should review the loopholes in the oleo law which Congress passed last year. Under that law, oleo manufacturers were supposed to have been prevented from giving readers of newspaper ads or leaflets the impression that they were selling a natural dairy-type product when actually an artificial product was being sold. That restriction against such improper advertising has, however, been shown to be shot through with wide loopholes."

WILEY URGES STATES TO PROTECT BUTTER

2. Senator WILEY also issued an appeal to 14 State legislatures "to beat down the oleo trust's latest legislative efforts, to destroy butter." "These are the last 14 commonwealths which prohibit the sale of yellow-colored oleo. A determined effort is being made this year to repeal these 14 State statutes. If oleo is allowed to masquerade as butter in those States, then the dairy industry will have been that much further severely harmed.

"Some pro-oleo bills that are being or have been introduced would authorize so-called identification of oleo in restaurants as well as authorizing other half-baked, impractical measures. Yet, we have seen that these so-called restaurant safeguards against false identification are a farce."

PRO-OLEO FEDERAL LAW SHOULD NOT BE USED AS MODEL

"In many State legislatures the cry for repeal of the present butter statute is being made on this basis: 'Let us pattern a new State statute along the lines of the new Federal pro-oleo law.' I trust, however, that the State legislatures will not listen to that dangerous appeal. Why? Because the Federal law instead of being something that should serve as a model, is actually unfair, impractical and practically unenforceable. The oleo lobby even succeeded in knocking out the few minimum safeguards which we had proposed in it such as triangular identification of all retail oleo."

ENFORCEMENT FUNDS NECESSARY

3. WILEY stated that he will insist that Congress increase appropriations to the Pure Food and Drug Administration to try to tighten enforcement of the mislabeling law. He pointed out that some $6,000,000 was originally requested for enforcement of the law, only $200,000 of which was actually ultimately granted by the Congress. "Such a pitiful sum," he said, "constitutes no enforcement whatsoever. It is ridiculous to place a law on the statute books and to fail to provide appropriations necessary to enforce it."

DAIRY PREDICTIONS HAVE BEEN BORNE OUT

WILEY stated that experience under the oleomargarine law confirmed predictions which he and other dairy spokesmen had made during the battle on the floor of the Senate.

"1. As predicted, the sale of white oleomargarine has practically disappeared. Thus, in 1948, only 10 percent of the oleo which was sold was yellow. In 1949, that percentage had increased to 30 percent, and last year the percentage increased to around 70 percent. We all know that the oleo industry shed crocodile tears in its alleged love of folks in the low-income brackets. Now, however, do we find that the oleo industry is concentrating on the sale of the inexpensive white product? On the contrary, it is concentrating on selling the yellow product which sells for more and gives it more profit. This proves the falsity of the oleo industry's claims.

"2. As predicted, the price of oleo has tremendously increased. It is a fact, of course, that there has been a general price rise throughout our entire economy and that the prices of the component oils in oleo have also increased. Nevertheless, the monopolistic character of the oleo industry makes its product particularly susceptible to price manipulation by the few manufacturers who control it.

"DAIRYMEN ARE SWITCHING TO OTHER FARMING

"3. As predicted, there is more and more of a tendency for dairy farmers to sell their herds in order to turn to more types of farming with greater financial appeal. While income to dairymen has increased, it has not increased as fast as have the costs of farm machinery, farm labor, etc. Moreover, if the dairyman's income does not increase as fast or faster than income received by other segments of American agriculture, there will be a greatly speeded tendency to turn from dairying to other types of farming. It must never be forgotten that there is no single type of farming which is more beneficial to the health of the Nation's population and the health of the Nation's soil than is dairying."

In making these comments, Senator WILEY emphasized, "I am not speaking merely as the senior Senator from America's Dairyland, Wisconsin, but rather I am speaking for the welfare of the present and future generations of Americans whose health depends upon a healthy dairy industry."

SURVEY BY DAIRY ORGANIZATIONS UNCOVERS FLAGRANT VIOLATION OF NEW FEDERAL OLEO LAW

The new Federal oleomargarine law is being "flagrantly violated on a scale not equaled since the days of Federal prohibition of alcohol," three national dairy organizations charged here today.

Speaking for the three organizations, the American Butter Institute, National Creameries Association, and National Milk Producers Federation, Charles W. Holman, federation secretary, declared that:

"Patrons of public eating places who order and pay for bread and butter in three States where yellow oleomargarine is legal, checked by researchers of an independent survey agency, are being illegally and fraudulently served the cheaper substitute without the notice specifically required by the Federal statute. The investigators sampled eating places in Atlanta, Macon, Savannah, Augusta, and La Grange, Ga.; Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Stillwater, and Ponca City in Oklahoma; Wichita, Topeka, and Manhattan in Kansas. They reported that 69 out of 109 eating places in those cities were serving a substitute spread when patrons ordered butter. Only 3 of the 69 complied with the Federal law requiring notice when the substitute is served.

"The investigators also checked the service of 'buttered' toast, and encountered an even more outrageous degree of fraud and violation of the law. Thirty-one out of 37 samples of 'buttered' toast picked up for laboratory analysis were found to be spread with a substitute."

At the same time, the three organizations reported that spot checks in two States (New York and Illinois) where the sale of yellow oleomargarine is banned showed satisfactory compliance with the Federal law in such States.

Holman emphasized that dairy farmers were not critical of efforts of the Federal Food and Drug Administration to enforce "an impossible law." He recalled that the Food and Drug Administration estimated at least $6,000,000 should be provided by Congress to enforce the statute, but that actually only $200,000 has been made available to the Federal agency.

Commenting on the findings, Holman said, "the contrasting results of the surveys in the two groups of States prove beyond doubt the wisdom of retaining statutory prohibition of the sale and serving of colored oleomargarine now in force in 14 States. Such State laws should be backed by a ban on the shipment of yellow oleomargarine in interstate commerce to simplify the task of the Food and Drug Administration.

"In Albany and New York City, N. Y., and in Chicago and Springfield, Ill., States which prohibit yellow oleomargarine, our investigators collected 40 samples of bread and butter and discovered no violations of the Federal law. On the other hand, in the three States which have lifted the bars on yellow oleomargarine, the public is being gypped on a wholesale basis as is indicated by the finding that 66 of 109 eating places sampled were violating the Federal law.

"The findings justify the contention that dairy farmers have been advancing to Congress and the State legislatures. Farmers have never objected to the sale of a product which is sold on its own merits. They rightfully can protest allowing a product to steal the table spread market by deception, fraud, and through open violation of the Federal law."

(There follows a summary of the methods and findings of the surveys:)

BACKGROUND OF THE SURVEYS

The three organizations authorized the surveys to ascertain whether the Federal law, which went into effect July 1, 1950, repealing the 10-cent tax on yellow oleomargarine, was actually being observed throughout the country. The investigator's method of procedure was to enter a restaurant that had no sign or notice concerning the service of oleomargarine and order bread and butter. The spread served was then placed into a refrigerated container and subsequently mailed to the laboratory for analysis. In approximately one-half of the cities, investigators ordered buttered toast and submitted the buttered toast samples for analysis. Affidavits testifying to their findings and reports of the laboratory tests are filed by the agency (Fact Finders Associates, Inc.).

The Federal law requires two types of identification or notice to consumers if an eating place served oleomargarine instead of butter. The eating place must either post a sign or notice on its walls or counters or publish this information on their menus. In addition, the eating places are required to serve the oleomargarine in a triangular pat or place a notice on the plate or tray from which the consumer is served the spread.

In the case of the 69 eating places serving oleomargarine without publishing a wall or counter notice, three did state on their menus that oleomargarine was used. Thus, 66 out of the 109 eating places flagrantly violated the Federal statute. With regard to the requirements for notice with individual servings, the investigators reported a somewhat better degree of compliance. Thirty-two of the 69 eating places serving oleomargarine in place of butter furnished the spread in triangular pats.

FINDINGS IN THE CITIES

The following were the results city by city:

	Number of places sampled	Violations of Federal law
Kansas:
Wichita	5	2
Topeka	17	5
Manhattan	7	4
Oklahoma:
Oklahoma City	9	1[1]
Tulsa	10	5
Stillwater	8	1[1]
Ponca City	8	7
Georgia:
Atlanta	10	4
Savannah	10	5
La Grange	8	6
Augusta	11	8
Macon	6	4
New York:
New York City [2]	15	0
Albany	5	0
Illinois:
Chicago [2]	15	0
Springfield	5	0

[1] 100 percent violation.
[2] 2 restaurants in New York City and 2 in Chicago were found to be serving a substitute spread on "buttered toast."

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] I report from the Senate Committee on Armed Services numerous routine nominations and promotions. It would eliminate a considerable printing bill if the Senate could now, as in executive session, confirm the appointments, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I did not quite catch the Senator's statement regarding the nominations.

Mr. RUSSELL. They are various routine nominations and promotions in the regular military establishment. The purpose of asking that they be considered now, without going to the Executive Calendar, is that we may save a printing bill of approximately $200. I can assure the Senator from North Dakota that this is in accordance with the custom which has been followed lately. The list does not show the home States from which the nominees come, but they are all nominations in the armed services, and, being familiar with the contribution of North Dakota to the defense of the country, I doubt not that some of the higher promotions affect citizens of North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. May I inquire whether the vote of the committee was unanimous?

Mr. RUSSELL. The nominations were ordered reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. LANGER. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations in the armed services are confirmed en bloc. Without objection, the President will be notified immediately.

ASSIGNMENT OF GROUND TROOPS FOR SERVICE IN EUROPE

I. SENATE RESOLUTION 8

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the provisions of Senate Resolution 8, which has been referred to the Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Relations, have been clarified to a great extent by the press and by certain periodicals throughout the country. The over-all issue which is to be determined by the Congress is this: That no ground forces of the United States should be assigned to duty in the European area until such a policy is approved by the Congress. Shall the President make commitments to send our American boys to become a part of an integrated international army, without the approval of Congress?

Members of the Senate, that issue will be determined upon the floor of the Senate when the Joint Committees of the Armed Services and Foreign Relations report back for consideration their recommendations on the subject matter of Senate Resolution 8.

II. THE RESOLUTION MAY BE AMENDED

While it is true that the joint committee may report Senate Resolution 8 favorably, or unfavorably, or with amendments, or may report a resolution of their own, the subject matter of the provisions of Senate Resolution 8 will, in the final analysis, be determined by the Members of the Senate. It is my position that the subject matter cannot be avoided.

As I said on Tuesday, January 16, when I presented the resolution and explained it, I had no pride of authorship. It was perfectly agreeable to me for anyone to amend the resolution insofar as the phraseology was concerned; but the subject matter, which involves the great overriding issue, as to whether the President can commit the Congress, and thereby, the United States, without congressional approval, must be included for a vote of the Senate.

While the resolution may be stripped of some of its words or of its sponsor's name, and regardless of whether a new resolution is brought to the Senate by the joint committee—and certainly it makes no difference how many more resolutions are submitted, or how many amendments are made—the issue here is embodied within the provisions of Senate Resolution 8. The issue is that Congress must make the determination whether Congress will permit the President to commit the people of the United States to an integrated army in Europe without the approval of Congress, and also that Congress should assert its right to put limitations on the sending of United States ground forces to the European area for the purposes of the North Atlantic Treaty.

The whole issue boils down to the question of whether the Congress shall be a full-fledged partner with the President in this new and very high policy, by officially considering his recommendations, whatever they may happen to be.

So, plainly, the resolution is just as much alive today as it was when it was offered, and as it will be when the subject matter of its provisions is debated and discussed on the floor of the Senate in the near future.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is reported to have said that the Wherry resolution was "ridiculous," that it would be consigned to the Foreign Relations Committee, and that it would be sidetracked.

He was further reported to have said that he would bring out an affirmative resolution from the committee, broadly declaring that the Senate favors sending ground forces to Europe for an international army, but not stating there must be no commitment of foot soldiers until the Congress declares a policy on the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not use that language. I did say that the committee would bring out a substitute; but so far as the word "sidetracked" is concerned, I made no such statement.

Mr. WHERRY. I am giving the report as it came over the radio, and I am sure that when we get the transcript it will be found that the Senator used those words. But I am glad to hear that he will not sidetrack the resolution. I think that shows fine statesmanship on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am sure the matter will be given every consideration.

The Senator from Texas was reported further to have said that he would bring out an affirmative resolution.

A story in the New York Times of Thursday, January 25, from a Times correspondent in Washington says:

> After a long meeting of the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, which forms the party's leadership, its chairman, Senator ERNEST W. MCFARLAND, of Arizona, announced that foreign policy has been discussed "in every aspect."
> He made it clear that the President's Senate supporters expected the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees, which will meet shortly to prepare a proposed Senate declaration on the troop issue, to bring out nothing but an affirmative statement in no way restricting the President.

That is the issue. Do we want to restrict the President, or do we not?

Yesterday, however, the distinguished majority leader made a statement after the Democratic policy meeting, which lasted for several hours, on the subject of foreign policy.

The United Press ticker in the Senate cloak room carried the following report of that meeting:

> Senate Democratic leaders discussed foreign policy issues today but agreed that congressional decision must await the forthcoming report of General Eisenhower. After a meeting of the Senate Democratic policy committee, Democratic Leader MCFARLAND told reporters that the group discussed foreign policy but reached no conclusion. He said, "General Eisenhower will address House and Senate Members February 1 and appear in a closed session before the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees that afternoon." MCFARLAND believes Eisenhower will appear before the corresponding House committees the next day.

"We are hopeful that the committees will bring in an affirmative resolution," MCFARLAND said.

Asked if he meant a resolution to approve the assignment of troops, he replied that he could not say what it should be.

No doubt the reason why the distinguished majority leader made the observation that he would have to wait and see, is because of the great issue involved.

I think the Senator made an intelligent statement. He, himself, of course, is, I think, taking the position that we must wait and see whether the President, without congressional approval can make a commitment and determine the policy; that we should wait and see if the Democratic conference wants to bring out a resolution that Congress must approve what the President recommends before any troop commitment is made. I want to compliment the Senator on his statement.

Is it enough to report a resolution simply saying the Senate favors sending ground forces to Europe?

The question is, Who is to decide the number and set the pattern? Is it to be the President or Congress, or both the President and Congress?

Shall the President make such commitments or shall the Congress of the United States determine that policy?

That is exactly what is embodied in Senate Resolution 8. It provides that no commitment of ground troops shall be made until the Congress adopts a policy respecting the matter. That requires the legislative process.

That is the issue before the country. So, whether or not the Wherry resolution, word by word, or phrase by phrase, comes back to the Senate, the underlying issue which inevitably must be determined is whether or not the President shall commit the Nation to such a course without the approval of the Congress, or whether the Congress shall insist that the Executive must submit for its approval commitments he intends to make, to provide an integrated international army in Western Europe.

As I understand, the Senator from Texas wants the Congress to permit the President alone to determine the policy of how many foot soldiers, their location, and everything that goes into this program, including barracks, transports, and servicing of the troops should be committed.

The Senator from Texas wants it all left to the determination of the President. In taking that position now he would scrap the procedures prescribed in the North Atlantic Treaty and the assurances given to the Senate when that treaty was ratified.

The senior Senator from Texas would let the President alone determine our whole national defense policy, since the whole policy revolves around the matter of sending ground troops to Western Europe.

However, there are other Senators who have expressed themselves that while they would agree to send a limited number of ground troops to Europe, they feel the Congress should determine the limitations, as provided in the so-called Wherry resolution. Many Senators have expressed that thought to me.

So, once again I want to suggest to the Members of the Senate that this subject matter is included in the provisions of Senate Resolution 8, which specifically provides that no commitments shall be made until the Congress determines the policy.

The junior Senator from Nebraska, as the author and sponsor of Senate Resolution 8, is moved to make these observations in the interest of clarifying further the issue as he sees it.

Undoubtedly the Committees on Foreign Relations and Armed Services, which are now jointly considering Senate Resolution 8, will look into all the ramifications of this great issue. The junior Senator from Nebraska has confidence in the wisdom of the members of the Foreign Relations and Armed Services committees. Twenty-six Senators will be called upon to hold hearings and to investigate the situation in reference to this basic issue.

In conclusion, I want to suggest that the question confronting the Senate is divided into two parts: First, it must be determined whether Congress is to have jurisdiction over the question of whether there shall be commitment of American boys to the peacetime international army in Western Europe; second, after it is decided that Congress does have the right to fix the policy, as contemplated in the North Atlantic Treaty, the merits of whether ground troops shall be sent then should be gone into exhaustively.

Obviously, all our debate on the subject will be pointless if the President alone is to do all the deciding, and the Congress becomes merely a rubber stamp to appropriate whatever sums of money he may deem to be necessary to finance the defense policy that he alone determines.

There should be thorough hearings, with all competent witnesses being called to testify. This is a tremendous question. It vitally affects every man, woman, and child in the land. Upon the determination of this issue rests our entire national defense efforts, taxes, controls, prices, and many other features.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. As I understand the Senator's speech, especially the last part of it, he states that there are two questions before the joint committee. The first question is whether or not article 3 of the North Atlantic Treaty shall be redefined to include troops, as well as equipment. At the present time, according to the testimony of Secretary of State Acheson, article 3 is confined to equipment. The issue which the Senator from Nebraska brings before us is whether or not, as a question of policy to be determined by Congress, article 3 shall be defined to include troops as well as equipment. If that question is answered in the negative by the joint committee, and the Senate supports the stand of the committee, article 3 would be left to mean equipment only. On the other hand, if the committee and the Senate should decide, as a matter of policy, that troops may be sent, as well as equipment, the subject will then have been decided as a matter of policy. That is the first question I am asking of the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to answer the first question. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, that that is the question which is involved. The question is, Are we to supply ground troops before an attack is made? That question comes under article 3. According to the report which was brought to the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Iowa asked the Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, the specific question as to what was meant by arms. He asked the Secretary of State whether it included manpower. I do not have the testimony before me, but, as I recall, the Secretary of State answered unequivocally that it did not mean manpower. All I am saying is that there are two steps. In other words, if such aid is to be given prior to an attack, and it includes ground forces, I think the Senate of the United States should be so advised and the Senate should make such a determination. The inclusion of ground forces would expand the provisions of article 3. Such an expanded program of aid would go beyond the provisions of article 3 of the North Atlantic Pact.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. As I understand, if it is determined to send troops, and article 3 is to be interpreted to include them, the determination should be made by the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Then the question is, How many men shall be sent?

Mr. WHERRY. That is the second question. I think that policy should be determined by Congress.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does the Senator mean Congress or the Senate?

Mr. WHERRY. Congress. I think the policy should be determined by Congress, because my feeling is that the question of limitation goes to the root of the subject, just as the question of sending any Armed Forces goes to the root of the subject. Whether or not we should send any men should be determined by Congress. If the number is to be limited, I think Congress should decide what the limitation should be. That question should not be left to the determination by the President of the United States. He can suggest the policy; can submit his proposals and recommendations; it is his function to do so; but after he has made his proposals and recommendations, it is the prerogative of Congress either to approve or disapprove any limitations which he may suggest.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If the first question is determined in the affirmative, namely, that troops should be sent, do I understand that the Senator believes it would be the function of the joint committee to determine the second question, even though it would involve extensive hearings by the committee?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. I am not telling the committee what to do.

I did not suggest such a thing. All I am saying is that two steps are involved. Of course, the committee will do as it chooses. I have absolute confidence in the committee. However, I would answer the question of the Senator in the affirmative.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In listening to the Senator's remarks, I wonder whether he would clarify one or two points for us. As I understand, the Senator is now speaking about the so-called peacetime forces which would be sent to Europe.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator raises no question, in the event of aggression by the Soviet Union against the North Atlantic Pact signatories, on the general theory that an attack upon one is an attack upon all?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In the event of aggression, the President, acting under the obligations of the North Atlantic Pact, could send troops?

Mr. WHERRY. I certainly feel that in such event the President should invoke the provisions of article 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty, which specifically sets forth his duties in such circumstances. Article 5 deals with an entirely different situation. The resolution does not go to article 5. In the event of an attack on any signatory to the pact we are committed to come to its aid.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think it is important to make that point clear, so that members of the North Atlantic Pact will not get the impression that there is any attempt on our part to renege on the provisions of the North Atlantic Treaty.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad the Senator from California has brought out that point. It is not the purpose of the Senator from Nebraska to suggest that we should welsh in any way on the policy of Congress. We ratified the treaty. Under the treaty, if a country is attacked we are absolutely obligated to come to its defense. Such procedure is provided under article 5. Article 3, on the other hand, speaks of the aid which is to be given prior to an attack. The whole question of aid is dealt with in article 9, which sets up an advisory board, consisting of the North Atlantic Pact countries, and under article 11 it is to be carried out in accordance with constitutional processes.

Senate Resolution 8 brings the whole subject matter under discussion. The issue is, Shall the President extend the provisions of article 3 by sending men? If he believes he has the right to do so, the next question is, How many men should be sent? My contention is that instead of letting the President determine the policy, and thus extending the provisions of article 3, he should submit his proposals to Congress through legislative committees. The Senate should then decide whether there is to be an extension of article 3. If men are to be sent, the next question is, What limitation shall be placed on the number of men to be sent?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In addition to our obligations under the North Atlantic Treaty, which was ratified by an overwhelming number of the members of this body, we also are in the position of an occupying power in Germany, the state of war not having been ended. Does the Senator from Nebraska agree that in carrying out our duties as an occupying power the President has the right to send troops to Germany, either to replace troops, or, in the event the security of the American forces is involved, to reenforce them to such an extent as military necessity may require?

Mr. WHERRY. I am in total agreement with the President as to his right and power in that respect. I think it is an entirely different subject. It is up to the President to decide whether more or fewer troops are required for that purpose.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator would agree, would he not, that unless there is some kind of wide flanking movement of Russian aggression in Europe, the only way the Russians could get to France, Belgium, or the Netherlands would be by going through the American occupying forces in Germany, and in such event we would be immediately precipitated into hostilities with the Soviet Union, even without the North Atlantic Pact?

Mr. WHERRY. There can be no doubt about that. It would be a matter of how to meet the invasion, or to protect our interests in Germany. We would be on an entirely different footing in such event than we are now faced with under the proposal to extend article 3. I thank the Senator from California for asking his questions. They are pertinent and will help to clarify the resolution.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to make one comment. I think the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, acting as chairman of the joint committee, was quite correct in feeling that action should not be taken on another resolution until General Eisenhower had an opportunity to report because what we need more than anything else at the present time are facts upon which to base sound judgments.

There is some difference of opinion, which has been raised, as to the constitutional power of the Executive to send troops in peacetime which are not intended for the specific purpose of protecting American lives, as has been done on numerous occasions in the past. There is some question as to the authority of the Commander in Chief to send a peacetime army whose operations might extend over a long period of years. Some think he has the power and some question whether he has such power. But does the Senator from Nebraska feel that, regardless of whether that power exists under the broad terms of the Constitution, with the difference of opinion in the country and in the Congress, the President would be well advised to consult with the Congress in the matter of the permanent establishment of an occupying force in Europe under the terms of the North Atlantic Pact?

Mr. WHERRY. I certainly would answer "yes" to that question. I feel that the same position should be taken here as was taken on the question of the submission of the implementation of the United Nations Charter relative to the forces to be furnished in the event a mandate were issued by the Security Council. The whole question was discussed as to whether the United Nations could use our forces without referring the matter back to the Congress to obtain its approval. I think the Senator remembers the debate. I am sure that the Senator will remember that in the course of the debate a message came from President Truman, who was then attending a conference at Potsdam, to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. The President stated in his message that it might be announced by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, in effect—I do not remember the exact words—that the President would seek the approval of Congress, regardless of his constitutional power. In the report of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, if I correctly recall, the statement was made by the distinguished chairman in the very last paragraph that, regarding the question of whether the President has the right or does not have the right, it should be settled once and for all that the proposed action will be submitted for the approval of Congress.

While the present situation is not exactly the same, yet so far as concerns the policy relating to the implementation of the North Atlantic Treaty under section 3, before an attack, whether the President of the United States has the authority or does not have the authority, for the good of the united foreign policy I believe it would be acceptable to the Congress if the President would submit his recommendations, whether or not he feels that he has certain constitutional authority, and have the Congress go along as a full-fledged partner.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thank the Senator. I felt that it was necessary to clarify the situation to some extent, because there has been great misunderstanding in some quarters in Europe, both among our friends and among potential aggressors. There has been the feeling that perhaps there was some major movement to renege on the provisions of the North Atlantic Charter.

Mr. WHERRY. No.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the Senator very ably brought out that that was not in his mind, and that we are prepared to assume our full obligations under the treaty. We have given our word.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think it is also important for potential aggressors to recognize the fact that, while in the Senate we may disagree from time to time, and we may disagree across the aisle, when, as my old New England grandmother used to say, our righteous indignation is aroused, the Congress of the United States can solidify very quickly, as can the American people. I think that was demonstrated in the vote of the Senate the other day, of 91 to 0, when we had finally been pushed to the point where the moral sensibilities of the American people were shocked by what had taken place. Without a dissenting vote, either Democratic or Republican, the United States Senate was a unit. I think if there is aggression in Europe, that same solidification, both in Congress and among the American people, will take place. I hope the Soviet Union recognizes that.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his observation.

ACCESS BY DREW PEARSON TO CERTAIN SECRET DOCUMENTS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina obtained the floor.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina be permitted to yield to me to read into the RECORD three letters, and that the Senator from South Carolina not lose the floor because of so yielding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCARTHY. I should like to read into the RECORD three letters which I think should be of considerable interest to the Senate and to the Department of Justice.

The first letter is dated January 13, 1951, and reads as follows:

JANUARY 13, 1951.

Senator JOSEPH R. McCARTHY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR McCARTHY: This letter is unofficial and confidential. I trust you will treat it as such. However, it contains information which I think should be fully explored.

I am an officer working in the intelligence section of the far eastern command. There has been forwarded to us copies of articles by Drew Pearson in which he quotes from secret documents prepared in this intelligence section. One of the documents which concerned us greatly was contained in Mr. Pearson's column of December 30 in which he quotes from, and identifies by date, document 3019, dated December 6, 1950. The quotes are accurate, and the date given by Mr. Pearson was accurate. It proves beyond a doubt that someone has been handing secert documents to Mr. Pearson. Whoever did this knew that he was violating our espionage laws because I have since checked and find that the document from which Mr. Pearson quoted, had stamped upon it in large red letters the warning that if made public, it would be of benefit to the enemy, and that transmitting or revealing this information to any unauthorized person would be a violation of the Espionage Act.

This article properly identified the Chinese Communists units which were arrayed against us. It is of course of tremendous value for the Communists to know just how much information we have about them. Such information is of great value to their counter-intelligence units. For example, if someone would publish for our benefit just exactly what Chinese intelligence knew about our units, it would save the lives of many of our men. Those of us like myself who have relatively safe jobs in intelligence work, as well as our people who are risking their lives daily behind the enemy lines, feel that Mr. Pearson and whoever stole these secrets for him are guilty of high treason.

We cannot understand the inactivity of the Congress, the Justice Department and the Army in not starting criminal action against this man. While we are concerned with the publication of this one document, we are a thousand times more concerned with the fact that this means that Mr. Pearson has unlimited access to military secrets. It means also that there is a spy handling our military secrets, secrets obtained at great hazard and in many cases the expenditure of lives.

Incidentally, we noted that while Mr. Pearson correctly quoted the dispatch listing the six Chinese armies, he then proceeded to do a job of addition and multiplication which should embarass a child in kindergarten. In order to make the Chinese Communists look braver and better fighters than our men, he stated that the six armies contained only 96,000 Communist soldiers.

I may say at that point that any private who has been in the Army 2 or 3 days, knows that one army contains more than 96,000 soldiers, let alone six armies.

Hope this information may be of some value to you.

Very sincerely.

In view of the fact that this intelligence officer had stated that this letter was confidential and could not be used, I wrote to him on January 16, 1951, as follows:

JANUARY 16, 1951.

DEAR ———: This is to acknowledge and thank you for your letter of January 6. I shall, of course, keep this information in strictest confidence if you so desire. However, it would be of considerable value if I could read your letter into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that it could be brought to the attention of the other Senators. This could be done omitting your name.

I would very much appreciate receiving your permission to do this by wire collect.

As stated above, if you desire this to remain confidential, I shall certainly respect your wishes.

Sincerely yours,

JOE McCARTHY.

On the 22d of January 1951, Mr. President, I received the following letter from the same officer:

JANUARY 22, 1951.

DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 16th finally caught up with me. I would have replied, as you requested, by telegram but I am not certain of the integrity of such a communication.

Steps should, and must, be taken to stop such leaks of secret information. It is obvious, to me at least, there is a clique who desire to undermine the prestige and power of General MacArthur. To the troops in the field I know this campaign has had a shattering morale effect. When I see our fighting men being betrayed it sickens me.

You may use my letter in the RECORD if you will do the following things for me: (1) guarantee my name will never be revealed; (2) return to me by registered mail the original copy of my letter with this letter.

Good luck in your efforts to stop this "leak."

Sincerely.

FEDERAL MANPOWER POLICY

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, it has been 7 months since the Communists marched into Korea. This afternoon I desire to review what has happened to employment in our Federal Government in that short period, to look ahead and forecast what is in prospect, and to make a recommendation on the manpower problem in Government that will be of interest to all our people.

At the end of June 1950, when the Reds invaded Korea, the records of the Civil Service Commission showed that we had 1,967,111 Federal workers in the executive branch of the Government. Of that number, 753,149 were in the Defense Department—the Army, Navy, and Air Force. The latest report made by Civil Service, for the month of November, shows the total number in the executive branch to have risen to 2,159,997, of whom 966,886 are in the Defense Department. That is a total increase of 192,886. The over-all increase in the Defense Department, however, is 213,737.

Reductions which offset some of the increase in the Defense Department were made in the Commerce, Interior, and Agriculture Departments. But these reductions were in seasonal and temporary personnel—reductions that would have been made in any event. For example, the Department of Commerce has reduced its staff which is working on returns from its seventeenth decenniel census. The Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior reductions were in their seasonal staffs—people who work during the summer months in the forests and on the public lands. These people will again be put back to work this coming summer.

My point is that there has been no actual decrease whatsoever, none that was not already planned, in employment in the nondefense agencies.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a breakdown by departments showing the increases in Federal jobs proposed by the President's Budget for 1952. It also shows reductions which are proposed to be made under the President's 1952 Budget. I ask that the breakdown may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

These are among the increases in Federal jobs proposed in the President's 1952 budget (all are approximate figures):

	Jobs
Post Office	20,000
Internal Revenue	2,500
Customs	300
State Department (about)	3,000
Immigration and Naturalization Service	600
Geological Survey (Interior)	500
Civil Aeronautics Administration	500
Commodity Credit Corporation	900
Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors' Insurance	1,000
Civil Service Commission	900
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics	1,800

These few reductions are to be made under the President's proposed 1952 budget:

	Jobs
Reclamation Bureau	2,600
Maritime	800
Soil Conservation Service	600
General Accounting Office	900
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	600

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, since the last Civil Service report, for the month of November, I am reliably informed that the total Federal employment has increased about 55,000, which would make the over-all increase in Federal employment, since Korea, about 250,000 in seven short months.

In addition, we have reliable estimates that Federal employment will increase by perhaps another half million workers by June 30, 1952, 17 months from now. If that happens, the total increase in Federal employment since Korea would reach 750,000.

I believe we all realize that some increase in Federal employment, particularly in the Army, Navy, and Air Force, is and will be necessary to support our troops in Korea and elsewhere overseas. The Army, Navy, and Air Force have hired many thousands of civilian workers to manufacture munitions, to build and repair naval vessels, to store and load supplies, to man airfields, and so forth.

But I believe, too, that most of us here and the people in general are disappointed by the failure of the President to cut nondefense expenditures to the bone, by the failure of the Civil Service Commission to adopt a realistic and hard-boiled manpower policy for the Government, and by the failure of Federal agencies to transfer more of their experienced employees to the defense agencies where they are urgently needed at this particular time.

These are some of the problems I propose to discuss with the Senate this afternoon.

Senators will recall that in his state of the Union message the President called on Congress to cut nondefense expenditures, and we applauded him for his statement. He said the Government would have to forego some of the things which some of the agencies believed were necessary.

But the President failed to follow up his statements when he submitted his proposed budget for the 1952 fiscal year. I have examined that budget in detail. In only isolated instances did he propose fewer employees for the nondefense agencies. By and large, he submitted estimates to Congress which proposed either that these agencies retain their present staffs or that they be given increases in personnel. In other words, he has challenged Congress to carry out his expressed desire to cut nondefense spending. I believe we should accept that challenge.

A week ago the President made public his national manpower mobilization policy. I wish to quote two provisions contained in it. They are:

First. Each individual will be expected to serve in the capacity in which he can contribute most to the total mobilization program; and Second. That the Government should assist workers to arrange for their transfer to essential jobs.

The central manpower agency for our Government is the Civil Service Commission. I am frank but sorry to say that it has done very little in developing plans to meet this situation. I often wonder if the Commission and its officials realize the gravity of the situation at this time.

As far back as last September the Congress itself, in an indirect manner, expressed its resentment at the do-nothing and feet-dragging attitude of the Civil Service Commission in regard to the acute manpower problem brought about by the Korean War.

At that time the Congress voted approval of a rider, written by Representative WHITTEN, of Mississippi, to a supplemental appropriation bill. The Whitten rider now requires the Government to place on a temporary basis most of its personnel actions, such as appointments, grade promotions, interagency transfers, and the like. It also sought to have nondefense agencies transfer some of their employees to the defense agencies.

If the Civil Service Commission had been aware of its responsibilities and had acted to meet the emergency situation in Government after the Korean invasion by the Communists, there would not be a Whitten rider. There would have been no necessity for it.

Mr. President, the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which has honored me with its chairmanship, has a definite and clear-cut responsibility to see that the Civil Service Commission is prepared to meet this problem and is prepared to assume its responsibility in directing the manpower policy of this vast Government. We believe that the Senate committee must assist in working out a realistic policy. We must see to it that every person in the Government's employ is in a job which contributes most to the defenses of our Nation, that no agency has more employees than it needs, that red tape and regulations that make it difficult for experienced employees to transfer to the defense agencies are abolished.

I therefore propose, Mr. President, to appoint a special subcommittee, to be composed of seven members of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee—four Democrats and three Republicans, to make a detailed inquiry into civil-service policies, to examine the manpower needs of Federal agencies, and to hammer out a manpower policy for the Government for the duration of the emergency.

These are some of the problems into which I believe the special subcommittee should inquire:

Whether the personnel of nondefense agencies should be frozen at their present levels in order to give defense agencies their choice of the available workers.

To require old-line agencies which either have or will be given defense duties—such as Commerce, Agriculture, Interior, Interstate Commerce, Labor, and others—to handle their new duties by transferring employees from less essential work to them.

To give you an example of what I have in mind, Mr. President, let me say that we are now told that the Office of Economic Stabilization is hiring a large new staff to enforce a forthcoming order to freeze prices and wages. May I be permitted to make this suggestion: That the Office of Economic Stabilization be permitted to make use of the inspection staff of the Wage and Hour Division, as well as the inspection staffs of other Federal agencies, to help enforce its orders. I am certain it could be done and would be both more economical and more efficient.

To draft a transfer policy, free of red tape and restrictions, that would encourage employees in the nondefense agencies to transfer to defense jobs.

To determine whether the time-consuming civil-service competitive tests are necessary during the emergency.

To examine promotion and appointment policies, to make certain they are streamlined to meet emergency conditions.

To spotlight Government programs and activities that can be set aside for the duration, in order to free employees in nondefense work for pressing defense needs.

To examine the possibility and cost of longer hours for more Government people, in order to save manpower, the costs of materials, and the office space which additional employees will require.

To go into the question of annual leave, to determine whether the rider adopted by the Eighty-first Congress to require employees to take by next June 30 leave earned during the 1950 calendar year, or else lose it, is now feasible. Also, adjustments in the leave system may also be considered.

To study the policies relating to the use of civilian and military personnel.

Why is it necessary to assign military persons to civilian positions to get the job done?

The concept of the military and civilian roles in waging a war underwent radical changes during World War II. Technological war, as contrasted to hand-to-hand fighting, resulted in only one in seven, or even fewer, of the military personnel getting into combat areas. The trend which started in World War II requires a new concept of the definition as to which are civilian and which are military positions.

There are fundamental advantages, in terms of cost, efficiency, stability, and disruption of lives, in having in civilian positions the greatest possible number of those who are engaged in the defense effort. If all positions which did not involve actual combat or combat planning and training for combat were filled with civilians, the result would be large-scale economies in both money and manpower.

There are many persons who are able to hold desk jobs, even though they cannot pass the physical examination required in order to qualify for service in the field with the military forces.

Conservatively, at least half of the positions in the National Military Establishment now filled by military personnel are in reality civilian positions. The average Government civilian costs approximately $3,400 a year. The direct and indirect cost of a soldier in uniform is estimated to be at least $5,000 a year, and some estimates place the cost as high as $9,000 a year, when veteran and other indirect costs are included. Even if one-half the military positions were changed to civilian positions, there would be an annual saving of over one and one-half billion dollars, on a conservative estimate, and probably the savings would be several times this amount.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator's speech brings very clearly to our attention a problem now confronting the Nation. Is it not true that the men taken into the armed services are taken for the purpose of being able to fight for the United States, which is the purpose for which the Armed Forces are recruited. Therefore we give pensions and GI rights and similar benefits to those who are taken into the armed services, in which service they may be required to sacrifice their lives for their country. However, when military personnel fill civilian positions, they no more warrant such special treatment than do any of the civilians who hold jobs in Washington. Does not the Senator agree?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I certainly do; the Senator is entirely correct. Furthermore, let me point out that the dependents of persons in the military service—whether in the Army, Navy, or the Air Corps—will ask the Government for assistance, although their loved ones served in civilian positions, while actually in the military service.

Mr. FERGUSON. In fact, many military persons while holding such civilian positions wear civilian clothing, rather than military uniforms. Is that not true?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from South Carolina very much for the constructive suggestions he is making. I think they will result in very large savings to the Government and to the people of the United States.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, in time of national emergency, the annual savings would be many, many times the $1,500,000,000 I have mentioned. Since civilians form a more stable working force, such a change would result in widespread improvement in efficiency. Added savings would be made as a result of reductions in the number of positions required. Savings of other types would result from this work because of increased efficiency as a result of the use of such information in connection with the recruiting, pay, training, organizational planning, and other management processes.

The proposed special committee should also undertake to look into the policy of drafting Federal employees for active military service. I am told there is, after all this time, still no over-all Government policy in this regard.

To insist that Government supervisors and officials emphasize efficiency and economy in the administration of their offices; encourage and give their employees the incentive to do better work; save manpower; and cut operating expenses.

To determine whether the Federal Government has adequate machinery to bring into the Government people with the necessary know-how to do an effective mobilization job.

We have all been told many times how Government supervisors build up their staffs in order to justify larger salaries for themselves. Our committee considered this problem some months ago. At that time, our able colleague, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] proposed that employees and supervisors alike be rewarded in cash for economies initiated by them in their operations. The Long plan was incorporated in the bill which revised the Classification Act. That was 16 months ago. I was shocked recently to read an account of an address delivered by the Senator from Louisiana in which he pointed out that only a single award had been made under that provision. He asked whether those few employees were the only ones in the Government who were interested in economy. The Senator brought out that 40 percent of all Federal agencies have shown no interest whatsoever in his economy plan.

This situation brings to mind another major function and responsibility which will be placed on this subcommittee, that of keeping a careful watch on the agencies to see that they carry out the intentions of any congressional action taken. Some people have chosen to call this a "watchdog committee." I like that name. It has been very apparent that some agency officials have upon their staffs people whose sole function it is to find ways to circumvent the actions and intent of Congress.

These are only a few of the problems which come to mind for the special subcommittee to study. There will be others. Our Government is the Nation's largest employer. It must take the lead in forging a manpower policy which will get the most out of every employee in these perilous times when the future of our great Nation is at stake.

In the years I have had the privilege of serving on the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, I have had frequent, almost daily, contact with Federal employees and their representatives. I am thoroughly convinced that the Government people themselves will unite in throwing their full support behind a program to place them in jobs where they will contribute more to the defense program and to their Nation. They are merely waiting to be led, to be told what to do, and how. Many of them, engaged in nondefense work, are impatient and are anxious to be of greater service to the country in her fight for our way of life.

From the detailed study I have been able to make of this problem, I am confident that at the end of 1952 we shall be able to show the Eighty-second Congress and the people of this Nation that we were able to pave the way for conservation of manpower, and to save the taxpayers many million dollars by getting the job done more efficiently, without the necessity of hiring hundreds of thousands of additional workers. To this end we dedicate our best efforts, and with the unqualified cooperation of the Congress, I am confident we shall, in the future, be able to show results.

I ask unanimous consent to submit for appropriate reference, a resolution to provide funds for the necessary staffing and other expenses to assist this proposed subcommittee in carrying out this investigation.

There being no objection the resolution (S. Res. 53) was received and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed during the Eighty-second Congress to conduct a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the personnel needs and practices of the various departments and agencies of the Government, with a view to the formulation of policies for the most effective utilization of civilian personnel by such departments and agencies during the period of the national emergency. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation together with such recommendations for necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ on a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

IMPENDING RUSSIAN VICTORY—RECOGNITION OF CHINESE RED PUPPET

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I have a statement to make regarding a grave situation. In a measure, it is a warning, because there is one possible alternative open to the American people.

Our enemy is about to be victorious, not in Korea, but on a global basis, not in 3 years or 1 year, but in the next few weeks, possibly days.

THE GOAL—30 YEARS' CONTINUOUS EFFORT

While we talk here of future preparation for war or defense, of spending all our substance, past, present, and future, on a big war machine, of putting the entire Nation on a war basis, our potential enemy goes easily along making daily progress toward his goal.

What is the enemy's goal?

Moscow's recent conquests in China are the culmination of 30 years of continuous, persistent, and far-ranging efforts. With continental China enslaved, it now has the immediate prospect of overrunning great additional areas in southern Asia with overwhelming force.

CHINA COULD MAKE THE DIFFERENCE

The thing that stands in her way now in her conquest of all Asia is the withholding of official world-wide recognition of her puppet regime of Chinese Communists.

The Senate has taken its stand—in the resolution passed Tuesday—against United Nations admission of the Chinese Communist regime. But, does anyone here think for a moment that the Senate resolution will change the minds and hearts of those—here and abroad—who have been working and conniving with the Reds?

For us in the present struggle, China free or China under the Soviets could mean the difference between victory and defeat.

What good the billions of dollars of appropriations, what good the sacrifices, what good the taking of our 18-year-old boys, what good the girding for world war III, if Russia can gain her goal through our diplomatic weakness?

DEFEATED BY OUR DIPLOMATS

What followed the world's worst war is the world's most dismal inability to achieve any kind of peace. We are being defeated by our so-called diplomats, and it looks as if they are going to sell us out long before we are prepared to wage war.

In my December 14 speech on the Senate floor, I listed 10 suggestions for our survival. I have discussed the first two. The third is the subject of my remarks today. On later dates I shall discuss the remaining suggestions in the list.

THE PROPOSED ADMISSION OF COMMUNIST CHINA TO THE UN

Suggestion No. 3 was:

Oppose the recognition of Communist China by the United Nations with every means at our command.

It is this vitally urgent matter to which I wish to address myself today.

THE PATTERN OF THE PLOT

The junior Senator from Nevada will hold up for all to see the pattern of the plot, of which we are the victim. This examination will show, step by step, how we got into this mess, and will suggest a course of action by which we may be saved from the great and permanent defeat.

There are current rumors of a compromise settlement of the China and Korea questions before the UN which would involve seating the Communist delegates, and presumably letting the Chinese Republic's formal charges of aggression against the Soviet Union go by default.

There are so-called Americans in our Government service working for the admission of Red China to the UN and perhaps even diplomatic recognition by this country at the very time Chinese Reds are slaughtering American boys in Korea.

The disaster that has overtaken us—and a third world war, no matter what its outcmoe, is little short of a disaster—is due to the propaganda of socialistic, communistic, and internationalist elements in the United States.

Behind the insults the American people take almost daily in the United Nations the insidious propaganda for admission of Chinese Reds continues.

ENGLAND'S REAL POSITION DISCLOSED

When Prime Minister Attlee made his recent trip to Washington, the Senator now speaking said publicly that Attlee's chief interest was in the protection of British trade and that Attlee was, therefore, on the side of the United Nations' admission of the Chinese Reds. Following my remarks, Mr. Attlee issued a statement denying the charges, saying there could be "no thought of appeasement or of rewarding aggression."

The incongruity of that is apparent when one observes that England had officially recognized Communist China and had not withdrawn that recognition. I stated at the time that the truth would eventually be revealed. Now, it has been, through the statement which British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin submitted to the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference. Bevin listed six points regarding the far-eastern situation, the first of which was for recognition and admission of Communist China to the United Nations.

In the fall of 1949, when the Senate was discussing the conferences then being held on the subject of storing atomic bombs in England, this Senator warned that England, whom we had been keeping, would soon affront us by extending official recognition to the Chinese Communists.

England denied she would recognize the Chinese Communists; soon thereafter England did officially recognize them.

COMMUNIST WORLD PLANS

With the exception of small fellow-traveller minorities and their sympathizers, almost everyone agrees that Soviet communism has been planning world conquest systematically for decades.

The current behind-the-scenes actions of American Government officials in the interest of recognition of the Chinese Communists are part of a far-reaching plan, the pattern of which is clearly discernible to anyone who will only examine it.

The intellectual climate in the administration in the early days of the New Deal was a depressing compound of profound ignorance, wishful thinking, and impractical dreaming, all of which played into the hands of the group of individuals who consciously placed loyalty to the Kremlin above all other considerations.

Some of these succeded in getting into key positions in our Government agencies. They were able to operate freely and were able to influence liberals of the world-saver and one-economic-world complex. One of Roosevelt's Vice Presidents, Henry Wallace, is an example of the latter class.

Pro-Sovietism was the party line of the administration. Under these circumstances, infiltration of strategic Government agencies by fanatical Soviet sympathizers encountered no difficulty. We were, and still are, plagued with the working of policies which were in the interest of foreign powers.

FESTERING SORES DO NOT HEAL IF COVERED UP

Mr. President, I am not one of those who believe we should keep quiet about past mistakes. They are festering sores which will not heal by being ignored. We are not going to build a strong structure on a rotten foundation. We are not going to straighten out a deplorable situation by trying to act as though it were not there. It is our duty to call the attention of the public to what is wrong in our Government. It is vital that we examine what has been done, because the men responsible are still in control.

THE COMMUNIST PATTERN—IN GOVERNMENT

World War II agencies were a haven for those whose first loyalty was to the Kremlin.

The OWI, Office of War Information, under Elmer Davis was ridden with fellow-travellers. Many of those selected for good positions in the OWI were persons of foreign birth with political pasts suggestive of Communist sympathies. Some of our own Government offices thus conducted what could only be termed pro-Soviet propaganda.

After the war at least three employees of OWI, a Mr. Herz, a Mr. Arsky, and a Miss Balinska, appeared in the service of the Communist regime in Poland. They should have been on the payroll of Stalin instead of our payroll. Another person in the Office of War Information, a Miss Annabelle Bucar, went to Moscow after the war and renounced her American citizenship.

Articles by former employees of OWI critical of American and favorable to Soviet policy have appeared in various magazines.

Other Government agencies have had their quota of bad security risks, as has been brought out in various investigations.

Alger Hiss is not the only high official who has been exposed as pro-Communist. Julian Henry Wadleigh, another former State Department official, confessed his guilt as a Soviet spy.

Harry Dexter White, a high Treasury official and principal author of the Morgenthau plan, mentioned by many as being pro-Soviet, committed suicide while under investigation. Carl Aldo Marzani was another Communist who found a high niche in the State Department. Marzani was indicted in 1947 for perjury in saying that he was not a member of the Communist Party. He was found guilty on all counts in the indictment. Emanuel S. Larsen, another State Department official, paid a fine of $500 in the infamous Amerasia case, which had to do with the stealing of secret Government documents and turning them over to the Soviets. Judith Coplon, another in our Government service, was found to be spying for Russia. In her trials in both Washington and New York, she was found guilty. Noel Field, another Government official, disappeared behind the iron curtain while under investigation.

Nathan Gregory Silvermaster, still another United States Government official, refused to answer the question as to whether he was a Communist, "for fear of self-incrimination."

In 1942 the Civil Service Commission reported:

There is considerable testimony in the file indicating that, about 1920, Mr. Silvermaster was an underground agent of the Communist Party. From that time until the present * * * he has been everything from a fellow-traveller to an agent of the OGPU (Soviet Political Police).

Yet Silvermaster, protected in some high quarters, went from one confidential Government appointment to another.

Henry Wallace, Vice President of the United States, was prevented by Gen. Leslie Groves, then director of the atomic-bomb project, from seeing secret data about the bomb. When pressed for his reason for not showing Mr. Wallace the secret information, General Groves answered:

We took a number of deliberate risks on security matters in an effort to bring the war to a quicker end, but we took no unnecessary, recognizable risks.

That is a very significant statement, Mr. President, in connection with withholding information from the Vice President of the United States.

Someone in our Government was responsible for giving access to atomic bomb secrets to Dr. Klaus Fuchs, who passed them on to Soviet espionage agents through Dr. Harry Gold, of Philadelphia, who has since confessed.

COMMUNIST INFLUENCE IN FAR EAST POLICY

Without question, there were strong pro-Communist influences at work in shaping American policy in the Far East. As has been well established, this policy came from the so-called Institute of Pacific Relations, and from their publications Pacific Affairs and Far Eastern Survey. A study of the editorial policy of these publications will clearly reveal a pro-Soviet, pro-Chinese Communist bias.

Mr. President, as further evidence of the power of the pro-Communist group in our Government, the famous Amerasia case was suddenly and mysteriously dropped, even after the FBI, which is seldom wrong, had discovered large numbers of confidential documents from the State, War, and Navy Departments and from other Government agencies in the office of Amerasia. One of those arrested by the FBI in the Amerasia case was John S. Service, the same John S. Service who was sent back to America from China by Ambassador Patrick J. Hurley, because, in the opinion of General Hurley, Service was working in the interests of the Soviet Union rather than in the interests of the United States. I understand Service is still in the State Department, and, I am informed, has been promoted.

Much of this has been exposed, but I want to show the pattern. We cannot save ourselves unless we face the truth.

At this critical time, when the pressure is upon us to decide our course to save our sons from untimely death in war, when we are faced starkly with Russian victory over all Asia, we must have the whole truth, whatever it may be.

The pro-Russian clique took over the State Department in 1944. Under oath, before the Un-American Activities Committee on August 30, 1948, Mr. Adolf Berle, former Assistant Secretary of State, testified:

> In the fall of 1944 there was a difference of opinion in the State Department. * * * I was pressing for a pretty clean-cut showdown (with the Russians) then (at a time) when our position was strongest. The opposite group in the State Department was largely the men—Mr. Acheson's group, of course, with Mr. Hiss as his principal assistant. * * * I got trimmed in that fight and, as a result, went to Brazil and that ended my diplomatic career.

Later in his testimony, he referred to the Acheson group as the pro-Russian clique.

PRO-COMMUNIST INFLUENCE IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT

Still further evidence of the pro-Soviet influence in the administration may be found in the shocking, secret directive issued December 30, 1944, to let down the bars in the United States Army so that Communists could be commissioned as Army officers. The administration tried to keep this a secret, and even refused to answer congressional inquiries about it until it leaked out.

This order followed one, issued May 7, 1944, to destroy the subversive records within the War Department. In testimony before a congressional committee, the Deputy Chief of Staff said that the directive had been issued without the knowledge of either Secretary of War Stimson or Chief of Staff Marshall, intimating that it had come from someone in the White House.

PRO-COMMUNIST INFLUENCE REACHED INTO THE NAVY

Two admirals in our Navy were forced to retire because they tried to get rid of Communist radio operators in United States naval vessels. They were Rear Adm. S. C. Hooper and Rear Adm. Adolphus Staton. Three leaders of the American Communications Association, communistic labor union, 7 of whose 10 national officers were known Communist Party members, called on these admirals and demanded the reinstatement of the suspected subversives whom the admirals had discharged, and the 3 Communist labor leaders quite boldly threatened that unless they were reinstated there would be two admirals out of a job.

The admirals did not give in. There was a conference at the White House, with Secretary Knox and Federal Communications Commissioner Fly present. The admirals were shortly out of a job. Admiral Hooper was given the relatively minor post of inspector in a factory, replacing a $4,000-a-year civilian. Admiral Staton was retired.

A thorough account of all of this may be found in the New York World Telegram of January 12, 1944, and in the record of hearings before Select Committee, House of Representatives, to Investigate the FCC, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, volumes I and II, particularly pages 1 to 20, page 69 of volume I, and pages 2303 to end of volume II.

ADMINISTRATION PROTECTED PRO-COMMUNISTS

Further evidence of the pro-Communist influence within the administration is shown by what happened in regard to the Soviet spy ring which was discovered in Canada. Prime Minister Mackenzie King flew to Washington and presented the President a report on the spy ring. The report contained a list of spies or suspected spies in the United States. So far as is known, not one of that list has been arrested.

Here is another indication of pro-Soviet influence in the administration: Invariably the administration has rushed to the defense of anyone accused of pro-Soviet activities, has refused access to files, and has had a hand in trying to clear the accused pro-Communist, and smear the accuser. Exposés, backed by sworn confessions and a great volume of corroborative evidence, have been called "red herrings," and high Government officials have disgraced themselves by testifying to the good character of the accused.

Beginning in 1944, when Alger Hiss was put in charge of United States activities in the UN, there has continuously been a strange assortment of persons soft to communism acting as representatives of the United States and as staff members. Small wonder that the UN, created ostensibly to enforce the peace, has been helpless in eastern Europe and in China, and could act in Korea only because of the then temporary absence of Russia and our willingness to carry the burden.

This is not a witch-hunt. It is a review of accepted facts to show, to those who are not afraid to face facts, that there is a pattern suggesting a gigantic conspiracy on behalf of Soviet Russia.

Some so-called American in official position turned over to Russia the hundreds of Danube barges we held, just before the Danubian Conference met. This was our only trading point in that conference. Without it, at the conference, we were treated contemptuously, as could be expected. Was it not one of the pro-Soviets in a Government department who was responsible for our turning these barges over to Russia?

THE BERLIN AIRLIFT—STATE DEPARTMENT CRIME

State Department pro-Sovietism caused the Berlin airlift. At Potsdam, in July 1945, it was agreed that our forces in Berlin would have a ground and air corridor from West Germany to Berlin. The State Department opposed getting this in writing from the Russians. The Air Force insisted and got the air corridor written in the agreement. The State Department, somehow or other, is always found to be the Soviet's advocate.

Late in 1948 the UN met in Paris to attempt to settle the Berlin airlift and blockade. It is reported that Ambassador Jessup asked the Chinese delegation, which had intended to vote with the United States, not to do so. This top mystery leaves unanswered the question of whom Ambassador Jessup really represented. Again in Paris, in 1949, at the meeting arranged by Jessup and Malik, which finally ended the airlift, Jessup fought for acceptance of the Russian terms. General Clay had to fight to stop it.

ACHESON'S $90,000,000 LOAN TO POLISH COMMUNISTS

After the Polish Communist Government had scornfully rejected America's request for free elections, as pledged at Yalta, and refused our ambassador permission to visit Americans in jail there, Secretary Acheson approved a $90,000,000 loan to Poland. Incidentally, Mr. Acheson's law firm acted as the agent of the Polish Communist Government.

NATIONALIST CHINA AND GERMAN ARMS

After VE-day, the Chinese applied for surrendered German arms and ammunition. The Joint Chiefs of staff approved, sent orders to General Eisenhower, and 20,000 rifles actually left a German port for China, by way of India. The order was then countermanded by Presidential order signed by Lauchlin Currie, Administrative Assistant, since named by Whitaker Chambers and Elizabeth Bentley as a pro-Communist. The vast stores of German armament were then destroyed.

THE DOUBLE-CROSS IN GERMANY

In discussing pro-Soviet influence we cannot overlook the halt of the American Army's march on Berlin. Who stopped the American Army's march on Berlin? At that time our Ninth Army was not more than 30 miles away. Resistance had practically ceased. They could have been in Berlin the next day. Goebbel's sound trucks were notifying the Berliners to surrender to the Americans.

Who ordered our forces to retreat to the Elbe and leave Berlin for the Russians—a decision that has cost us so dearly since?

Who was responsible for stopping General Patton 30 miles from Prague? In the Saturday Evening Post of April 17, 1948, Demaree Bess reported that Gen. George Patton was ordered to halt his conquest of Czechoslovakia and to refuse the German surrender which had already been made by the German general to one of Patton's colonels. The fate of Czechoslovakia was sealed.

Who ordered General Eisenhower, after the German surrender, to withdraw from already occupied western Saxony and Thuringia and turn them, with their uranium deposits, over to the Russians?

The actions of our Government since 1945 have tended to make more sure that the United States would lose everything she won by the war, and that Soviet Russia would receive all possible benefits.

PREMATURE DISBANDING OF AMERICAN ARMY

The United States let Soviet Russia seize just about all the parts of Germany she wanted. The United States proceeded at breakneck speed to disband the American Army and Air Force and to put our fleet in mothballs. The United States proceeded to destroy, in the face of determined opposition of scattered individuals who knew the significance of the move, huge quantities of war material. Bombers that would have been of incalculable value today were ruthlessly destroyed. Even the tools, jigs, and dies for making them were likewise sacrificed. Precision instruments, including watches, were put under trip hammers and destroyed.

Were these steps part of a definite plan of the internationalists—those American citizens who have forgotten, if they ever knew, about the significance of the American Republic, its great history, and its great place in the evolution of human freedom?

AID TO RUSSIA

The Communists are now almost certainly using against us in Korea part of the enormous stock of aviation gasoline which we made available to Russia after the World War II crisis had passed.

Back of this situation is the fantastic story of how America helped Stalin in an orgy of stockpiling in the postwar period.

Evidence of traitorous intent and purpose on the part of the pro-Communist group here may be observed in the fact that when it was exposed that Britain and other Marshall plan countries were sending Russia war-making materials, not one of this influential clique lifted a finger to stop our money and materials from flowing to those countries; in fact, they actually opposed the measure introduced here, which would have stopped our indirect arming of Russia. War-making materials were still being sent to Russia a few weeks ago.

ACHESON-LILIENTHAL—BOMB SECRETS TO RUSSIA

Late in 1949, the President proposed to share the atomic bomb with Russia. When the voice of the people against this was heard, then others in the Government service saw to it that the Russians received the atomic bomb secrets anyhow. Without question, the pro-Communists in Government positions were responsible for this traitorous sellout.

Going back to the origin of the suggestion of giving the atomic bomb secret to Russia, there was the Acheson-Lilienthal report in 1946. It proposed the step-by-step release of all atomic data on the basis of an international agreement. At that time Russia had a 100 percent record of broken promises to us and to all the world.

YALTA AND POTSDAM—PRO-COMMUNIST GROUP

It was the pro-Communist group in the Government which formulated the Yalta agreement and the Morgenthau plan and the Potsdam agreement, all of which were not only complete repudiations of the Atlantic Charter, but against all humanitarian principles.

Are there not still further signs of Soviet conspiracy in this country?

The conference at Yalta in February 1945 reported the high point of Soviet diplomatic success and, correspondingly, the low point of American appeasement.

At the price of a few worthless promises Stalin got what he wanted in Poland. We gave the go ahead signal to the Red army to loot East Germany. The Red army proceeded to remove, physically, Germany's industries. Germany was stripped of assets worth many billions of dollars.

In the pro-Soviet climate at Yalta, China was offered up as a sacrifice on the altar of appeasement. The concessions made concerning Manchuria were of fateful importance for China's independence and territorial integrity. To give a strong foreign power like Russia control of Manchurian railways, a predominant interest in its chief port, Darien, and a naval base at Port Arthur was to sell away China's sovereignty in Manchuria.

In addition to turning over Manchurian railways and its chief port and naval base to the Soviet Union, we also handed her the Kurile Islands. We also told Russia that she could keep Outer Mongolia, which she had stolen.

As is well known, the concession of Manchuria was the important link in the Communist advance into China. Not only did Manchuria have a wealth of coal, iron, soy beans, and other resources, but it was where large investments of Japanese capital and skill had made it the most industrially developed part of China. Manchuria became the base from which the Chinese Communists could launch the campaign which led them to overrunning almost all of China.

There was not one positive, worthwhile contribution to European or Asiatic stability in the sordid deals at Yalta.

There was no military necessity for the Yalta concessions. America was at that time close to the peak of its military power. We possessed the most powerful navy in the world, the greatest aircraft production in quality and quantity, and an army which had swept the Germans from north Africa, France, Belgium, and much of Italy. Two days before the President left Washington for Yalta he received an official report outlining five Japanese peace overtures which amounted to unconditional surrender. There was no reason to give in to Stalin's far eastern demands. Apparently the President was the victim of the pro-Soviet influence of his American advisors, one of which was the notorious Alger Hiss.

GENERAL MARSHALL AND HIS CHINESE AGRARIAN REFORMERS

Was it not pro-Soviet influence in the administration which caused General Marshall to go to China in December 1945 to force the Chinese to accept the Communists in a coalition government? The Communists felt then that they needed this help from a high level official in our Government. At that time the Chinese Republic was at the height of its power. Its Nationalist troops had surrounded 100,000 Communists near Canton and 70,000 near Hankow and had blocked off the rest from Manchuria.

Into this picture, direct from the pro-Communist atmosphere of the American State Department, stepped Gen. George Marshall. General Marshall pressured the Nationalists to withdraw their forces, which permitted the Communists to go into Manchuria, where they obtained the 5-year stock of Japanese arms and ammunition. The Nationalists even agreed to admit 13 Communists into a national council of 40 but the Communists demanded 14 which would have given them veto power since a two-thirds vote was required for changes of policy. To force acceptance of this outrageous demand, General Marshall placed a 10-month embargo against all shipments of arms and ammunition to the Nationalists.

After Congress appropriated $125,000,000 for military equipment for the Republic of China in April 1948, the administration placed China on so low a priority that no shipments moved until October and then at prices approximately double their cost and fifteen or more times the prices charged Greece and Turkey.

PRO-COMMUNIST INFLUENCE IN COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

Here is further evidence of pro-Soviet influence in the administration:

We had the case of a man who called himself Michael Lee. He was a Russian, born in China, and his real name was Ephraim Zinovi Liberman. He had been refused American citizenship on the grounds that he was not in sympathy with the principles of the American Government, and for the further reason that he was not of good character. Later, however, after changing his name, he succeeded in getting his citizenship papers. And a few weeks later we find him in Washington, D. C., head of a United States Government office having to do with shipments to Asia. Officials of the Republic of China blame him to a great extent for the success of the Reds in China, because he held up shipments of much needed gasoline at a time when the Nationalist Army of China needed it the most.

After persistent effort on the part of the junior Senator from Nevada, we finally got Liberman out of that key position, but not without argument from his superiors in the Department of Commerce.

The postscript to this is almost unbelievable, Mr. President. The Secretary of Commerce, before dismissing Liberman, reversed the loyalty board and cleared Liberman, which action in itself would permit Liberman (or Michael Lee) to get another important Government post in some other United States Government department or agency.

The one who has fought communism in the Far East is Chiang Kai-shek, with his aides and generals. It is interesting in this connection to observe that Chiang Kai-shek is not liked by any pro-Soviet, pro-Communist, or "pink" in Washington, D. C. Chiang Kai-shek represents the free government of China, recognized by America.

If we now betray Chiang into the hands of the Communists, as all the pro-Communists want, free people everywhere will be asking themselves: "Who among us are next to be betrayed by the appeasers in Washington under the cloak of the United Nations?"

It is almost impossible to explain why we do not take advantage of Chiang Kai-shek's offer of troops as foot soldiers in Korea. The present policy makes no sense.

The State Department "generals" continue to reject Chiang's services, although his participation would force Soviet China to withdraw troops from Korea.

There is further evidence, if any should be needed, that communism has friends in our Government in the fact that Chinese Communists were represented to us by State Department white papers as simple agrarian reformers, innocent peasants. Mr. Acheson and his coterie of "pink" intellectuals spent years in building State Department policy and American public opinion to support the theory that these Chinese Communists were the leaders of China whom we should support.

THE KOREAN WAR

It was this same State Department group that insisted that the United Nations forces be held up at the thirty-eighth parallel for more than a week, until the United Nations could at its leisure grant them official authority to go beyond that point, a fact that gave the North Koreans an opportunity to regroup their forces and provide costly resistance.

And it is this group who dictate, at this minute, that the American forces must not fight the war as it should be fought, with the bombing of strategic targets behind the enemy lines, to paralyze their supplies and their reserves.

The American army was turned over to the United Nations by the Administration after they were sent into Korea. The UN immediately placed them under a committee some of whose members represent countries which have recognized Communist China. Thus we have the spectacle of a United States Army fighting Communist China while being under the control of those who are friendly to and have recognized Communist China.

THE UNITED NATIONS—COMMUNIST INFLUENCE

Incidentally, if the United Nations is ever to be useful to the human race, it must free itself of Communist domination.

Who may I ask, is responsible for our begging the Chinese Communists through the United Nations to let up on their war against us, while at the same time virtually telling them that we will not let our military men bomb their sources of supply?

THE UNITED STATES SENATE AND MILITARY DECISIONS

We have heard here on the Senate floor insistence from certain quarters that Members of this body should not try to decide military maneuvers. I certainly agree with this. There is, however, sometimes a thin line between the realm of military decision and the realm of foreign policy. It is not only the right but the duty of this body to examine matters pertaining to the foreign policy of the United States.

Incidentally, I have no doubt but that some of these same people who do not want us to discuss military policies here would justify the actions of other nonmilitary men in making military decisions.

Did the unconditional surrender demand in World War II come from military men? Was it our military men who decided to withdraw from Saxony and Thuringia and turn them over to the Russians? Was it our military men who decided to let the Russians enter Berlin first?

Was it our military men who recommended that we share our atomic bomb secrets with Russia?

Was it our military men who held General MacArthur at the thirty-eighth parallel while the Chinese Communists were completing their preparations to enter the fight?

Are the military decisions being made by the United Nations "generals" quite satisfactory with those here who ask us to be quiet about such matters?

Do we leave military decisions to military men only when the military men agree wholeheartedly with the State Department "generals"?

THE PRESIDENT AND THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

The President said, in his budget message: "When the American people resolved to undertake the defense program now under way, they accepted also the necessity for the increases in their taxes that the level of expenditures requires."

When, I ask, Mr. President, did the American people resolve to undertake the defense program now under way? How did they make their resolution known? When did they resolve to accept the incident tax burdens?

If the administration thinks it is reflecting the wishes of the American people, I challenge the administration to submit the matter to a popular vote of all the people.

WHAT HAPPENED TO $50,000,000,000?

Since the close of World War II, Congress has appropriated more than fifty thousand million dollars for defense. Where is this equipment and preparation which we have paid for? Is there any reason to believe that more billions would not be wasted in the same way?

The President reaches for more power and more billions with hands too weak to use it effectively.

When Mr. Truman became President, he became Commander in Chief of the greatest Air Force, the greatest Navy, and the most powerful Army in the history of the world. According to the Hoover Commission report, we had equipment for 89 divisions at the end of the war.

When Mr. Truman became President, those of our allies who ruled by consent of their people numbered their population at 1,700,000,000. Furthermore, since Mr. Truman became President, Congress has given him the defense appropriations for which he has asked. What can he show us today? An Army which he has allowed to disintegrate, which can now be pushed around by a fifth-rate power; a Navy, much of which has been scuttled; an Air Force which is mostly on paper. And today, 830,000,00 people are ruled from the Kremlin; while our allies, if any, are on unknown quantity.

WORLD CONTRIBUTIONS—FRIENDSHIP PURCHASE

For nearly 5½ years the United States has poured into foreign countries $36,500,000,000 plus $6,052,000,000 in military aid. It was to buy for us and the world, peace, and for us friendship, the kind of friends who will take off their coats when we get into a fight.

The peace is fictional, as Korea has shown. As to the friendship these billions are supposed to have bought, that too, is proving illusory. After 5 years of vast tribute to ally and defeated enemy alike, we find ourselves fighting virtually alone.

But regardless of all things, with the President and his coterie of advisers, unfortunately, the policy seems to be spend as usual, give away as usual, bureaucracy as usual.

RECOGNITION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

Pursuing a bit further the subject of official recognition of the Chinese Reds, which is the great goal of the Soviets, here and abroad:

There are evidences that State Department officials have been advancing this cause of the Communists on a global scale. The Italian Foreign Minister, Count Carlo Sforza, told the Chamber of Deputies that the Italian Government had been considering recognition of the Communist regime in China, and he indicated that the Italian attitude on that question had been influenced strongly by some alluring suggestions which he said had been made to him by persons in "very responsible quarters" during his trip to the United States last September.

These suggestions, he said, were that the Soviet Union would not veto Italy's admission to the United Nations if the United States and other member states would not veto the admission of Communist China.

The United States is playing diametrically opposing roles, Mr. President.

In the one case, we are resisting Moscow's aggression with arms. In the other case, we, first, compel China to go into an alliance with the Soviet Union; second, we attempt to force upon the Chinese Government a peaceful submission to Moscow's control, through a coalition with the Soviet puppets, the Chinese Communists; and, finally, we covertly seek the recognition of the Kremlin's conquest by announcing long in advance our intended refusal to defend the Chinese Republic by use of a United States veto in its behalf. It will be remembered that last year, when Mr. Acheson returned from Europe, after a conference he announced to Members of both Houses of Congress at a meeting that the United States would not use the veto in the United Nations to prevent the admission of Communist China.

Such a conclusion is inescapable when observing the course of the State Department's dealings since 1944.

Current belief anticipates the final consummation of this sell-out of the Nationalist Government within a few weeks. We are not talking about years, Mr. President; it will come within a few weeks.

ENGLAND AND COMMUNIST CHINA

While Mr. Truman was mouthing his no-appeasement pledge to Congress, Attlee and the other prime ministers of the British Commonwealth were deciding in London that the Communist regime in China should receive sympathetic consideration; that it should not only be seated in the United Nations but that it should be handed Formosa; and that it should have an equal voice with the United States in any peace treaty dictated to Japan, which we defeated singlehandedly.

It was against this background that the British bloc in UN, supported by countries of Asia and the Middle East, worked out the UN terms for a far eastern Munich, granting the Chinese Communists everything it ever asked as the price for ending the Korean war.

THE UNITED NATIONS SELL-OUT

Further evidence of what the UN proposed to do about admission of the Communist regime in China may be found in the report of the so-called cease-fire committee of the UN. It specified that England, the United States, Soviet Russia, and the Chinese Communist regime should participate in a conference to decide the question of Formosa and the question of China's representation in the UN. The suggested conference would not include representatives of the Chinese Nationalist Government, but would include representatives of the Communist regime in China, who would sit down with the representatives of the United Nations to decide the fate of China. Is not this exclusion in itself a judgment and a decision?

With such a conference, there would be only two questions to resolve:

First. How would the Communist Reds like Formosa—rare, medium, or well done?

Second. How soon could the Chinese Reds send delegates to unseat the regular delegates of the Republic of China?

If the shabby deal, to which our representatives agreed, had gone through, these would have been the results—as quoted from the January 13 issue of the Chicago Tribune:

1. The aggressor would be richly rewarded, in contradiction of the cries of "no appeasement."

2. The United States would have fought a costly and useless war at Truman's instigation in Korea and had its ears beaten off for the privilege of giving to the Chinese Communists not only Korea but Formosa and other advantages not remotely at issue in Korea.

3. The very willingness of the State Department to entertain such a deal shows that Korea itself was never worth a fight, but that more than 6,200 Americans have been slaughtered in Korea in order to gratify Communist China's demand for Formosa, a base from which the whole American position in the Pacific can be threatened.

Mr. President, we should add the total of approximately 46,000 American boys who are wounded, missing, or killed.

I quote further from the article appearing in the Chicago Tribune:

4. The British have succeeded in putting across the great appeasement gift package in order to curry favor with Communist China so that they may hope to retain Hong Kong. Nobody is suggesting the surrender of Hong Kong in place of Formosa.

5. Chiang Kai-shek's large Nationalist Army on Formosa will be sacrificed to the Communists, ending all opposition to the Peiping regime of Mao; and Chiang will, in all likelihood, go the way of General Mihailovitch and other sacrifices to the Communist executioner.

6. America will be left without a friend in Asia or the Pacific. Anti-Communists not yet sacrificed will hasten to come to terms with the triumphant Communist tide.

7. Secretary of State Acheson will achieve his most faithful service to his British masters, together with his greatest contribution to Communist success.

Mr. President, parents whose captured sons had their hands tied and were shot in the face, want no such appeasement of Communists anywhere.

What can we do?

REMEMBER WASHINGTON'S ORDER

No civilization is destroyed from the outside unless it has already decayed from within. A wise philosopher once said: "No empire is conquered from abroad unless it has first destroyed itself."

Few fields need more to be reexamined than the presence and practices in high or strategic places of alien minds who have helped formulate American policy. Some have been smoked out.

But we should remember George Washington's order at a critical point in the American Revolution, "Put none but Americans on guard tonight!"

PUT AMERICANS ON GUARD

No person against whom there are citations for communistic association, by either the Attorney General's office or the House Committee on Un-American Activities, should be even considered for any office. Mr. President, we have reached a deplorable state of affairs when we find that it is necessary to appoint to high positions in the United States Government persons who have been on trial for treason against this country.

At the height of this folly, it virtually became necessary, as a condition of being considered for a high appointive office in the Government, for the applicant to have been investigated for traitorous conduct.

Many American people are now awake and alert to the danger. Still there is reason to fear that if the same men are continued in power, whether in public office or even in an advisory capacity behind the administration, the United States will continue to decline and Soviet Russia will triumph.

THIS INCREDIBLE TREND

To those who have given no careful thought to what we are up against, all this will seem incredible. Yet unless we realize that it can happen and do the necessary things to prevent it, there is great danger that it will happen.

The most important step toward preventing world war III is to destroy the Soviet fifth column in the United States. This is not going to be done by ignoring it.

There must be a complete clean-up. These men who still sit in control and push the buttons are responsible for the tragedy of Korea. Any statement by a defender of this group or its head does not change that fact. What is going on did not just happen. It was brought on by persons who did wrong things and followed the wrong policies.

No individual or bloc should be permitted at this time to deteriorate America's capacity to survive.

Let us clean house. Let us have only Americans on guard.

HOW LONG?

How long is the public going to submit to the foibles of those in the Administration who have followed the party line of the Kremlin, who have been loyal to our enemy at the expense of our own country?

Unfortunately, public opinion in the past placed no effective brake on the mistaken Administration policies in which Soviet agents and propagandists, native and foreign, found it easy to operate. Now, however, the American public is making itself heard and through this it may be possible to head off this sell-out to the Communists.

COMMUNIST CHINA MUST NOT BE RECOGNIZED

Our one salvation may be found in the voice of the people, sounding forth in wires and letters to the President, to Senators and Congressmen, and to editors and columnists and commentators.

Every loyal American should make his voice heard against admission to the UN and recognition by the United States of the Chinese Communists. Every loyal American should demand that every possible means, including our veto power in the United Nations, be used to defeat this long-range goal of the Soviets.

ACHESON AND THE VETO POWER

Dean Acheson said that we would not use the veto in the United Nations to prevent that admission, but the voice of the American people is more powerful than that of Mr. Acheson. If the people of America do not want this deplorable sell-out to Russia, which will affect seriously the future of the world, let them now speak in clear and unmistakable terms. And let this body always represent the will of the people.

THERE IS YET TIME—THE CONSTITUTION

There is yet time, God willing, for the American people to regain the control over their own destinies, so wisely guaranteed by the Constitution. There is yet time to snatch from usurpation by ignorant little men and their traitorous advisers the basic powers categorically affirmed by the Constitution of the United States.

It is only the Constitution, and the people's stringent demand that it be observed, that will preserve government "of" and "by" the people and deliver us from the consequences of the folly that has long guided our affairs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks the 10 recommendations made by the junior Senator from Nevada in his December 14 address.

There being no objection, the recommendations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEN SUGGESTIONS IN PRESENT EMERGENCY

1. Forthwith stop assistance of every nature to Communist nations and to nations in any way assisting Russia or her satellites to consolidate Soviet gains and to prepare for World War III.

2. Stop supporting colonial slavery in any form anywhere.

3. Oppose the recognition of Communist China by the United Nations with every means at our command.

4. Three suggested approaches to the war in Korea and Asia:

A. We could do the obvious thing—arm Chiang Kai-shek's nationals and guerrillas to furnish the foot soldiers for the job, then under General MacArthur make the most efficient use of our air power, our Navy, including submarines, to destroy the war-making power of Communist Korea and the aggressor Communist China troops.

B. We could withdraw from Korea, arm and equip Chiang Kai-shek's troops, and let him do the job. It would require a longer time, but he would engage the Communist forces to the extent that it would be doubtful if they could harass us for a considerable time.

C. We could completely abandon Korea and China with all of its possible consequences and repercussions.

D. We can then establish our first line of defense through Japan, Formosa, Okinawa, Guam, the Philippines, Indonesia, New Guinea, and Australia.

E. If all of these suggestions are discarded, then we can come home and defend the Western Hemisphere. We must be prepared to defend this continent in any case. The one thing that we cannot do is to continue the present course of indecision and nervous jittery attitude.

5. Inform the governments of Europe which still maintain political and economic agreements with the Soviet Union that these should be terminated at the earliest possible date, as a prerequisite to the continued friendship and assistance of Europe in the United States.

6. Give no more money as loans or gifts to any government, but if necessary loan such funds to private business in strategic areas without weakening our own economy, in the same manner that the RFC loans such funds to private business in this country in times of stress.

7. Build as rapidly as possible a military force, spearheaded by an adequate submarine fleet and an air corps of whatever number of groups may be called for, and install radar equipment to protect the Western Hemisphere.

8. If the European people will enlist in their own armies and furnish the ground troops, then serve notice on Russia that any move on Europe will be met with an aggressive aerial attack on their means of making war, using every means at our command to defeat their purpose of controlling Europe.

9. In every possible way, protect and strengthen our national economy; while making all possible speed toward proper preparedness, guard well our national economy; stop wasting the hard-earned dollars of our taxpayers through Marshall plan and other give-away schemes; inaugurate a businesslike fiscal policy.

10. Clean up our own government, throw out the Communists, Communist associates, adherents to foreign ideologies, persons of abnormal moral weakness and other dangerous security risks. The Armed Services Committees of the Congress should immediately institute a thorough investigation to determine why we are not prepared to fight a war.

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST COMMUNISM

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, our Nation is girding for a desperate struggle with Communist aggression. The nature of that struggle may be measured by our preparations, which are going so far as to completely disrupt and recast our economy. In a short time we shall experience economic regimentation such as we have known previously only during all-out war. We are going to be asked for new taxes, which will have the effect of diverting to the Federal Government 26 cents out of every dollar that is earned in this country, reducing our standard of living in just that proportion. We also have in prospect a military force of approximately 3,500,000 men and women, which may involve the drafting of 18-year-olds. That, or universal military training, which is another prospect would have a further profound effect on our social structure.

What is it we are preparing for? What are we preparing against?

The world now knows that communism operates on three fronts in its program of aggression for world dominion.

It operates, first, within its target countries, by penetration and infiltration. It does so by novel and consequently most dangerous means. It operates through native tongues and native minds. All those who do the bidding of the Kremlin do not carry the cards of the Communist Party, which they actually serve. The test is not so much whether they actually carry cards in the Communist Party and thereby aid the Communist movement, but the test is, Do their deeds serve communism and communistic aggression?

Second, it operates through its satellites or puppets, employing their armed forces for purposes of aggression. This is the story of the North Koreans and the Chinese Reds. No one knows this better than the American boys now serving in Korea against these evil forces. Only 2 days ago, the Senate adopted a resolution asserting it to be the sense of the Senate that the United Nations should immediately declare Communist China to be an aggressor in Korea. Everyone who had ears and who wanted to hear knew that Communist China was an aggressor. Certainly the boys at the front did not require a statement by the Senate of the United States to know that Communist and Socialist and Red China was an aggressor. This is imperialist Communist aggression, even though no Russian soldier may be engaged in the conflict. The movement emanates from Russia as the second front of its imperialist designs.

Third. Communism stands ready with the tremendous Russian military machine to enforce its objectives where either of its other two tactics fail or are insufficient.

We are now preparing to defend against the naked aggression of the second and third tactics. We are planning to spend something like $70,000,000,000 a year to build up a resistance force against the armed aggression of Russia and its satellites.

But what of the first front—internal penetration?

This is the front on which the ultimate battles will be fought and where ultimate solutions lie.

Mr. President, even though a nation be defeated by the military might of communism, it will finally end up by facing internal penetration and the destruction of the rights and the liberties of its citizens. As such it can have no less than equal importance with the military front, for it can sabotage the military effort.

This is the front upon which Russia, since 1945, has increased its dominion from 15 percent of the world's land area to 30 percent, and from less than 10 percent of the world's population to approximately 33 percent. This was the method used in taking over China, with the exception of those persons who are now acting as guerrillas in China, and those who are on Formosa. It did not take a Russian gun to make China a puppet of the Communist world.

I scarcely need to recall the tortuous struggle which has gone on within this country to establish protections against this device of internal penetration by communism. Members of Congress all recall the rocky road of the House Un-American Activities Committee. I recall vividly the attempts of an investigating subcommittee of which I was chairman in 1948 to pierce the iron curtain at home and inquire into the operations of the Government's loyalty program. We ran head on, as have so many other committees of Congress, into a refusal by the executive departments to open their doors for inspection.

Essentially, the struggle to protect against the internal penetration of communism in this country has revolved about a contest between the executive branch and the Congress. For many years strong sentiment in Congress has sought to erect barriers to the penetration of Communist influences in America by their exposure and by efforts at corrective legislation.

Equally strong sentiment in the executive branch has sought to minimize the threat by dismissing it as nonexistent and by defying congressional efforts to prevent it. The executive branch has taken the position that any problem which exists in this field can be solved by executive decree. Hence the listing of subversive organizations by the Attorney General. Hence the Government loyalty boards, which are responsible only to the Executive and which in fact are limited so that they may not pass upon the fundamental question of security, as against the abstruse question of loyalty.

Mr. President, under Executive order today, if a person who had been a Communist in the 1940's or the 1930's and carried a Communist card at that time comes before a loyalty board and denies that he was such a Communist, thereby committing perjury, he cannot be taken from the public payroll unless perchance the perjury can be proved on the spot. Knowing how difficult it is to prove perjury, this is a strange standard. As I have previously stated, it is not a question of whether or not he carries a Communist card. The question is whether he is serving communism. Is he serving communism rather than the fundamental principles of the Republic for which he is now working? That is a test of security and the meaning of loyalty.

From this independent attitude of the executive branch which I have described comes also the untiring defiance of Congress by the President, when the Congress has sought information on possible subversion from executive files.

But this problem of internal defense cannot be solved unilaterally, by the President or by mere decrees.

We are a nation owing allegiance to laws, and not to men. This is a problem which must be solved by laws. Laws are the function of Congress. But to have proper and effective laws with which to protect our liberties and our freedoms we must have the facts. They must be facts developed by the Congress to its own satisfaction, in order to discharge its functions and responsibilities.

The President has consistently opposed that point of view by a determination to substitute his facts and his decrees.

There now comes a new and highly significant development in the struggle to protect this Nation on the first front of Communist aggression which is through internal penetration.

The President has just appointed another commission to deal with problems of loyalty and internal security.

This latest move is extremely unfortunate because it plainly appears to be another maneuver by the President which is bound to create strained relations between the Executive and Congress. The whole history of loyalty and security in Government service has been one long series of attempts by the President to thwart the Congress in its attempt to protect the country from subversive influences.

There is at this moment pending in Congress Senate Resolution 27, Eighty-second Congress, introduced by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to set up a Senate bipartisan commission to investigate loyalty and security cases. There has also been set up in the Judiciary Committee a bipartisan investigating subcommittee to deal with the subject through Senate Resolution 366, Eighty-first Congress. These actions in Congress have come about after several years of deplorable conditions in the executive branch in the matter of loyalty and security cases.

At this moment the President has still another board, provided for under Public Law 831 of the Eighty-first Congress, the Internal Security Act. That Board is presently compromised in its functioning because the President has not submitted the names of his appointees to the Senate. Can it be that by appointing his own new board, the President intends to ignore the laws and procedures provided by Congress?

When the President, by Executive order, creates a new commission on the same subject, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that once again the President seeks to foreclose congressional action on these vital matters. It is difficult to escape the feeling that the President once again has been persuaded by his advisers to cloak the subject with confusion in the hope that nothing effective will be done about security risks in Government service.

These advisers—whoever they are—have reason to fear Congress. It has only been through the insistent pressure of Congress that people like Marzani, Hiss, Wadleigh, Remington, and others have been brought to light. It will be only through Congress that the State Department and other agencies of Government will be cleared of security risks. People of questionable standing in the executive departments know that, and hence they are determined to keep all loyalty and security investigations in hands they can control.

There are many aspects about the President's latest move that should give Congress occasion for sober thought.

The President's Executive order amounts to the setting up of a commission which to all intents and purposes is above the status of duly constituted committees of Congress.

The President's commission, which is appointed by him, is responsible only to him. It should be made clear that it is not a commission which is elected by the people, or is responsible to the people, as Members of Congress are responsible. If the people of the United States understood that the only purpose of the commission was to advise the President of the United States, it would be one thing. I fear that the commission will be accepted as something much more than it is, as a substitute for the fact-finding and policy-making functions of Congress. I fear that is intentionally its design.

The President's commission is given powers which the President has denied to Congress.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the able Senator from Michigan whether the Constitution contains any authority for such an appointment by the President.

Mr. FERGUSON. I know of no such authority in the Constitution, for an executive commission to displace the functions of Congress. However, if the President merely wants personal advice on the subject, I believe the Constitution would allow him to seek such personal advice from a commission which he could name, or from people whose advise he sought.

Mr. KEM. Does not the Executive order in the present case contemplate that certain power or authority shall be vested in the commission? In other words, is the commission purely advisory?

Mr. FERGUSON. No; the announcement of the appointment of the commission suggests an attempt to go much further than merely seeking advice from it.

Mr. KEM. Under the Constitution, is it not the duty and responsibility of the legislative branch of the Government to set up such a body?

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Massachusetts has introduced a bill under which such a commission would be created for the purpose of doing the job on behalf of the people.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan whether or not the proposed commission represents another instance of the apparent desire on the part of the President to build up the power and authority of the executive branch of the Government at the expense of the legislative branch.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator is absolutely correct. It is sad to contemplate that we should be faced continuously with such action on the part of the President. The same question presented itself very forcibly when the President said, in effect, that the Army belonged to the President, and that he could send it wherever he wanted to send it and use it in any way he wanted to use it. Of course, since then he has shown some realization that such a position on his part will not satisfy the people of America.

Mr. KEM. Has not the President done more than merely claim such authority? Has he not actually exercised such authority in issuing the order under which the Armed Forces of the United States went into battle in Korea?

Mr. FERGUSON. The President claimed that he was acting under a statute which authorized him to send troops to Korea in order to carry out orders or executive decrees of the United Nations.

Mr. KEM. Was that subject referred to in the original press release which was read to the Senate by the majority leader? My recollection is that it was not referred to.

Mr. FERGUSON. I do not recall that it was referred to in the original press release.

Mr. KEM. Was that not the first time the Senate knew of the action which the President of the United States had taken?

Mr. FERGUSON. That was the first time that the Senator from Michigan knew about it, and I am sure the Senate had not previously known about it. I know of no conferences that were held with Representatives of Congress and I know of no word that had come to the Senate prior to that time.

Mr. KEM. I shall not tax the Senator much further. I should like to ask him whether he does not regard it as one of the most pressing and important problems, not only before the Congress, but before the American people as well, who love the Constitution, to see that the elected Representatives of the people resume their constitutional functions, as intended by the founding fathers?

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Missouri has stated the problem very clearly. The issue is drawn when we look at the Constitution, which separates the powers of the Federal Government among three coordinate branches. That separation of powers was a device to protect a basic conception of the inalienable rights of the people, of rights which may not be taken from them except by their consent and as a gift from them. Under the Constitution we have a government of limited jurisdictions, because sovereignty is in the people. The people reserve to themselves certain inalienable rights. The Constitution and its concept of inalienable rights of the people stands. But somehow or other we are losing the philosophy, the mores which holds that government is the servant of the people. When such powers are taken from the jurisdiction of the legislative branch of the Government, whose representatives in the House are elected from districts, and in the Senate from States as a whole, it is in effect taking rights away from the people of the United States. When that is done we no longer have the Republic as it was conceived and created by the founding fathers.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to ask the Senator several questions having to do with his very able address and presentation of this important subject. I came to the Chamber only a few minutes ago. I assume the Senator is speaking of the new loyalty commission, which is to be headed by Admiral Nimitz.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. First, I should like to say that my attitude with respect to the commission was inadvertently misrepresented in the public press the other day, when at least one article stated that I had praised the appointment. I did not mean to indicate that I approved or praised the creation of the new loyalty commission. I praised Admiral Nimitz as a highly patriotic American citizen, for whom I have great personal admiration.

Mr. FERGUSON. I join the Senator in that statement. I trust my remarks regarding the commission will not be misunderstood as reflecting upon the character or qualifications of Admiral Nimitz.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I did not express approval of the appointment of the commission. I fear it will be compounding evils already in existence. I should like to ask the Senator whether he feels any commission of this kind, arbitrarily set up under the complete and sole control—and secret control—of the President, can possibly operate to clear out the known subversives and fellow travelers in Government so long as the Executive order under which it operates requires the commission to find that an individual is at the moment of hearing a member of the Communist Party, and limits it to that particular finding before the commission can act?

Mr. FERGUSON. I think it is absolutely impossible. It is merely an attempt to lull the people into a sense of security which does not actually exist. The test is not, as I have already said, whether an individual carries a membership card in the Communist Party on the day of the order or the date of the hearing. The test is, Does he owe allegiance to the Communist movement of the world, and is he carrying out such allegiance, instead of being loyal to the Republic of the United States of America?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like more specifically to bring a case to the attention of the Senator and see if his understanding of the general principles involved is virtually the same as mine.

Let us take the Remington case, which is now pending in the courts. It is my understanding that the so-called Loyalty Board which, as a Government agency, cleared Mr. Remington some time ago, cleared him, among other things, on the basis that, while they admitted there was reasonable ground to believe that he had been a Communist at some time in the past, yet his denial that he was now a Communist was an obstacle over which they could not jump, in the light of the President's restrictive order that they must find him to be now a Communist or he could not be discharged from public office. Does the Senator understand that there is a great element of that particular factor in these investigations?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; I do. I understand that that is the claim of the Loyalty Board.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That is my understanding, too.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Arthur Krock, of the New York Times, has written a column upon the subject, clearly pointing that out to be the position of the Loyalty Board. Until recently the Senator from Michigan could not fathom how the Loyalty Board was able to clear Mr. Remington. The Senator from Michigan does not fully understand as yet, unless the answer is as given by the Senator from Iowa and Mr. Krock, how it was possible to clear him, when the Board's own files showed evidence that there was reason to believe that he had been a Communist, or owed allegiance to communism. As I have previously indicated I do not draw a distinction between membership and allegiance when it is a question of loyalty.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Leaving the Remington case, as a particular case, out of consideration, and taking a hypothetical case, I believe that the facts which I state are true, and that what I have described as to procedure is true. Therefore, under the President's recent order, which so restricts the Loyalty Board, if it follows his order it can scarcely operate. This is the illustration:

Assume that an individual was proved beyond all doubt, by his own admission, to have been a Communist for the past 7 or 8 years, up until 6 months ago, we will say. He states, at the time of the loyalty examination, "It is true that I had been a Communist for a long period of time, but for the past several months or a year I have not been a member of the Communist Party." The Loyalty Board is unable to produce proof that he is at this moment a member of the Communist Party, although it may have strong reason to believe that he may secretly be a member. Under the President's order, if it were followed strictly, the Board would be required to clear that man, because the Board could not produce positive proof that he was at that particular moment a member of the Communist Party.

I believe that the order has been interpreted as going that far, and that it virtually ties the hands of any loyalty board. The President has established one board on top of another, which compounds confusion in the matter. Any loyalty board established under his recent order could not function unless it could produce proof positive that at the present moment—not yesterday, last week, or last month, but at this moment—the man is an active, operating Communist. The Communists have ordered their members to go underground, to deny their membership, and conceal every activity they can. That makes the order practically unworkable. I wonder if the Senator agrees.

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree that is what the Board interprets the order to mean. It is now coming to light for the first time that for all these years the Board has been functioning under an order which it believes should be so interpreted as to require proof of disloyalty, as of the time of the hearings.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I invite the Senator's attention to a report filed by one of the departments. I have not seen it for some months. I will not name the department. I am sure that the Senator must be familiar with the report.

The examining board went through the department and found and reported, for example, 28 or 30 individuals whom it found to be actually disloyal. The board restored to their former status and pay and returned to work 40 or 50 other individuals whom the board itself stated it strongly suspected. The board strongly doubted their loyalty to the United States, but it was unable to prove an overt act in the past few months. Therefore those employees were restored to their jobs, even though the board strongly suspected them, and was of the opinion, without proof of an overt act, that they were disloyal. Is the Senator familiar with that report?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am not familiar with the particular report, but I am familiar with the fact that there has been that interpretation of the board's function. I am also familiar with the fact that on as many as three occasions when the Loyalty Board itself had every reason to believe that there was evidence of disloyalty, an individual's case was directed to be reviewed by the loyalty board of the particular department, but each time the case was sent back to the over-all Board. There was so much question about the person's loyalty that the case was sent back three times; yet, all that time the person was on the payroll of the Government.

I know it to be a fact that on occasion there would be an order in the personnel file of an individual to the effect that because of the strong suspicion and evidence of disloyalty, the particular employee was not to see any confidential papers. While that person was working for the Government, and while the order was in the file, the man for whom the person was working as secretary did not even know that such an order was in the file, and was allowing the secretary to see all the documents which came across his desk.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I shall not trespass further on the Senator's time.

Does the Senator believe that we will ever get a vigorous job done in cleaning subversives out of the American Government, in the interest of the American public, until the Executive and the department heads of the Government are themselves determined to do an honest and sincere job of cleaning them out?

Mr. FERGUSON. That is the opinion of the Senator from Michigan. Until those who have had working for them persons who have been disloyal, or with respect to whom there is evidence of disloyalty, come to the conclusion that they are willing to confess error, subversives are not going to be cleaned out.

What we need is men occupying these positions who will do what General Lee did. When Pickett made his famous charge at Gettysburg and lost practically his entire army, and came in tears and blood to where General Lee sat upon his horse watching the charge, General Lee said even before Pickett could speak, "It was my mistake." Such honesty, and a capacity for self-criticism, is what we need in Government. Not maintenance of vested interest in error, but confession of error is what we need.

I welcome the colloquy with the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Iowa. Before departing from my prepared remarks I had observed that the President gives to the new Commission powers which he has denied to Congress. The President has directed all executive departments and agencies of the Federal Government to cooperate with the Commission. When Congress, in the past, sought to get such cooperation, the President either denied it outright or so limited the cooperation that Congress' hands were tied.

Mr. President, an admiral in the United States Navy appeared before a Senate committee on which I was serving, and told the committee that by direct orders of the President he could not testify. It happens we were seeking certain loyalty data which he alone was in a position to provide. How can the Congress solve its problems when its hands are tied in that way?

The President's Commission now being appointed is to have, it is said, access to all classified information and even individual files which the President has denied to Members of Congress.

I should like someone to explain on the Senate floor, in behalf of the President of the United States, how it can be possible that he should refuse that kind of data to a committee of the United States Senate, whose Members are elected by the people of their respective States, while he now says he is willing to give it to nine members of a commission to be appointed by himself, individuals who have not been elected by the people of the United States and therefore hold no direct responsibility to them. How can he now say that he will not only give such data to the Commission, but that he will give it also to their hundreds of employees, whereas he denies to give, even in executive session, that kind of evidence to the Congress of the United States and its duly selected congressional committees, composed of persons who have been elected by and are directly responsible to the people. I should like to have that explained upon the Senate floor. I believe the people of the United States are entitled to such an explanation.

The Commission is to be vested with power to make recommendations for legislation. Does that not suggest an infringement of the powers of congressional committees? It is the basic duty of the committees of the Congress to look into the question of what legislation may be needed and enacted.

In fact, the Commission will have all the powers normally possessed by standing committees of Congress, and in addition it will have powers which the President denies to Congress.

Congress will do well to ponder the significance of this condition. Already the executive department has encroached heavily on the functions and powers of the legislative department. And now we have the President setting up a committee which is superior to a congressional committee in a field squarely within the province of Congress.

This Commission is directed to do what Congress must do itself. Congress has been trying for 4 years to develop the true facts on which legislation must be based. The President has thus far not only failed to cooperate with Congress, but has affirmatively denied Congress the facts it must have. Congress cannot take the recommendations of this Commission as the facts. It must have and develop the facts for itself.

In his statement the President declares he wants to keep security problems from falling into the arena of "partisanship." But his own action in seeking to foreclose Congress by the appointment of an independent commission is itself a partisan action. The President alone is to designate the Chairman, Vice Chairman, and all other members of his Commission. His appointments will not be subject to the advice or consent of the Senate. That in itself is a partisan action because we know how such commissions have been selected in the past. From past history we know they will assert their independence of Congress. We know they will refuse to cooperate with Congress. We know they will withhold information from Congress. What is this, then, but a partisan device?

What the President did as a unilateral action should have been done in cooperation with Congress. The President's statement on the appointment of this new Commission should have been addressed to Congress, asking for cooperation. Congress is a bipartisan body—the legislature of all the people. Its Members are the representatives of the people—elected by the people and responsible to the people. Loyalty and security is the people's business. The President almost intimates that he does not trust the Congress.

Some uncomfortable conclusions stem from the President's latest act:

First. The creation of yet another commission looks like an attempt to foreclose congressional action on the public business.

Second. The creation of such a commission looks like a further encroachment of the executive on the legislative body because the President's commission parallels congressional committees and is vested with powers superior to congressional committees.

Third. The President's action looks like an attempt at further confusion of loyalty and security matters which are now confusion worse confounded.

Fourth. The President's action comes close to an open disregard for Public Law 831, passed by the Eighty-first Congress expressly to deal with internal security and subversive matters. O, the Senate well knows what the President thinks of that law, for he vetoed it, but notwithstanding his veto it was passed.

Fifth. Even though the President speaks of nonpartisan treatment of loyalty and security matters—and, Mr. President, I say in utmost sincerity that nothing should be further from politics than the matter of loyalty and security in the United States—his act in setting up this Commission by his sole appointment of its members and by vesting the Commission with powers denied to standing congressional committees, is itself a partisan action.

I fear the only result to come from this is further confusion, further strained relations between the President and Congress, and continuing danger to the country from subversion, disloyalty, and security risks in an hour of great peril for America.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONG in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator if a commission set up by Executive order has the power to compel attendance of witnesses and require their testimony?

Mr. FERGUSON. I cannot positively answer the question propounded by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Would the Senator as a lawyer venture the opinion that is something which is very doubtful?

Mr. FERGUSON. I would consider it very doubtful. The Senator's question is most pertinent. If the Commission is to function at all effectively, even no more than to advise the President, it would have to be in the position of subpenaing witnesses, and taking their testimony under oath, upon which a charge of perjury might be based. Those powers are clearly possessed by committees of Congress, of course, and that is one reason the committees are very effective.

Mr. KEM. Such an order runs in the name of the United States of America, does it not?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, it would have to.

Mr. KEM. Could it be issued otherwise than by means of the authority of the Congress of the United States?

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree that it would have to come under some law enacted by the Congress.

Mr. KEM. The Senator does not know of any law by which the Congress has authorized the issuance of such subpenas, does he?

Mr. FERGUSON. By the new Commission? No, I know of none. That is why I doubt that such subpena authority exists. On the other hand, I do not see how such an agency can function effectively without that authority.

Mr. President, in the course of my colloquy with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] I cited an article by Mr. Arthur Krock in the New York Times for January 23, and quoted indirectly from it. I now ask unanimous consent to have the article printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BASIC PROBLEM OF LOYALTY REVIEW BOARD

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, January 22.—The members of the new and statutory Subversive Activities Control Board, headed by Seth W. Richardson, still await confirmation by the Senate as they proceed with the early stages of their onerous task. The members of the President's Loyalty Review Board, which is not statutory and therefore is not subject to confirmation, are working under a different kind of handicap. But one difficulty which confronts both groups has its origin in Executive Order No. 9835.

Though Mr. Richardson is a North Dakota Republican of undeviating party record, Republican Senators whose domestic and foreign policies are much like his own are obstructing and opposing his confirmation on the ground that the Loyalty Review Board, when he was its chairman, cleared of disloyalty charges William W. Remington, then an official of the Department of Commerce, now on trial for perjury growing out of charges that he denied to a grand jury former association with the Communist Party. But the terms of Executive Order No. 9835 virtually dictated that clearance.

EFFECT OF THE EXECUTIVE ORDER

Former Senator Hiram Bingham, also a Republican, who succeeded Mr. Richardson as Chairman of the LRB, is about to wrestle with the same obstacle in trying to eliminate and bar disloyal persons from the public service. If the Board's terms of reference remain as they are Mr. Bingham may find himself under the same attack as Mr. Richardson.

The sources of the trouble, past and current, are to be found in the circumstances that Executive Order No. 9835 directs the LRB (1) to confine its judgment to whether or not a Government employee is loyal, and (2) bars an adverse judgment on the basis of reasonable doubt of that loyalty or on remote evidence or implication of past disloyalty. Thus, while the LRB members might feel reasonable doubt of an employee's loyalty, or regard a loyal employee as a security risk just the same, or find in the remote evidence grounds for belief that disloyalty still exists, they are under Presidential direction to clear that employee when his case comes before them for review.

Under this directive the Board tried and cleared Remington when Mr. Richardson was Chairman. But, regardless of whether this clearance is supported by the New York City jury, Mr. Bingham also will be similarly limited in other trials, and probably he also will be attacked by fellow Republicans.

The ban on "reasonable doubt" of loyalty as an adverse finding was not included in the civil-service regulations of 1942, which grew out of President Roosevelt's Executive Orders Nos. 9063 and 9243. This made it possible to bar or dismiss Federal employees on such grounds, which also permitted consideration of the risk element of security as well as loyalty. The LRB under both Messrs. Richardson and Bingham has no such latitude because its standards of judgment were promulgated in 1947 when the threat of world communism to American security was not recognized by the Executive to the degree it is today. If these standards are not changed from the 1947 to the 1942 type, the Bingham board will have the same experiences it had under Mr. Richardson.

The order of 1947 applies only to executive employees. It can be applied and enforced only if, "on all the evidence, reasonable grounds exist for belief that the person involved is disloyal to the Government of the United States" now, and the fact that the Board may consider him loyal but a security risk does not give it basis for an adverse finding. Obedient to this order, the LRB has consistently found that youthful, including student, activities and associations were insufficient grounds for a judgment of disloyalty if there was nothing in the employee's record of later years to indicate a continuation of such earlier beliefs and activities.

APPROVED BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

The Executive order of 1947 uses the words "loyalty" and "disloyalty" in all sections, even to the authority given the LRB to make rules and regulations relating to "employee loyalty." Hence, it being plain that the Board is given no other test for investigation and adjudication, the LRB at no time has sought to deal with the question of security. Its members concluded that, while an employee's morals or habits or lack of discretion or personal associations might readily raise the issue of security risk, these could not be used to determine the issue of loyalty with which alone it was empowered to deal.

But Mr. Richardson asked the Attorney General if this interpretation by the Board of Executive Order No. 9835 was correct, just to be certain it wasn't too literal and legalistic. The Attorney General specifically affirmed the interpretation. That was the standard by which it judged the cases of Remington and others, and that is the standard by which Mr. Bingham will have to abide if the order is not expanded and he decides to try to work within the close limitation of its terms.

If and when the Republican Senators who, with some Democrats, are holding up confirmation of Mr. Richardson and his fellow appointees begin their hearings on the subject, prior to advising the Senate whether to approve or disapprove all or some members of the Subversive Activities Control Board, these pertinent facts will enter the official record.

A TRIBUTE TO GEN. DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, AND AN ESTIMATE OF THE RESULTS OF THE ACTION IN KOREA

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words to mark an important occasion which will occur tomorrow. I understand that the Senate will not be in session tomorrow, so I speak on this matter today.

On Friday, January 26, America will celebrate the seventy-first birthday of one of her greatest sons, a man in whom we in Wisconsin take particular pride because of his deep roots in our State. I refer, of course, to Gen. Douglas MacArthur, supreme commander of the United Nations forces in Korea, chief of America's military occupation of Japan, hero of Bataan.

Because of the million of words which have been written about this distinguished soldier and administrator, there is very little one can add at this point. It is enough to say, however, that history undoubtedly will honor him not only as one of the great men of our times, but as one of the greatest Americans in our entire history.

Most Americans believed that General MacArthur's exploits in World War II probably would represent the climax in his career: his amazing return from Australia, up the chain of Pacific islands; his brilliant strategy in the Pacific campaign, which—with a minimum of casualties—ended with the signing of the Japanese surrender aboard the battleship Missouri. Those achievements seemed to be the greatest of his career. But still greater triumphs were in the making. General MacArthur's accomplishments in Japan are the work of an administrative genius. When we compare those accomplishments with what our administrators have been doing in Europe, we reach that definite conclusion. At noon today I had lunch with three of Japan's great leaders, one of whom was governor of the Bank of Japan. In speaking about MacArthur, he said, "MacArthur we respect, we honor; we have an affectionate regard for him. We almost love him."

LET US NOT BE TOO QUICK IN RENDERING JUDGMENT

What about Korea, Mr. President? This gives me an opportunity to say something about judgment. Let us not be too quick in rendering judgment in regard to the Korean situation. It has been fashionable for certain swivel-chair generals—and I refer in particular to civilians who pretend to be all-wise in military affairs—to assume that Korea is an entire fiasco, a closed book, with absolutely no redeeming points at all. I believe that Korea was a trap for us, of course; and I believe that we fell into it. I believe that the Russians purposely had their representatives keep away from the United Nations. However, those things do not prove that the action in Korea has been a fiasco. We should realize that the final chapter in the Korean story has not as yet been written. Let us not forget that, although at first there was practically universal criticism of our military policy, at the time when American forces fell back under the North Korean attack in the first few days of the war, yet at long last the United States mounted its counteroffensive, and we saw in the brilliant landing at Inchon the finest type of military master stroke. Let us not be so quick, therefore, in attempting to render final judgment.

THERE ARE SOME ASSETS IN THE KOREAN VENTURE

Yes, Mr. President, although the news from Korea has been grim, and is today, let us not forget that for all of its liabilities—and they are many and grave—there have been some notable successes in the Korean venture thus far.

I personally, of course, have pointed out that unfortunately our Korean adventure seems to have been playing into Russia's hands.

What is Russia's technique? It is, first, penetration by every known means, including propaganda, fear, hatred, division. By those means Russia took over 150,000,000 people in Europe. That is the first prong of the Russian technique. By means of the same prong she tried to penetrate Southern Korea, where the United Nations had been building up the country and had succeeded to such an extent that the Southern Koreans declined, despite the Russian propaganda penetration, to choose the Communist philosophy or way.

Then Russia used the second prong of her technique. She sent into action one of her stooges, the North Koreans, whom she had armed and equipped. After we defeated the North Koreans, Russia called on another of her stooges, the Chinese Communists. Russia has stooges all over the world.

Russia has not yet used the third prong of her technique, and probably she will not use it until she has exhausted her stooges.

Mr. President, I have spoken of the fact that there are some assets in the case of the Korean adventure, and I shall enumerate them. At this point I must say that all of us have followed with sorrow the casualty lists, as the cost in human lives has mounted higher and higher. Yet, as I have said, there is an assets side of the Korean ledger. What are the assets?

KOREA HAS PROVED RED CONSPIRACY

First. For one thing, the invasion by North Korea and then by Red China has shown the American people, if any further proof was necessary, the true nature of the Communist conspiracy to control the world.

Mr. President, in my humble opinion, that caused a tremendous explosion in the minds of the people of the United States and in the minds of the people of the world.

Second. It has alerted America, so that now we are embarked on a gigantic preparedness program, a program by which we will make sure, we trust, that never again will our country be caught in a Pearl Harbor-like surprise attack, helpless and defenseless, either within or without. We might not have embarked on that preparedness program, had it not been for the developments in Korea.

Third. Equally important, the Korean invasion has shown all the free peoples of the world how Russia intends to use her stooges for the second stage of her assault on the West or in Iran or Turkey or Greece.

Korea has brought about a reawakening of the Western Allies, as I pointed out in an address delivered in New York last Wednesday night. France, England, and other countries have stepped up their plans for an increased number of infantry divisions, and have increased their appropriations for defense purposes. Turkey has proved her proud mettle in combat.

KOREA HAS PROVED MILITARY MIGHT IS CRUCIAL

Fourth. Korea has shown that military strength in our allies must be of major concern to us. Korea has shown how imperatively necessary it is for us therefore to mobilize Japan, Germany, Spain, and other countries which we have not adequately utilized to date, so that they can become bastions of defense—military assets, rather than liabilities.

Mr. President, if we consider the situation which existed a few months ago, we remember that at that time we were complacent and unalert, just as we were at the time of Pearl Harbor. Think of the change which has occurred as of today. No one questions the need; no one is doubtful as to the seriousness of the situation; today no one doubts why Russia has built snorkel submarines and is building bombs. No, Mr. President; today we are alert, we are going to work; we are embarking upon a broad production program; we are going to be ready for whatever may happen.

UNITED NATIONS MAY YET BE VINDICATED

Fifth. The North Korean invasion galvanized the United Nations into action. While, more recently, when we have suffered reverses, the UN has shown itself to be dragging its feet in labeling Red China as an aggressor, it is our prayer that the United Nations will yet vindicate itself. It is our prayer that it will find within itself the capacity to be adequate to the present situation.

It is the hope of the world that in this challenging period the United Nations will not fail us. This is no time for us to abandon the United Nations. It is the great beacon of hope for mankind. Through the ages, hungering humanity has sought peace. Is the United Nations to be but another wreck on the shore of time? I say, Mr. President, let not America wreck it. Let us give hope. Let us also appreciate that the nations which are members of the United Nations are seeking help, and are fearful. They need our strength. They need our guidance. Yes, it is easy enough for us, with two oceans between us and the Russian bear, to be supremely confident at times perhaps; but we should be considerate of those who are next door, only a matter of minutes from the Russian airplanes. Let us be thoughtful of them, and helpful. But let us build toward security and adequacy.

KOREA HAS SHOWN UNITED STATES STRENGTHS AND WEAKNESSES

Sixth. The Korean adventure has shown us both the strengths and weaknesses of our fighting forces. It has proved that the American soldier, given the right equipment, is the greatest fighting man in the world. It has proved how our Army, Navy, and Air Forces can cooperate brilliantly, such as in the masterful evacuation of Hungnam. It has shown that American jet planes are the superiors of at least those Russian-made jets which have been brought into action. We do not know whether they are her best planes or not.

At the same time, Korea has proved that much of our military thinking, at least in situations involving that type of terrain, was inadequate, that our weapons could be considerably improved, and that strategies of land warfare should be revised accordingly.

Someone has said that Korea is the Spain of a third world war. I trust that will not prove to be true. I am hoping that what has happened in Korea will teach the Russians that, with the revitalized spirit of the free people of earth, this is no time for her to start a third world war.

KOREA HAS WRECKED RED CHINESE TIMETABLE

Seventh. By our action in Korea we have already destroyed much of the flower of at least one corps of the Chinese Red army. We have pinned down a tremendous number of Chinese Red troops which might otherwise be prepared for action against Formosa, southeast Asia, and so forth.

These are some of the assets amid the liabilities, if we may call them that, of the Korean venture on the world chessboard. Who knows what the imponderable events of tomorrow may prove about Korea?

So I contend, Mr. President, that all these various factors must be weighed in the balance against the admitted liabilities of the Korean chapter.

At this time, because we recognize that all the world is a chessboard, a play here has certain repercussions on another play yonder. Certainly by our own invention the world has been contracted, so to speak. With our planes, which attain speeds of from 900 to 1,000 miles an hour, and with our weapons, the world is now a small place. We must realize that things have changed even since 1939.

At this time we can recall the philosophy of early American patriots, who warned us that those who expected to enjoy the blessings of freedom would also have to expect to make sacrifices to maintain freedom. "Tyranny," said Tom Paine, "like hell, is not easily conquered."

LET NOT DOUGLAS MAC ARTHUR BE BELITTLED

Let not the armchair generals belittle, ridicule, and defame one of our greatest sons, Douglas MacArthur, a man who has hardly had the freedom of action worthy of his role. Actually, he needs no defense on my part or on the part of any other American. Why? Because his thundering actions and his epic successes speak louder than all the words which we could possibly utter in his behalf.

The American people have not lost and will not lose their faith in this great American. He stands as a great pillar of strength. His patriotism is unquestioned; his vigor, his alertness, his enterprise, in spite of advanced years, are respected by every American. His years are not really advanced. I saw a man yesterday, who is, I believe, 9 years older than General MacArthur—Mr. Cordell Hull, and his mind is as keen as a razor's edge. So is Gen. Douglas MacArthur's. He is respected by every American.

As one Wisconsonite to another, I salute General MacArthur. I pray that the day may not be far distant when in a more peaceful and more secure time, his mission completed, he may return to these shores. Then may he receive the honors at first hand which are so deservedly his, after his long years of absence from his native land.

EUROPEAN PREPARATION AND WILL TO RESIST RUSSIAN AGGRESSION

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, last December I sent a letter to the President of the United States requesting that he provide Congress with the facts regarding the condition of Europe's preparedness and its will to resist Russian aggression. At that time I was confronted on the one hand by reports that the people of Western Europe were demoralized and sick of war, and that they lacked the will to stand up to Soviet aggression. On the other hand, there were reports, largely advanced by the administration, that the people of Europe had the will to resist Communist aggression, that their courage and determination were vibrant and alive, and that all that was needed was an assurance of American backing.

When I dispatched my letter to the President it was my hope that he would promptly provide the information at the disposal of the executive department regarding the preparedness of the European Nations to defend themselves from a military point of view, and also whether or not they were able to unite as one economic unit so that their resources would be integrated for defense purposes.

It seemed to me then, as it does now, that with the sharp conflict between the views of former President Hoover and those of the administration with respect to the will of Europe to defend itself and its state of preparedness, a statement of facts by the administration on which its conclusions that our western allies meant business was founded, was needed, if we were to act intelligently.

It should be apparent that if Europe does not have the will to defend itself, that if its morale is so low that it will not fight, and that if it has done practically nothing to prepare itself against an attack, then the United States would be justified in pursuing the course proposed by Mr. Hoover.

On the other hand, if our European allies are firm in their will to fight, and are preparing their defenses with all the resources at their command, we should then be bound by the terms of the Atlantic Pact to support them with such efforts in both an economic and military way as we should deem necessary under the circumstances. In other words, our future course of conduct in Western Europe, and in fact as a part of the defense of the free world against aggression, would largely be determined by what the true situation is in Europe with regard to the questions which have been raised.

Under date of January 23, 1951, the President replied to my letter of last December. He informed me that he had been undertaking the preparation of a reply containing information of the type I had requested, but that events have been moving so rapidly he had now come to the conclusion that the purpose of my letter could best be served by waiting a short time until General Eisenhower returns from Europe.

The President went on to say that General Eisenhower no doubt will have a large amount of new information which he will give to Congress soon after he reaches Washington and that that information will do a great deal to help clarify the questions which I raised in my letter.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, following my remarks, a letter which I addressed to the President, and his reply thereto, to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONG in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to thank the President of the United States for his letter. It is good to know that it is the President's intention to have General Eisenhower report to the Congress as well as to the executive branch. The whole Nation wants the facts first-hand. It is my hope that General Eisenhower, on his short and hurried trip to Europe, will be able to get first-hand information on the vital questions raised.

Mr. President, the condition of our relationships with the world's non-Communist nations should give us cause for alarm. There are indications that some of the nations we thought were standing by us in courage and determination are faltering as the time for decision approaches.

Great Britain, our great wartime friend and ally, is divided between its hesitancy at offending the United States and its fear of Red China and her Russian ally. Present reports indicate that it is doubtful the British Government will support United Nations condemnation of Communist China as an aggressor. The British Government hesitates even while her troops are fighting and dying in the battle against armed Communist aggression in Korea.

At the very moment that India seeks 2,000,000 tons of American wheat, her Prime Minister has rebuked the United States for its sponsorship of a United Nations resolution to brand Red China an aggressor in Korea. The Government of India is in the forefront of the drive to admit Red China to the United Nations, even while Red China is conducting a war of aggression against the United Nations in Korea.

The Arab states, who are closely tied to Great Britain by bonds of friendship and trade, are joined with Great Britain and India in the desire to avoid indicting Red China as an aggressor in Korea.

Some of our friends and allies have extended diplomatic recognition to the government of Red China. There are repeated reports that Great Britain and some of our other friends are engaged in brisk and profitable trade with Red China.

Some of the items being sent to Communist China are suitable for military use and will therefore aid the Communist Chinese armed forces in their aggression in Korea and planned aggression elsewhere in Asia.

Under the North Atlantic Pact the United States joined with the nations of Western Europe in a defensive alliance in which it was agreed that an attack on one of the member nations is in effect an attack on all, and that all will promptly come to the assistance of any member which has been subjected to an armed attack. In that respect, let me quote paragraph 1 of article 5 of the treaty. That paragraph is the pledge of mutual assistance which all nations have taken who are members of the North Atlantic Treaty organization:

> The parties agree that an armed attack against one or more of them in Europe or North America shall be considered an attack against them all; and consequently they agree that, if such an armed attack occurs, each of them, in the exercise of the right of individual or collective self-defense recognized by article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, will assist the party or parties so attacked by taking forthwith, individually and in concert with the other parties, such action as it deems necessary, including the use of armed force, to restore and maintain the security of the North Atlantic area.

The North Atlantic Pact recognizes the right of self-defense as a sovereign right of all nations. It in no way impairs any signatory nation's right to defend itself from an armed attack by the use of armed force.

The North Atlantic Pact is a pledge of mutual assistance in the event of an attack. It imposes an obligation on each of the signatory powers to come to the assistance of any one or more of the pact members who have been attacked. There is no such obligation, however, if the attack is not made in the general area of the North Atlantic and North America.

In respect to the geographical area of the world covered by the North Atlantic Pact and in which an attack must occur before the obligation of mutual assistance comes into play, let me quote article 6 of the treaty:

For the purpose of article 5 an armed attack on one or more of the parties is deemed to include an armed attack on the territory of any of the parties in Europe or North America, on the Algerian departments of France, on the occupation forces of any party in Europe, on the islands under the jurisdiction of any party in the North Atlantic area north of the Tropic of Cancer, or on the vessels or aircraft in this area of any of the parties.

The North Atlantic Pact is not a pledge by the United States that the United States by itself will take on the burden of defending Western Europe. It is a pledge of cooperative effort in mutual self-defense, carrying obligations which all must meet.

The ties of friendship and mutual assistance in the North Atlantic Pact can be no stronger than the will of the individual nations who joined together to bring the pact into being. The pact can be no stronger than its weakest link. When one or more of its members falters in its dealings with a common enemy and accepts the doctrine of appeasement, it strikes at the strength of the pact itself.

In the past few days the British-Asian-Arab bloc of nations seems to have deserted us in the fight against Communist aggression. Behind the leadership of the Labor-Socialist Government of Great Britain, these nations have joined together and helped bring about the tabling of a resolution to brand Communist China an aggressor in Korea. Thus some of the very nations who are joined with us for mutual assistance in defense against Communist aggression in the North Atlantic area have served notice that they are unwilling to stand with us against Communist aggression in Asia. Thus the nations which have accepted our economic bounty and military assistance, and who still stand with hands outstretched, seem determined to let us stand alone in this hour of peril in Asia.

The lesson of recent events is clear. The people of the United States realize that if their Nation is to survive, it must make itself strong quickly. As its first objective, the United States must build up its own strength within its own borders and must raise a wall of ships and planes which no aggressor can pierce. That must be done quickly and at all costs; that must be our first objective.

In addition to the building up of America as a great inner fortress of freedom, the United States must have defense bases beyond its territorial limits and must join with allies abroad. These allies must be friends whose objectives are the same as ours. They must be endowed with courage and determination and the will to fight, if necessary, to maintain their freedom. Once having found such allies, we must do all we can to help them to effective defense without sacrificing our own defenses.

The very survival of our Nation may well be in the balance. The decisions which are to be made should be made not by the executive branch alone, not by the Senate alone, but by the people of the United States and their Government in all its branches, acting together in unity, determination, and common purpose.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Public debate over our foreign policy, and particularly our relationship to the Atlantic Pact Nations, points up conflicting statements of facts as they pertain to Europe's desire and efforts to resist the rising tide of communism.

Mr. Hoover says in effect that Continental Europe has not in 3 years of our aid developed that unity of purpose and that willpower necessary for its own defense; that the minds of Western Europeans are confused with fears and disunity and that, notwithstanding our generous help to this date, they have failed to develop a unity of purpose or organization. They vacillate, Mr. Hoover says, in the belief that they are in little danger and hope to avoid being a theater of war, and because of this state of mind they have done practically nothing to prepare their defense.

Many able newspaper correspondents support Mr. Hoover's conclusions on the European state of mind as well as his conclusions on their preparedness or lack of preparedness.

If the press quoted you correctly, Mr. President, you sharply contradicted Mr. Hoover's statements. Thus, an issue over facts is raised which serves only to greatly confuse the Members of Congress and the American public. Surely it would be helpful if we could agree on what the true situation is. The American people are justified in asking for the facts and not conclusions based on alleged facts. If they know the truth, I am certain they can be relied upon to exercise proper judgment.

To get the actual situation, Mr. President, the American people should be fully informed by you and your Secretary of State, through answers to the following questions:

What progress, if any, has been made by our European Allies in preparing themselves to meet a Communist attack since the ratification of the Atlantic Pact some 16 months ago?

I hope this question, as far as security will permit, will be answered not only with respect to paper plans, but to actual increases of armament as well as the mobilization of fighting divisions.

Is there a public sentiment of major proportions in Western European countries in favor of a neutral position in any war in which the United States and Russia and her satellites would be involved?

To illustrate, is there a growing anti-American feeling in England which expresses itself in the statement, "Let America fight her own wars"?

Ludwell Denny, foreign news correspondent reports that there is such a sentiment in England. Is he right?

And only today, Mr. Denny reports from London on European sentiment:

"The public in almost all countries—Norway is an exception—is either lukewarm to rearmament or openly hostile." Can this possibly be true?

Only a few days ago you were reported as declaring, "Our allies mean business." Is that based on mere promises for future action, or have they put into effect measures which will establish such a claim?

What, if anything, have our European allies done to bring about an economic union as contemplated by the ECA program?

What concessions, if any, has this administration made to our Western European allies in the Far East?

What arrangements have been made with our allies concerning the division and allocation for civilian and military use of strategic materials?

What concessions, if any, has this administration made concerning the financing of the rearmament of Western Europe in proportion to the contributions of our allies? There seems to be no point in shuffling hand-out programs by announcing the termination of ECA on one hand and the gift of $12,000,000,000 in armaments on the other. We desperately need to know what the European nations are determined to do for themselves.

What is the maximum manpower potential of the Western European nations themselves which is available for the defense of Europe, and what proportion of that available manpower are they willing to enlist in the program?

What is the basic military defense strategy underlying the North Atlantic Pact? Does it call for the defense of anti-Soviet Europe or just for part of Western Europe?

There are other questions, Mr. President, which might bring out more of the facts with respect to our foreign policy, but those I have submitted, I believe will cover the main points now in controversy. In presenting these questions to you, I have a feeling that no revelation of defense secrets need be involved in giving the American people much needed information. You, of course, will have to be the judge as to what may properly be said.

May I submit that if anything has been done to build up European defenses, that fact should be revealed to offset the damaging statements that have been made repeatedly not only by the press, but semi-officially, that little, if anything, has been done to this date. Giving the American people the facts that substantial progress has been made, if such is the case—not theories or promises—will do more to restore the confidence of the people in our present policies with respect to our defense preparations in the Atlantic area than all the glittering promises our diplomats can make for future action.

In Scriptural language, we may say that our European allies should prove their faith by their works.

When we adopted the Atlantic Pact, it became the law and, as a loyal American, I have supported that pact as the law of my country. Even though I voted against it because reservations protecting the constitutional right of Congress to declare war were not adopted, yet it became our plan of defense and should be given every opportunity to succeed. But, with many other Americans, I have heard and read with grave misgivings reports which indicated that our Allies were actually becoming isolationists and were not making progress toward building their defenses, but were yielding to heavy public pressure that they stay out of any controversy or war which might eventually arise between us and Russia and her satellites.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I sincerely believe that with the facts in your possession which are not available to the rest of us, you may be able to clear up much of the misunderstanding which now exists. If the situation is actually better than it has been pictured, then the people ought to know it. On the other hand, if the state of affairs in Europe is as dangerous as Mr. Hoover believes it to be, the fact ought to be known and considered in our final determination of what our foreign policy should be.

For your convenience, I am enclosing a copy of a speech which I delivered in the Senate on December 22. It contains a more complete statement of the matters discussed in this letter.

Yours very respectfully,

ARTHUR V. WATKINS.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 23, 1951.

The Honorable ARTHUR V. WATKINS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WATKINS: Since receiving your letter of December 29, I have been undertaking the preparation of a reply containing information of the type you requested.

Events have been moving so rapidly, however, that I have come to the conclusion that the purpose of your letter will be best served by waiting a short time until General Eisenhower returns. He will have a large amount of new information which he will give the Congress soon after he reaches Washington. I think this information will do a great deal to help clarify the questions you raised.

I hope this will be agreeable to you. If you desire to discuss this matter with me, I will be glad to see you.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 29, 1951, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1951

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Peter J. Rahill, of Catholic University, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, we thank Thee that among Thy whole earthly creation, to man alone Thou hast given an eternal soul, endowed with the wondrous faculties of intellect and will. For all mankind so blessed Thy loving mercy is entreated. Especially for our President and for the Members of this Congress do we today implore two heavenly graces. First, dear God, graciously grant to them clear understanding of the problems confronting our Nation. Then do Thou guide these men and women, our country's leaders, to choose the solutions most pleasing to Thy holy will. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 98) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives: HAROLD C. HAGEN, Minnesota, and JAMES T. PATTERSON, Connecticut.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. STAGGERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 5 minutes today, following any special orders heretofore entered.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes on Monday next and also on Thursday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the majority leader what the legislative program will be for next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, there is no definite program for next week. As heretofore announced, on Thursday next at 10:30 a. m. there will be a meeting in the auditorium of the Library of Congress. This is not a part of the legislative program of the House but I repeat that announcement at this time for the information of the Members.

There is nothing for Monday or Tuesday. I can definitely say there will be no legislation considered on Monday.

One bill has been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce relating to the monitoring of the radio, H. R. 1730, but whether or not that committee will seek and get a rule I am unable to state at this time.

So far as I know at this time, no bills will come up for consideration next week. If there are any, I will announce to the House just as soon as I possibly can. At the present time there is no definite program for next week. When extension of reciprocal trade is reported out of committee, it will be brought up as soon as possible; I hope, next week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that in accordance with past custom the Republicans would like to attend some Lincoln Day dinners in the early part of February, so that I hope the gentleman will adjust his legislative program with that thought in mind.

Mr. McCORMACK. Monday is the anniversary of the birthday of the late President McKinley and, of course, there are appropriate speeches made on that occasion each year. Tuesday is the anniversary of the birthday of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt and speeches will be made on that day. But that is not a part of the legislative program.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will arrange his program with the thought in mind that for several days before the birthday and for a few days afterward a good many Members of the House will be speaking at various Lincoln Day celebrations. The gentleman has always been very helpful in the past.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts knows that any program of the House around that time will be consistent with circumstances confronting the Republican Members in the making of speeches. When the party represented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] was in control, the same consideration was given to us on Jackson Day and Jefferson Day. I will get together with the gentleman from Massachusetts and we will arrange a program that is satisfactory. Whatever program he wants we will make.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No one could ask for more.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE PEOPLE—YES AND NO

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the minority and majority leaders did not ask me anything about the program for next week, but I am always willing to be helpful. I will volunteer the statement that it is possible the majority cannot give us any idea about the program for next week because they have not heard from the United Nations yet and they do not know just what to do while waiting for a canned report from General Eisenhower. That is one thing that is causing trouble with the legislative program.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good speech I am about to make. I did not write it. I am just making it.

I notice the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] is present. He has not been making as many speeches in the well of the House about the situation in the Far East as he formerly did. I think he knows as much about that situation as any other Member of the House, and many have been hoping he would give us the benefit of his views.

This is the speech. Listen, please.

Today one question haunts the sleep of most of the people of the United States. It concerns our foreign policy.

Past, present, and future foreign policy has been debated on the radio and by the press. It has been the subject of addresses by such men as Dewey, Hoover, Dulles, Taft, and Stassen. Foreign policy and its effect on our way of life is the current topic of conversation in country stores, barrooms, barber shops, pool halls, homes, churches, and every place where men and women gather. Most every housewife, taxi driver, school teacher, and professional man has an opinion and does not hesitate to express it. At a school meeting we should get out of Korea, in the barber shop we should build a huge Navy, at the Elks, we should arm the Chinese Nationalists and hang onto Formosa, at the bridge table we should bomb the Manchurian industrial cities, at the courthouse we should withdraw from Europe. So it goes—different opinions from different people.

From these discussions, however, we get the impression that the people are more afraid of the mistakes that Truman and Acheson may make than they are of Communist aggression. A majority of the people are not stubborn, they realize that they are not in a position to make decisions and are willing to abide by the decisions of responsible, sincere, loyal, and intelligent men. In their present temper, however, they will not unite behind a foolish man stubbornly following a foolish policy. Universally, the people do not care where they have to fight, but they do not desire to fight needlessly or foolishly. The people are willing to make total sacrifice if necessary to preserve this country, but they have no desire to waste their lives and property in a vain attempt to create or preserve freedom for others who have not the inclination to do so.

The people also have no desire to make sacrifices to preserve the United Nations. They are opposed to the idea that our men must serve as United Nations policemen. The citizens of this Nation are not in the mood to be committed to a continuation of a foolish policy to save a political face or to satisfy a stubborn character.

The people recognize the Communist threat, they are mentally and morally prepared to meet this threat upon any battleground selected by a responsible, sincere, intelligent leader, devoted to his country.

The people are prepared to pay huge taxes to support an adequate military force. They are unwilling to pay huge taxes to promote socialism in this country.

Mr. Truman, as evidenced by his refusal to remove Mr. Acheson, by his refusal to give authority to General MacArthur necessary to protect our Army in Korea, by his persistence in wasting billions of the taxpayers' money upon social schemes now termed defense measures, by his determination to sacrifice men in Europe regardless of Europe's determination to save itself, by his continued acceptance of UN policy to appease Red China, evidently has lost contact with the people.

The Presidential ear is not bent to the ground. The Presidential head is soaring in the clouds, while the Presidential mind is dreaming of the presidency of a united world.

It would be good for the country and for Mr. Truman, if he took a taxi, to the barber shop, stopped at the local Elks club for a drink, went to church, played a game of bridge and listened to what the people had to say.

If he did, he would return to his office a deflated but wiser man.

That is the end of what I say is a good speech. That speech was written by a young man way out in Michigan. I will say to my good friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], that we have some good men in Michigan who want none of UN, who are weary of fighting other nations' wars, just as he has down in Mississippi, and they think as seriously about these matters as does he or his people. This young man who wrote this speech which I just made, served 2 years and 8 months in the armed services in the Second World War. When he enlisted, he had two boys, a wife, and a business. He enlisted. He was not subject to draft. When I asked him, "What are you enlisting for?" he said, "I do not want my boys to fight the Japs some day in the future; I want to keep them out of war." Now, what he is worrying about is that notwithstanding his service, and he was lucky, those boys are almost certain to go. He just realizes, as do a few million others, that all of his service and that all those who served to a much greater extent did not do anyone any lasting good. That neither World War I nor World War II ended war or gave freedom to all.

Most seriously, my colleagues, is it not about time that somebody here in the House who is competent, who knows about war like my friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD], like the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SMITH], who served in the other war and who had command of a part of an army, who knows Germany like most of us know our own back yards—and we have another gentleman, an officer, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DEVEREUX], who served with the Marines—is it not about time that they—and I am told there are some 225 or 250 veterans in this House who have some first-hand information who know more about the actual fighting than the rest of us, should tell us and tell the country how to get us out of this war before a million of our men are killed. This war will wreck us, there is no question about that. You all know that as well or far better than I do. It is one thing to fight for your country—it is something else to be used as a cat's paw by another nation to fall sucker into Stalin's trap.

Oh, yes, I almost forgot that speech was just an editorial written by Leo W. Hoffman, printed in the Allegan Gazette, my home-town paper.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes on Tuesday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 30 minutes.

SOURCE FROM WHICH FUNDS CAN BE OBTAINED TO BALANCE THE BUDGET—GOVERNMENT FINANCES

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, the subject I am going to discuss is how we can meet the budget which the President of the United States submitted to the Congress only a few days ago. I am going to deal with the question of average wage levels, average price levels, national income, and credit extension, as they relate to this subject. You may be able to get a few drops of comfort out of what I have to say, because I am not selling the United States short yet.

I shall give credit to Mr. Carl Wilken, who has spent many years here on the Hill analyzing economic conditions and forces and consequences, who has collaborated with me in this statement, and I have worked with him.

I have also a brief statistical summary presented by Paul Peters, who has also been here on the Hill for a number of years.

The basis of all the remarks I am going to make is found in the economic report recently submitted by the President of the United States through the Advisory Council headed by Mr. Keyserling.

In the field of production of goods, whether primary, basic raw materials or manufactured materials, we have such a thing as wage levels. As hourly wages advance, cost goes up, as a general rule.

Only a few years ago in 1929 the hourly wage was 56.6 cents per hour. In December, in the last quarter of 1950, it was $1.51 per hour, or an increase of approximately 167 or 168 percent in the hourly wage between 1929 and 1950.

That means the selling price had to increase if you were to stay on a profitable basis so that the articles could be produced and the income be taxed and the tax money put into the tax box. In 1929 with the average wage figure which I gave and with that big increase, we have reason to assume that these costs are higher now and that the higher prices are justified. In 1929 the prices of all commodities, the BLS wholesale index, was 95.3 as related to 100 for 1926. In December 1950 the wholesale price index was 174.5, or an increase of approximately 100 percent. The comparison of the hourly wage as to the price level in 1929 and December 1950 shows an increase of 33½ percent of buying power of an hour of work and that is really what counts—what can you buy with the work that you perform?

Thus the increase in our standard of living includes the increase in the per hour production.

Let us take our national income for a moment. In 1939 the national income was $72,500,000,000. In 1948 it had jumped to $223,500,000,000. In the last quarter of 1950 it was knocking along at the rate of $254,000,000,000 per annum. I am talking about the national income in those periods.

As to the price level in 1939, it was 77 percent of what it was in 1926; in 1948 it was 165 percent of what it was in 1926, and in the last quarter of 1950 it was 174 percent of what it was in 1926.

What was your labor income? In 1939 it was $45,700,000,000. In 1948 it was $134,000,000,000, and in the last quarter of 1950 it was knocking along at $155,900,000,000 for wages for people who were on the payrolls.

If you want to break this thing down over the period of years you will find that total wage income runs about 62 percent of the national income. There is a constant there that you can depend on and that is 62 percent of the national income.

How many workers do we have today? Well, we are talking about having 65,000,000 people on the payroll within a few months. If this war situation develops as we are now planning in every way that I know of that we can plan, we should have around 67,000,000 payrollees. If we keep the price level the way it is at the present time those 65 to 67 million payrollees, if they will work, with our present productive facilities, should turn out a volume of goods, which multiplied by this present price level will give us a national income of not less than $360,000,000,000 a year—let us say in 1952.

Take 60 percent of that and see what your wage income is—your spendable income of the workers. That gets into big money in any man's language. Take 16 percent of that $360,000,000,000 for Federal taxes and see how many dollars you put into the tax box as compared with 17 percent at the rate you paid last year, and figure out if you can how much the additional contribution to the tax box is hurting you, if it is hurting you at all.

In other words, if you want to buy an automobile or a washing machine or a sewing machine and do not have the money to pay for it, and you do not want to go in debt, then get out somewhere and go to work and earn the money to buy a washing machine or automobile or sewing machine. If you want a $72,000,000,000 budget in peacetime, and you do not have the money to pay for it, get out and go to work and make the money, by producing the goods and selling those goods, and putting the money in the tax box that you need to cover the budget. That is the sound way to do it. Do not sit around on your soft seats and pray to God to pay the bills for you.

So my flat, cold-blooded proposition is, that if we want to, we can meet the $72,000,000,000 budget which has been submitted to us and cover every dollar of it into the tax box from the production that we can produce with our present employees and our present productive facilities if we will get on the job and produce the goods.

Do not understand me at all to be advocating a $72,000,000,000 budget, if that $72,000,000,000 budget is even $100,000 more than it should be. I do not have any patience or any respect for anyone who wastes things economically. I do not care who he is or who she is, especially in a crisis such as we now face.

I am going back to some more figures. Of the 60,000,000 civilian employees which we have had in recent months there are about 10,000,000 engaged in business operations. About 50,000,000 of them receive their income in the form of pay checks. Those pay checks in turn represent their share of the income generated by the economic cycle of production, processing, and distribution in the United States. In 1939 you had a national income of $72,500,000,000. The last quarter of 1950 was on the basis of 254 billion, as I previously pointed out, which was an increase of 251 percent. The increase in the wage income was 241 percent in 1950 as compared with 1939. The increase in retail sales volume was 212 percent. National income, wage income, and retail sales—you cannot separate them. They go together, because if people earn money they are going to spend it. You have certain constants all the way through this picture, which tell you whether or not your economy is balanced over a period of 50 or 75 or 100 years in the United States.

The people who constantly yell about prices being too high are not considering and weighing all those things which are related to prices. If you are going to pay a man $15 an hour wages, you can bet your life that whatever he produces is going to cost a lot of money. If you do not want high costs and a high selling price, then cut wages down to 50 cents an hour and you can have your low price—if low price is all you want. But I am not advocating you do this.

The increase in total wage as compared to the increase in total sales volume indicates clearly that the worker was in a better ratio to price levels in 1950 than he was in 1929.

The total payroll brought approximately 13 percent more goods for him to consume, and he is crying his eyes out about prices being so high, but he does not say anything in the world about the fact that his wages are much higher and his standard of living up considerably.

Last fall I think every Member of this House heard a great deal said about restricting credit—taking the credit privilege away from the people. Well, whose idea was that? Some fellow promoted the idea that if you wanted to prevent inflation you should cut down credit extension. So the order was issued to cut out credit. Let us see what that did.

In 1929 you had a certain ratio of credit to the total volume of retail sales. You had a certain ratio of credit to total wage income. You had a certain ratio of credit to total national income. Take 1919, take 1928, take 1939, and check those figures closely. You will find that the $20,000,000,000 of consumer credit in the last quarter of 1950 was not excessive as compared with previous years' operations. Yet many people contended, and millions believed, that if they would restrict credit, price inflation would be prevented.

In 1939 all consumer credit totaled $7,000,000,000 as compared to $20,000,000,000 in December 1950. This is an increase of 185 percent. Credit extension in 1939 when compared to total retail sales of $42,000,000,000 in 1939 was $1 of credit for $6 of sales. In 1948 total retail sales were $123,800,000,000 with a credit extension of $14,300,000,000 or $1 of credit extension for each $8.40 of retail sales. In fourth quarter 1950 total retail sales were running at a level of $136,000,000,000 and consumer credit extension averaged $19,600,000,000 or $1 of credit for each $7 of sales.

In other words credit extension in 1948 and 1949 and 1950 was less in ratio to sales than in 1939 when we had a depression. This is a natural corollary as a state of prosperity or full employment finds individuals better able to pay cash for many items.

Stated in another way credit extension has not been excessive and was not the cause for rising prices. The real facts are that the increase in hourly wages, commodity prices, and so forth, increased the use of credit in ratio to dollar volume of sales.

The same illustration can be applied to inventories and bank deposits and currency.

In 1939, total deposits and currency totaled $68,300,000,000 as compared to $183,500,000,000 in 1950 (December). This is an increase of approximately 170 percent as compared to an increase of 223 percent in retail sales volume. The money supply in 1939 ratioed lower to total volume of business than in 1939.

In the case of inventories, total inventories in 1939 were $20,100,000,000 as compared to $59,700,000,000 in November 1950. This increase of 197 percent in inventories can be compared to the increase in retail sales amounting to 223 percent.

Summed up, our business units were doing a larger volume of sales in 1950 on a lower extension of credit and with a comparatively smaller inventory than in 1939. Credit was restricted, drastically restricted, since last summer; and every day since that restriction took place your prices have gone up, up, up; and wage increases have occurred; wages have gone up, national income has gone up, volume of retail sales has gone up; and the restriction of credit did not amount to anything so far as keeping prices down. During the campaign the story was, "We are going to restrict credit and thereby prevent inflation." You who so advocated sold a bill of goods to the people of this country. The national income increased from $214,000,000,000 in the last quarter of 1949 to $254,000,000,000 in the last quarter of 1950. Here you see an increase in the national income of $40,000,000,000 in 12 months.

The factors that result in an increase in income operate to affect an increase in the cost of unit production, in the unit sales price. With an economy that moves up and down as swiftly as ours any appropriations made by Congress are merely wild guesses, just as I stated on the floor a few days ago when we had under consideration the big air carrier bill; the question arose about whether or not the program could be built for $2,000,000,000. I said at that time that you could not tell but what it might take $20,000,000,000 to build it within 3½ years because we could not tell what the price level would be or what the wage level would be. So I said we were just making guesses on it and advocated renegotiated contracts. I am not complaining about the fact that we make guesses; I am simply pointing out the fact that we do make guesses; these appropriations are merely guesses. We come in later and ask for other appropriations to complete the projects, but the subsequent appropriations can be nothing but guesses either. Unless prices are stabilized appropriations may effectuate only 70, 50, or 40 percent of what we thought they would at the time the appropriation was made.

In like manner, any taxes which may be assessed, that is, through the provisions of a tax bill here, is simply a guess. For example, corporate taxes in 1949 were $10,600,000,000; in 1950 they were $18,300,000,000. This increase of $7,700,000,000 in Federal revenue was not expected when the 1950 and 1951 budget was prepared. Because of this increase in current tax income we just about balanced the cash outgo through the budget operations.

Unless certain steps are taken to stabilize prices—here is where we get into it—to stabilize prices our whole financial structure will continue to be one of confusion because of this instability. Congress, on the other hand, will be completely at sea as to what would constitute a proper tax approach or a proper appropriations approach. It might be well to give a brief analysis of the dynamic economy we have simply to illustrate just what we have. First, let us consider our efficiency ratio. I had three letters on this subject this morning in my mail from very, very prominent people in my district; one is a very prominent young lawyer. Our fiscal ratio is such that each $1 of gross farm income turns over about seven times, supporting $7 of our national income. But this ratio can be altered by a downward swing in national income such as in 1929 to 1932, and from 1948 to 1949, and the upward swing of the transition from 1949 to 1950. In 1932 there was the same farm production as you had in 1929, but it produced $7,000,000,000 less of gross farm income. The result in national income was a drop of, roughly, $45,000,000,000 in 1933. The low point in our national income usually comes about 6 months after the low in gross farm income. One of my writers this morning asks: "When are you fellows in Congress going to cut out these supports and subsidies for the farmer?" I write back and tell them: "If you will eliminate collective bargaining, the Wagner Act and all that came out of that act, and the Taft-Hartley Act and all that came out of it, put labor back on the open-market basis where there is no collective bargaining whatsoever, no support by the Congress, no support by the machinery of the Federal Government, turn it loose, let it work its own way, the farmer can go along just as well as labor." But if you are going to do all of these things that the organized labor laws give to those who work in industry, and provided you want to sell those goods from the factories, the transportation lines of all kinds, and other activities, if you want to sell those things you can bet your bottom dollar the farmer has got to have his piece of cake in the form of a fair wage so as to have enough income to buy that which is produced in the factories under collective bargaining. You cannot get around that—if you think you can, go ahead and cut the farm income back to $20,000,000,000 instead of $35,000,000,000. Go ahead and try that just once. If you do, you will be the sickest group of economic planners that you ever saw.

On the other hand, if you want a high, strong national income, full employment, full payrolls, pay the primary producer a comparable wage for his production so that he can buy the goods of industry. Pay him parity. That is all that is necessary. That is the only answer I have. If you have a better one I wish you would submit it here some time. I would like to have it, and the country needs the truth.

Now, farm prices dropped, and let us consider recent years; in 1948 farm prices dropped. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] knows they dropped approximately $3,000,000,000 in gross farm income, which results in a loss of about $20,000,000,000 of national income. If you have a drop in national income what happens to the wage income? It is going to drop also. What is going to happen to retail sales volume? It is going to drop. What is going to happen to the tax dollar stream to the Federal Treasury? It is going to drop because taxable income drops.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad to have the gentleman's comment on farm income. A few weeks ago the Secretary of Agriculture announced that the farm income for 1951 would be increased by 10 percent, but he failed to say that the things that the farmer had to buy increased over 20 percent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. So the farmer is worse off by a 10-percent increase than he was before they started in with this new scheme.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think so.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has referred to the turn-over as a result of agricultural production as being 7 to 1. It is quite apparent that the administration is going to put on price control, particularly on meat and other commodities. The gentleman knows this will retard production, that a great deal of these scarce commodities, not only in food but in other lines, will pass into the black market; and the money received in the black market will be hidden and not really pass through normal channels of trade. What does the gentleman think of that kind of an economy?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it is about as destructive to the so-called poor man as anything could be. I have written to people in my district in the last 2 or 3 days to the effect that within 60 to 90 days after controls are put on meat and meat products the products will begin to move into the black markets, meat will become much scarcer and the price at the retail butcher's counter will be higher than at the present time because these products will be moving out through black-market channels.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. And eventually, I may say, meat will pass into the black market so that the people who want to abide by the laws and the regulations will not be able to get it through normal channels of trade.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that is what is going to happen.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Are we admitting here that we have not the courage to deal with the black-market situation?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would not say that. I simply say that what the Congress did a few months ago, back last summer, was to put into operation a program which when it is effectuated will promote the black market. So whether we have courage or not, we took that action.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman knows, and I know, from experience that we have, particularly in meat, a Nation-wide black-market ring ready to take over the merchandising of meat through black-market channels; in fact, the black marketeers are among those people who are urging this price control, the control system, over meat and other products.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct. Here is a check that was given to me this morning by a farmer who lives within about 30 minutes drive of this building. That check is for $325. What do you suppose it paid for? It paid for a little steer I sold to him this morning. I helped him load it on the truck before I came to the office—$325 for one little critter in the form of a beef animal. I sold him some more of these steers at the same price previous to this. This was his third order. When you sell a piece of meat on the hoof at a price like that—and I did not send for this man to come and buy this steer; he made repeated trips there to buy them—that steer will be worth more money next week than it was today, and this $325 will buy less in the market next week than it does today. So, why would I want the check? Why does he want the steer? If you are going to pay that kind of a price for meat on the hoof you are going to pay a dollar a pound for beefsteak at the retail store; make no mistake about that. But this comes out of the high wages, the high income, the high retail sales value, and the high prices, and so on, down the line. There is nothing unnatural. This will pay the farmer who raised it about 35 cents an hour wage. The man who eats the beefsteak gets $1.56 an hour average wage. Is there anything wrong with that? Figure it out.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Contributing to that, such things as they have done recently, increasing the price per quart of milk, there was nothing back of that at all. By their own admission, there is nothing back of that at all; no wage increase, no added service performed by the milk distributors in the Washington milkshed. Yet, they increased the price.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is administered prices.

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GWINN. I wanted to be perfectly sure. I was a bit surprised a while ago when the gentleman referred to the price going up unless, as I understood him originally, price control, or management of prices was put into effect. Does the gentleman favor such a program?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me make that clear. I said you have to stabilize these prices. Who is going to stabilize the wage? If every few days organized labor is going to come in and demand and receive, with the full approval of the Government of the United States, another 5, 10, 15 or 20 cents an hour wage increase, is there any stability in that? Suppose wages do not go up any more, would there be any reason to increase prices? Of course not. Suppose we put wages to $25 an hour all the way across the board, where do you think prices are going to go? Now, as long as you keep raising these wages you are going to keep increasing your costs and the prices are going to continue upward. Who handles the wage increases? Who can stop wage increases? That is No. 1. But listen to your radio reports this morning. Is your wage control to come out first? No; that will be the last thing. You see what I mean? So I voted against the price-control bill. I have never supported price control, but I am discussing now the question of price levels, the question of having a gross national income, a wage income, which can be taxed in such a manner so as to pay the legitimate expenditures of this Government, trying to show where we can get this money to meet this budget.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the gentleman knows, will he advise the House what the weight of that steer was that he sold this morning for $325?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It weighed, I would guess, about between 1,000 and 1,100 pounds. I never weigh them. I say, "I want so much for this steer. If you want to buy it, all right."

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the price per pound?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us say around 32 or 33 cents a pound.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I did not intend to inject myself into the gentleman's speech, but I am wondering if the gentleman will reconcile that $325 check he received this morning with the fact that there is no control and his statement that he is against control. I am just trying to reconcile the two statements of my friend.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The steer brings $325, or let us say 32.5 cents a pound, because of the costs involved in the feeding, the machinery that is used on the farm to produce the feed, farm labor, and so forth. If those costs advance, the price of that steer is going to advance. If the wages for making these cattle advance, the price of steers is going to advance in another year or two. If the beef population drops, the price of beef will advance even without an advance in the price of these other products. We have had the idea that we could push this so-called spendable proposition to the top of the mountain. As long as we are doing that, we are going to keep pushing these prices up.

There is no big income in the sale of the steer, because if there was there would be a lot more steers grown. The farmers in my district, and there are letters which came in my mail this morning which I can show to the gentleman from Massachusetts that show this, are switching away from the beef animal. We are going into hogs. Why are we doing that? We cannot grow the beef animals so quickly, there is a bigger risk in the market, a lot more labor is involved, and we can take 12 bushels of corn and grow so many pounds of meat in the form of a pig which would sell at such and such a price and which would be a better price than the $325 steer.

Mr. McCORMACK. I can understand those factors entering into it, but the gentleman was apparently saying that he should never have got this $325 price for the steer he sold.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Those factors exist. How are you going to stop this from going on unless you have some kind of controls?

Mr. CRAWFORD. We either stop it voluntarily——

Mr. McCORMACK. Which the gentleman knows cannot be done.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not admit that at all. We either stop it voluntarily or we subject ourselves to a controlled-black-market, decrease-production economy; and I prefer the first.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am just trying to form in my own mind how the gentleman reconciles the basic position he takes in his speech, that he is against controls, with his further statement that he should never have received $325 for the steer he sold this morning. We know the factors that enter into that, wages, cost of feed, and other things; true. As they increase, naturally the prices are going to increase. The gentleman complains against receiving $325 for that steer. He would object to receiving $400 a month later or 2 months later, or any higher amount. How does the gentleman reconcile his statements, that is what I should like to know. What can we do? Please understand, I am seeking information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This Nation has existed for 175 years. Roughly, most of the time we operated this country on an open-market basis, where the law of supply and demand governed, where you would go into the market and pay what you thought you ought to pay, and if the other fellow did not want to sell he did not have to sell. We got along pretty well that way. Now we have jimmied our whole economy up to where we think we can just walk out and, any time we please, say "If you don't give me 20 cents an hour increase in wages I am going to strike and stop production."

We have followed that course for several years here, and we have come around to the present moment. I think that course is very false. I do not think we should follow it. I do not think beef should sell at a dollar and a quarter a pound at the retail store and I do not think the steer should sell for $325, but it does, by reason of what went before. It is a consequence of the cause.

I am just against that kind of thing.

Mr. McCORMACK. What would the gentleman do?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would stop increasing these costs.

Mr. McCORMACK. How would the gentleman do it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. By stopping the increasing of the wage structures.

Mr. McCORMACK. How would the gentleman do that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, when the people have no leadership they perish. That applies to payrollees as well as other people.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is no answer to the problem.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, if there is a man down the street murdering another man, do you say, "What would you suggest as a substitute?" I am suggesting to stop the murder.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, the gentleman's answer to my question is to grind down the worker.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No. Now, I said no such thing, and you are not going to put words in my mouth. I said no such thing.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course it is true that the gentleman did not use that exact language.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further.

I was afraid that you would get off on that kind of track. I tried to teach you in the first place that if you increase the cost, the prices are going to go up. If you stop increasing the cost it would stabilize the price level. The administration ought to know that controls do not work. They have found that out. When they tell the people to sell goods cheaper and then raise the wages, that is all poppycock and phony and fallacious economic doctrine and it is no good at all.

I want to make this additional point before my time expires. On the basis of full employment on a 40-hour week we can in 1952, if we want to do so, produce $360,000,000,000 of national income here in the United States on today's price level. Do we want to do it? My guess is no, because they do not want to work 40 hours a week full time.

They do not want to work 48 hours a week. But with $375,000,000,000, and on the basis of today's price level, with that national income you can raise your $72,000,000,000 and balance this budget and hurt nobody any more than they were hurt last year in paying their taxes. That is the point I want to make. So I repeat what I said on the floor the other day. I am in favor of expanding the work week to 48 hours, with no further wage increases, with time and a half not paid for the extra 8 hours over the 40 hours. Do I make my position clear on that? That would give you more goods for the people. It will effectuate a lower cost price so that your selling price can come down in proportion and it will take care of the total gross income of the Nation, the total spendable income to the payrollees, and give you a sound economy and a balanced budget for the first time, of any consequence, in 20 years. I think it is about time we got down to brass tacks and looked the mule right straight in the face, and admit that we are willing to pay this party we are trying to put on. If you do not want to do that, then go ahead and take the economic consequences. Try to go ahead with deficit financing again. Try to push your debt from $260,000,000,000 to $360,000,000,000. Suffer from inflation. Put on new price controls. Surrender your economic life in this country to some dictator sitting here in a central office. Establish a local commissar. Extend your one-party system. Kiss your good old Government of the United States good-by. So far as I am concerned, I am against any such proposal.

PRICE CEILINGS

The record and common sense should dictate the price policy. We know that we have a lot of submarginal production at all times because of unequal production from our natural resources. We have good farm land and poor farm land. We have rich ore bodies and other ore bodies of lower grade. Care, therefore, should be taken in any program of price ceilings to avoid too great a rigidity of prices.

A careful study of our American system would indicate that a price floor 90 percent of parity as assurance to the producer of basic commodities and a ceiling of 110 percent as a protection for the consumer would bring about a price structure averaging about 100 percent of parity while at the same time permitting the flexibility of price to make adjustments in both production and consumption of goods in surplus and scare supply.

Wages should be stabilized in ratio to the commodity price level and in ratio to per man production. Finally the business operations should be permitted an operating margin comparable to normal margins existing when our economy was operating on a full production basis.

Under a system of tariffs we have always had a support price in proportion to the amount of the tariff and in turn the tariff has acted as a ceiling, permitting competitive imports in case of shortages.

If we are to have collective bargaining for industry and with a program of price stabilization the Nation should not have any serious inflation or depressions.

On a basis of full employment and a 40-hour week our economy could generate $360,000,000,000 of national income at price levels which now prevail. Any further increase which might be gained through a longer work week would add national income in proportion. With a system of taxes in ratio to Federal expenditures we could operate on a pay-as-you-go basis.

For example, during World War II the American public after their expenditures for goods and services in the 3-year period 1943–45, had $200,000,000,000 left over. After paying $55,000,000,000 of personal income taxes they still had remaining $144,000,000,000. Failure to tax this income added to the inflationary pressure in the amount of the increase in our national debt. In peacetime consumers tax their income for the purchase of a car or other form of durable goods. If the same tax was levied against our personal income to pay for such goods diverted for war purposes, we could pay as we go. Fundamentally goods produced for peace or war at a proper price level will generate the national income to consume them.

I have pointed out that the national income is the buying power in whatever amount created from production times the prevailing price level. Below are the comparisons of the principal factors in national income for 1939, 1942, and 1950. The year 1942 has been used, as 1939 is not a fair comparison because of the fact that we had 9,000,000 workers unemployed and our economy was not operating efficiently, or with a volume to warrant proper comparisons of profit for business units.

Year	National income	Percentage increase to 1950
	Billions
1950	236.2	----------

STOP FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO OTHER NATIONS

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LYLE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, to those of us who have consistently supported various programs for economic and military aid to friendly nations, some of their actions and attitudes come as a considerable shock.

With some justification our colleagues who have opposed these programs say to us, "You see, these nations which we have helped to get on their feet cannot be relied on to stand with us in a struggle to maintain ideals, if their own economic or political interests are in any way adversely affected."

The time has come, if it has not passed, for our Government to serve notice on those who seek our financial assistance that we have reached the stop sign at the end of the one-way street. The determination of our future course is now largely in their hands. It is they who must remove the stop sign and open the street up to traffic flowing in both directions. We have invited them, we have urged them to meet us part way and to travel together toward our goal to repel and discourage naked aggression and to achieve a solid and just foundation for a peaceful world. If they prefer to give priority to the advancement of their own nationalistic or economic aims and shut the door in our faces, regrettable as that may be from every point of view, let them not complain if we match this attitude of ultraisolationism on their part with a hard-boiled realization that, when the chips are down, we must depend primarily upon United States industrial might, the courage and resourcefulness of United States fighting men, and the determination of United States citizenry to remain free. Let us hope and pray that a prompt and basic change in the policy of our sister nations may take place. The outlook at the moment is bleak.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SHAFER (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), on account of illness in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a poem on the American flag.

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, and in one to include a letter and an article from the Reader's Digest and in the other the opinions of the National Opinion Research Center.

Mr. MORANO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter he wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. KEARNEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article.

Mr. O'HARA asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. McMULLEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. POULSON and Mr. JAVITS asked and were given permission to extend their remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include two newspaper editorials.

Mr. GWINN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. KENNEDY (at the request of Mr. PRIEST) was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. GROSS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include newspaper editorials.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, January 29, 1951, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

122. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting certain surveys and a part of a report, pursuant to section 4 of the act of September 25, 1950 (Public Law 837, 81st Cong.), pertaining to the Bureau of Mines, the Geological Survey, and the National Park Service, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

COMMITTEE EMPLOYEES

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

JANUARY 1, 1951.

To the CLERK OF THE HOUSE:

The above-mentioned committee or subcommittee, pursuant to section 134 (b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, Public Law 601, Seventy-ninth Congress, approved August 2, 1946, as amended, submits the following report showing the name, profession, and total salary of each person em-

SENATE

Rev. Nathaniel C. Acton, rector, St. Andrew's Church, College Park, Md., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we beseech Thee to look with favor upon our land and people. All undeserving, Thou hast made us great among the nations of the earth. Let us not forget that this place and this power have come of Thee, and that we have them as a trust to use in Thy service. Save us from pride and arrogance; make us quick to see the needs of those less fortunate than ourselves, and to be resolute in purpose to promote good will and fellowship among all men. Guide, we pray Thee, our President and all those to whom has been committed the government of this Nation, and grant to them special gifts of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and strength; that upholding what is right, and following what is true, they may obey Thy holy will and fulfill Thy divine purpose; for Thine, O God, is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

ATTENDANCE OF A SENATOR

HARRY P. CAIN, a Senator from the State of Washington, appeared in his seat today.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 25, 1951, was dispensed with.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO 13)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith the Sixty-seventh Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission. This report covers the fiscal year ended June 30, 1950.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 29, 1951.

(NOTE.—Report accompanied a similar message to House of Representatives.)

COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to announce that under the rule creating the Committee on Small Business the committee must be appointed at the beginning of each session of each Congress. At the time the committee was created and the Chair made the original appointments, he felt that he had appointed a good committee. He still thinks so, and he reappoints the same members of the committee, and asks the clerk to read the names of the members.

The legislative clerk read the names of Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. MCFARLAND, Mr. O'CONOR, Mr. LONG, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. HUNT, Mr. BENTON, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. THYE, Mr. HENDRICKSON, and Mr. SCHOEPPEL.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is it in order to make an observation at this time relative to the appointments? I know that we are in the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. WHERRY. I rise to make only one observation, and that is that the number on the Small Business Committee is 13. I presume that the appointments in the former Congress were based upon the percentage which then prevailed. At that time the ratio was either eight to five or seven to six, to which I did not object at the time, inasmuch as it was a special committee.

In former years the membership of the committee was divided on the basis of an equal number of Members from each party. I have forgotten how we got away from that practice. However, as I recall, until the last Congress there was no division which represented such a large proportion in favor of one party.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was about to observe that he thinks there is something in the point raised by the Senator from Nebraska. Inasmuch as the proportion has been changed on the standing committees, the Chair had thought that perhaps it should be changed on this committee. However, the question arose as to whether the Chair should leave off some Member who is now on the committee, in order to appoint some other Senator. The Chair felt that that question outweighed the other consideration. However, the Chair will give very careful consideration to the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska; and if the Chair concludes, as well he might, that there ought to be a difference in the proportion, the Chair will adjust it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the assurance from the distinguished Vice President that he will give the matter further consideration.

If the Chair will permit, I should like to make one further observation. We have suggested for membership on the committee the names of certain Senators who have just been reelected, and who do not have a heavy workload in the committee assignments they now have to legislative committees. I know that they would have ample time to serve on the Small Business Committee. It was with that idea in mind that I felt that if the number of members on the committee could be increased there would be no objection from our side to making the number 16, with a division of 8 on a side, so that no member would be dropped from the committee.

I am suggesting to the Vice President that the number be increased so that the workload of the Small Business Committee may be properly distributed. Some Senators are not overburdened with work on the legislative committees, and they could be very helpful in distributing the workload we have been talking about, and will continue to talk about until it is more equitably distributed.

I appeal to the distinguished Vice President to give consideration to the suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be glad to consider it. However, the Chair does not believe that he has authority to increase the total number of the membership. The original resolution provided for a membership of 13. The Chair cannot change that. If the Chair decides that he may change the proportion, that will take care of at least one additional member of the minority.

Mr. WHERRY. May I ask the distinguished Vice President a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it necessary to enter any motion, such as a motion to reconsider, or may I have the assurance of the distinguished Vice President that at some time in the near future the question will be brought up when the time for the announcement arrives, and that any rights we may have will be preserved at that time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will announce his decision either today or not later than tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently said: With respect to the membership of the Select Committee on Small Business, concerning which some discussion was had earlier in the day, the Chair has been informed that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] does not desire to continue longer as a member of the committee. Therefore, in order to give to the minority the same representation on this committee that obtains with respect to the several standing committees, the Chair appoints the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUFF] as a minority member of the committee.

PROPER DISPLAY OF AMERICAN FLAG—RESOLUTION OF SWEETWATER DISTRICT (TENN.) JUNIOR ORDER UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the United Order of Mechanics of Sweetwater, Tenn., concerning the use of the American flag. They protest against any flag being considered in preference to the American flag, and I join them in that protest as strongly as I know how.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Since it is our belief that America is the best Nation there is, and since it is our belief that the American flag embodies the ideals and flies as a token of that Nation;

And since we feel that the American flag has always flown upperm .t in times of victory or distress;

And since it is the law of the land that no flag shall fly above or to the right of the American banner;

And since we have information that the present time in some instances that the flag of the United Nations has been carried higher than the American flag where American men are involved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Sweetwater District of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, a patriotic fraternity do hereby deplore such a situation; and be it further

Resolved, That we think it is an injustice to the men and women who have given their lives for this same flag and are so doing now and for the millions who have, who are now, and who will in the future support this emblem to the best of their ability in many fields of endeavor; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby petition our fellow members to speak against any action that lets any banner in any way supplant the Stars and Stripes, and be it further resolved that we hereby ask our Representatives in legislative halls of the Government to lend their supports to stopping any practice that allows the American flag to be second to any banner in the world; furthermore be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to our State and national officials of this fraternity and to the Members of Congress from our district and to our United States Senators, as well as a copy of the same be spread in the local press.

Respectfuly submitted.

J. NEAL ENSMINGER,
CHARLIE BARNETT,
HURL W. RAY,
Resolution Committee, Sweetwater District, Junior Order United American Mechanics.

Attested this the 4th day of January 1951.

District Secretary.

INCREASED PAY FOR CERTAIN VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION EMPLOYEES AT NASHVILLE, TENN.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from William R. Douglas, president of Local No. 936, National Federation of Federal Employees, of Nashville, Tenn., enclosing a resolution adopted by the executive committee of that local, favoring the enactment of legislation to increase the basic salary of the employees of the Veterans' Administration regional office and veterans' hospital at Nashville, Tenn., and I ask unanimous consent that the letter and resolution be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOCAL NO. 936
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES,
Nashville, Tenn., January 25, 1951.

Hon. KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: The attached resolution has been adopted by the executive committee of Local 936, National Federation of Federal Employees, Nashville, Tenn.

Your consideration of this resolution and efforts toward the passage of an increase in pay for Federal employees will be greatly appreciated.

It is requested that the president of Local 936 be furnished an expression of your attitude toward an increase in salary for Federal employees.

Very truly yours,
WILLIAM R. DOUGLAS,
President.

Whereas employees of the Federal Government, in cooperation with all other citizens, are anxious and willing to fully participate in any and all sacrifices that our preparedness program may require, to serve where and when most needed for the overall common good of our country, and make all possible personal adjustments to fit the general circumstances of these unusual times; and

Whereas said Federal employees, like other good citizens, have the sacred obligation to support their dependents as to the necessities of life, and to earn a fair living wage; and

Whereas it is a known fact that the cost of living has advanced materially and that the cost of commodities has reduced the take-home pay; and

Whereas employees of the Federal Government have had no increase in their salary range since October 1949 and are unable to get such increase except through an act of Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the executive committee of Local 936, NFFE, representing employees of the Veterans' Administration regional office and veterans' hospital, Nashville, Tenn., urge our Representatives in the National Congress to support pending legislation for a substantial increase in their basic salary, and that expedited action be taken by them for this action; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Tennessee Representative with a request that they furnish the President of our local an expression of their attitude toward our request for this needed relief to loyal Federal employees.

DANGERS OF INFLATION—JOINT RESOLUTION OF VERMONT LEGISLATURE

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD a joint resolution adopted by the Vermont Legislature, and approved by the Governor on January 26, 1951, relating to dangers of inflation and providing ways and means to prevent same.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint Resolution 13

Whereas the threat of inflation is one of imminent danger; and

Whereas inflation reduces the value of savings, places a heavy penalty upon all those with fixed incomes, discourages thrift and good management, and places a premium upon speculation; and

Whereas, the adoption of price and wage controls alone is merely a stop-gap measure: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate and house of Representatives, That the impending inflation be curtailed and eventually stopped by taking the following measures:

I. Increased production of needed goods through commonly accepted measures, including extension of the workweek;

II. A program of "pay as we go" taxes;

III. Elimination of all nonessential Government expenses, including a reduction in the number of persons on the Government payroll;

IV. Proper exercise of controls and functions in the field of monetary, credit and fiscal policy in order to reduce the supply of purchasing power.

That the secretary of state forward a certified copy of these resolutions to President Harry S. Truman, Senators George D. Aiken, of Vermont; Ralph Flanders, of Vermont; Ernest W. McFarland, of Arizona; Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas; Robert A. Taft, of Ohio; and Kenneth S. Wherry, of Nebraska; Representatives Winston Prouty, of Vermont; Sam Rayburn, of Texas; John W. McCormack, and Joseph W. Martin, Jr., of Massachusetts, Eric Johnston, economic stabilization administrator; and Michael DiSalle, price director of the Economic Stabilization Administration—all in Washington, D. C.

WALLACE M. FAY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOSEPH B. JOHNSON,
President of the Senate.

Approved January 26, 1951.

LEE E. EMERSON.

ADEQUATE BOXCARS FOR SHIPMENT OF DURUM GRAIN—CONCURRENT RESOLUTION OF NORTH DAKOTA LEGISLATURE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and printing in the RECORD, a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of North Dakota, relating to the furnishing of adequate boxcars for the early shipment of durum grain.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution F

Concurrent resolution requesting the Interstate Commerce Commission to take such action as may be necessary to insure the furnishing of adequate boxcars for the early shipment of durum grain

Whereas the State of North Dakota produces 85 percent of the durum raised in the United States and the bulk of such production is in the northerly portion of the State; and

Whereas late summer rains and early snow came before a large portion of such durum could be threshed, with the result that much of such durum contains more than 15-percent moisture; and

Whereas such grain cannot be safely stored on the farm nor in the grain elevators because of the danger of heating and it is necessary that such grain be sent to terminal markets where it can be properly dried and stored; and

Whereas the marketing and shipping of such grain is being prevented by a shortage of boxcars and if such grain cannot be shipped before warm weather starts a great deal of such grain will spoil, with great financial loss to the farmers and great loss of human foods; and

Whereas by reason of the aforesaid facts an emergency exists: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the Interstate Commerce Commission be requested to take such action as may be necessary to insure the furnishing of adequate boxcars for the early shipment of such grain: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the North Dakota Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

MILTON RUE,
President pro Tempore.
W. J. TOAUT,
Secretary of the Senate.
LEO STUKA,
Speaker of the House.
KENNETH L. MORGAN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

COMMUNIST CHINA AGGRESSION IN KOREA—RESOLUTION OF WASHINGTON HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Washington favoring the resolution submitted in the United Nations to brand Communist China as an aggressor in Korea.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and, under the rules, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Honorable HARRY S. TRUMAN, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

"Whereas the United Nations did create the Republic of Korea; and

"Whereas the Armed Forces of the United States are now engaged in armed combat in Korea, all as a representative of the United Nations; and

"Whereas Communist China has either directly or indirectly sent armies and/or soldiers into Korea and is now openly fighting the United Nations forces in Korea; and

"Whereas the United States has submitted or is about to submit to the United Nations a resolution branding Communist China as an aggressor in Korea: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, do support the principles involved in such resolution now submitted, or about to be submitted to the United Nations and do respectfully request Your Excellency to take every appropriate step in support of such resolution branding Communist China as an aggressor in Korea; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, and to each Member of Congress from the State of Washington."

I hereby certify this to be a true and correct copy of resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on January 23, 1951.

S. R. HOLCOMB,
Chief Clerk, House of Representatives.

AID TO VETERANS' DEPENDENTS—RESOLUTION OF BAY VIEW (WIS.) POST, NO. 180, THE AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received from an American Legion post in Milwaukee, Wis., Bay View Post, No. 180, a resolution urging the remedying of the deplorable delays in sending out allotment checks to families and dependents of our veterans. Many instances have come to my attention from my State in which there has been genuine hardship caused to parents, wives, and so forth, because servicemen's allowances were not received rapidly.

As an indication, therefore, of the deep sentiment of veterans' organizations on this issue, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution, as forwarded to me by Commander Emmett J. Heup, be printed in the RECORD at this point, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas information has come to the officers of Bay View Post, No. 180, the American Legion, Department of Wisconsin, that dependents of veterans in the armed services of the United States are facing delay in the receipt of their allotment checks and thereby being caused unnecessary inconvenience, and in many instances, suffering; and

Whereas information has come to the officers of Bay View Post, No. 180, the American Legion, Department of Wisconsin, that pay to veterans who have been called back into service is delayed in reaching those veterans, in some instances extending over a period of time of several months, and by reason of this the veterans are caused unnecessary inconvenience, and in some instances, suffering: Therefore be it

Resolved by Bay View Post, No. 180, the American Legion, Department of Wisconsin, in regular meeting assembled, That immediate action be requested by the proper officers of the various branches of the armed services of the United States to remedy the above conditions; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY and Hon. JOSEPH MCCARTHY, United States Senators for the State of Wisconsin, and Hon. CLEMENT ZABLOCKI and Hon. CHARLES KERSTEN, Congressmen from the Fourth and Fifth Districts of Milwaukee County respectfully, requesting their immediate attention looking to the remedying of these conditions.

DATE FOR HEARING IN NATURAL GAS CASE—RESOLUTION OF COMMON COUNCIL OF MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning from Stanley Witkowski, city clerk of Milwaukee, Wis., a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee urging the setting of a day certain by the Federal Power Commission to consider the petition filed by the State of Wisconsin in the Phillips Petroleum Natural Gas Rate case.

I absolutely endorse the sentiments expressed in this resolution. I feel that the State of Wisconsin is eminently fair and just in making this request. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Attorney General Vernon Thompson and William E. Torkelson, chief counsel of the Public Service Commission of Wisconsin, have petitioned the Federal Power Commission for a definite hearing date relative to natural-gas rates by the Phillips Petroleum Co., exclusive supplier of natural gas to the Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co., the only wholesale supplier of natural gas to Wisconsin distributing companies, including the Milwaukee Gas Light Co.; and

Whereas the wholesale rates charged by the Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. are regulated by said Federal Power Commission but there is no regulation of rates charged by said Phillips Petroleum Co. at the well head; and

Whereas the Public Service Commission of Wisconsin contends that unless the cost of natural gas is regulated all the way, any regulation is an empty and meaningless formality; and

Whereas on October 1948 the Federal Power Commission ordered an investigation to determine whether the Natural Gas Act gave the Federal Power Commission power to regulate a natural-gas company and the first hearing was not scheduled until March 20, 1950, and since then there have been seven postponements; and

Whereas on December 19, 1950, said Federal Power Commission, at the request of the said Phillips Petroleum Co., ordered indefinite postponement of the hearings; and

Whereas proponents of lower natural-gas rates contend that the cost of natural gas charged by the Phillips Petroleum Co. and the pipe line company is approximately $5,000,000 per year greater than the amount which would have been permitted under the original contract; and

Whereas the aforesaid petition by Messrs. Thompson and Torkelson suggests a procedure under which the public interest can be fully served and the companies participation in the national mobilization effort can be fully protected: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, That it urges the Federal Power Commission to immediately consider the petition filed by officials of the State of Wisconsin relative to the aforesaid matter; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be sent to United States Senators ALEXANDER WILEY and JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, and to Members of the House of Representatives from the State of Wisconsin.

TEMPORARY PERSONNEL FOR COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. O'CONOR, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 54), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by subsection (g) (2) (C) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the period ending on February 1, 1952, to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, and such technical, clerical, and other assistants, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $19,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

INVESTIGATION OF EXPORT POLICIES BY GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES—INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. O'CONOR, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 56), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That the limitation of expenditures under Senate Resolution 365, Eighty-first Congress (providing for a study and investigation of the administration, execution, and enforcement by Government departments and agencies of the export policies and control regulations of the United States), agreed to December 21, 1950, is hereby increased by $, and such sum together with any unexpended balance of the sum previously authorized to be expended under such resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee and covering obligations incurred under such resolution on or before ————.

LIBERALIZATION OF BASIS FOR CERTAIN SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITIES

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to liberalize the basis for establishing wartime service connection for active tuberculosis and the psychoses, and I ask unanimous consent that a brief explanation of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 712) to liberalize the basis for estabishing wartime service connection for active tuberculosis and the psychoses, introduced by Mr. MARTIN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. MARTIN is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MARTIN

Under existing law (Veterans Regulation No. 1a, part I, par. I (c)), a presumption is established, with certain limitations, that a chronic disease which becomes manifest to a degree of 10 percent or more within 1 year after separation from active service shall be considered to be service incurred or aggravated. The term "chronic disease" is defined and includes "tuberculosis, active (other than pulmonary)" and such other chronic diseases as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may add. Under this same law, pulmonary tuberculosis is given preferential treatment to the extent that a 3-year period after separation from the service is permitted within which the presumption of service connection will be indulged.

The effect of the attached bill would be to treat all types of tuberculosis alike and to accord to this disease the preferential 3-year period described above. The bill would further give this preferential treatment to the psychoses, which at present are among the diseases to which the 1-year service-connection presumption is applicable.

ALLOWANCE OF DEATH PENSION IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide allowance of death pension when death in service is denied service-connection and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred and, without objection, the explanatory statement presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 713) to provide allowance of death pension when death in service is denied service-connection, introduced by Mr. MARTIN, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. MARTIN is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MARTIN

Under existing law (Veterans Regulation No. 1a, pts. I and II), pensions are provided for the dependents of deceased servicemen who died, or die, as a result of personal injury or disease contracted or suffered in line of duty while serving in the Armed Forces of the United States. Lower rates of compensation are provided when the death occurs during peacetime service. Veterans Regulation No. 10, part VIII, provides that an injury or disease incurred during military or naval service will be deemed to have been incurred in line of duty unless such injury or disease was the result of the serviceman's own willful misconduct.

The effect of the attached bill would be to eliminate for those persons covered by the bill the present prerequisite to the granting of pensions that death must not be the result of the deceased's own willful misconduct and to substitute therefor the restrictions contained in the proviso to the bill.

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to extend to personnel of the Armed Forces on active military, naval, or air service on or after June 27, 1950, certain benefits provided by law for veterans of World War II and I ask unanimous consent that a brief statement explaining the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 714) to extend to personnel of the Armed Forces on active military, naval, or air service on or after June 27, 1950, certain benefits provided by law for veterans of World War II, introduced by Mr. MARTIN, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The statement presented by Mr. MARTIN is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MARTIN

The bill would extend to members of the Armed Forces on active service on or after June 27, 1950, the benefits, described below, now provided by law for veterans of World War II.

1. The basis for computing compensation for service-connected disability or death would be the wartime basis rather than the peacetime basis. As you know, compensation payable for disability or death of a member of the armed services incurred during time of war is considerably higher than similar compensation paid for disability or death incurred in active service in time of peace. This proposed change is effected by amending paragraph I (a), part I, of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a).

2. The bill would amend the definition of "veteran of any war" contained in paragraph IV of Veterans Regulation No. 10 so as to include thereunder a member of the Armed Forces of the United States on active service on or after June 27, 1950, and prior to a date to be specified later, either by proclamation of the President or by a concurrent resolution of the Congress. The effect of this change would be to entitle such a veteran to the benefits of those laws whose application is dependent upon the definition contained in paragraph IV of Veterans Regulation No. 10.

3. The bill would extend to veterans described in the paragraph above the benefits of titles II, III, and V of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944. Title II of such act is the title which provides educational benefits for veterans of World War II. Title III of such act is the title which provides for the guaranty of loans for the purchase or construction of homes, farms, and business property for veterans of World War II. Title V of such act provided readjustment allowances (during periods of unemployment) for veterans of World War II. The benefits described would be extended subject to the provisions, conditions, and limitations contained in the enumerated titles of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, with two exceptions:

1. With respect to the benefits of title V (readjustment allowances during periods of unemployment), a person who received benefits under such title on account of World War II service may receive additional benefits on account of service on and after June 27, 1950, without having charged against him the benefits which he received on account of his World War II service. If such a veteran has remaining available to him any benefits on account of his World War II service, he may add such remaining benefits to the benefits to which he becomes entitled on account of his service on or after June 27, 1950, but in such case the total benefits to which he may become entitled may not exceed the maximum permitted under title V (52 weeks of unemployment readjustment allowances). It should perhaps be noted that, because of the termination dates specified in title V, relatively few veterans have any benefits under such title remaining available to them.

2. A person who becomes eligible for the benefits of titles II, III, and V of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act on account of service on or after June 27, 1950, and who at the time of such service was not a citizen of the United States, will be entitled to such benefits only while he is a resident of a State, Territory, or possession of the United States or of the District of Columbia.

In connection with the proposed bill, your attention is called to section 3 of S. 284, Eighty-second Congress, which, on a more limited scale, is intended to grant benefits similar to those granted by section 3 of the proposed bill.

REVISION OF LAWS RELATING TO IMMIGRATION, NATURALIZATION, AND NATIONALITY

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to revise the laws relating to immigration, naturalization, and nationality, and I ask unanimous consent that I may make a short explanation of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred and, without objection, the Senator from Nevada may proceed.

The bill (S. 716) to revise the laws relating to immigration, naturalization, and nationality; and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, during the Eighty-first Congress, on April 20, 1950, I introduced in the Senate S. 3455, which is an omnibus bill to revise the immigration and naturalization laws. As I explained to the Senate at that time, the omnibus bill was the result of an investigation and study of our entire immigration and naturalization system, which was made over the course of 2½ years by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary.

After the introduction of S. 3455, copies of the bill were circulated to interested governmental and nongovernmental agencies for study and comment. Since that time, committee staff members and experts from appropriate Government agencies have been checking and rechecking the thousands of provisions of the bill which revises hundreds of prior immigration or naturalization laws.

The bill which I am today introducing constitutes a refinement of the omnibus bill, S. 3455, which I introduced in the Eighty-first Congress.

It is my understanding that Congressman FRANCIS WALTER, who is chairman of the Immigration Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, will introduce a companion bill in the House of Representatives.

Joint hearings on the Senate bill and on the companion House bill will begin in the course of the next few weeks.

I, therefore, announce that all persons who desire to testify should promptly communicate with Richard Arens, room 449, Senate Office Building, who is the staff member who will set up the schedule for the hearings.

WAIVER OF NATURALIZATION LAWS IN CERTAIN CASES—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the names of the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE] be added as cosponsors of the bill (S. 660) to waive certain requirements of the naturalization laws in the case of persons whose sons or daughters were killed while serving in the Armed Forces of the United States, introduced by me on January 25, 1951, and that the bill be reprinted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE INDUSTRIAL NEEDS IN MANUFACTURE OF MACHINERY FOR PRODUCING AND PROCESSING FARM PRODUCTS

Mr. CAPEHART submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 8), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Whereas the Defense Production Act of 1950 authorizes the President to assign priorities and to allocate materials and facilities; and

Whereas such Defense Production Act of 1950 established a Joint Committee on Defense Production, composed of members of the Committees on Banking and Currency of the Senate and the House of Representatives, to make a continuous study of programs authorized by such act; and

Whereas the industries producing machinery for the production and processing of farm products have special problems under the Defense Production Act in that—

(1) The food and fiber goals during 1951 and during the emergency will exceed the actual production of 1950; and farmers must be provided with as much farm machinery, equipment, and repair parts as they obtained in 1950, and, likewise, processors must be provided with as much machinery, equipment, and repair parts as they obtained in 1950;

(2) The needs of the farmers and the processing industry for machinery and equipment will continue to rise as labor-saving machinery is required to replace workers who will leave farms and processing plants for industrial centers and for military service;

(3) The number of work animals on farms has declined from 26,000,000 in 1920 to 8,000,000 in 1949, and is continuing to decline;

(4) On hundreds of types of machines there are no mortality tables to indicate the replacement, wear-out, and repair rates—but they must be replaced and repaired;

(5) The latest and best estimates of carry-over for the corn crop, one of the most important of all feed crops, is reported to be 100,000,000 bushels below the carry-over needed to obtain adequate livestock production, poultry output, and milk production;

(6) In addition to the necessity for greater corn and other key crops, such as rice, wheat, cotton, and soy beans, essential to fill domestic requirements, there is the necessity of being prepared to meet urgent food needs abroad under our commitments;

(7) To produce as much farm machinery, equipment, and repair parts in 1951 as in 1950 will require at least 2,760,000 tons of steel annually, including the tonnage required for parts and assemblies furnished by outside suppliers;

(8) Equipment for the processing industry will require many thousands of tons of steel, many other materials and components;

(9) Approximately 1,600 factories or manufacturers are engaged in the production of farm machinery and equipment in this country, with a value which is undetermined, but which is increasing greatly during the emergency;

(10) The processing industry likewise has many factories processing the valuable farm products;

(11) The farm machinery and equipment industry produces more than 2,000 varieties of equipment, ranging from the ordinary spiked-tooth harrow to electronically controlled incubators, hygienic milking machines, automatic hay balers, high-precision corn and cotton planters, combines, cotton pickers, and a wide variety of gasoline and Diesel tractors, and power units; and many other items, such as plows, listers, harrows, rollers, pulverizers, stalk cutters, planting, seeding, and fertilizing machinery, cultivators and weeders; sprayers and dusters; harvesting machinery, haying machinery, machines for preparing crops for market or for use, farm elevators and blowers, farm wagons, trucks, and other farm transportation equipment, farm dairy machines and equipment; barn and barnyard equipment, farm poultry equipment, tractors for farm use, farm pumps, windmills and domestic water systems, metal for erection of barns, bins, and repairs, and supplies and equipment for gins, oil mills, and so forth;

(12) Farm machines and equipment are ordinarily distributed through wholesalers, distributors, or manufacturers' branch houses to some 30,000 retailers, and these retailers, in turn, distribute and service the equipment in all 3,000 counties with their 5,800,000 farms and 27,500,000 farm population;

(13) During recent years the manufacturers of farm machinery and equipment have made strenuous efforts in the procurement of materials to keep their factories running and to provide necessary tools to their farmer customers;

(14) It is becoming apparent that in the coming year farm-equipment manufacturers will be increasingly handicapped in obtaining necessary materials for farm-equipment production, if the Government designates more and more producers of other civilian goods to receive preferential treatment from suppliers;

(15) Allocations are either in effect or are being considered for freight cars, lake carriers, fast ocean transports, petroleum pipelines, and the steel warehouse industry; and several of these programs cut straight across the flow of material into farm machinery and equipment plants, as well as processing plants, with the result that one production line after another could be stopped for lack of material in the weeks and months ahead;

(16) Many farmers have taxed their equipment very heavily due to excessive use due to greenbugs, bollworms, bollweevils, excessive rains, hail, and drought;

(17) Many farmers have been unable to replace their machinery because of crop failure or low production in many instances; and

Whereas the industry making farm equipment and machinery requires only 3.8 percent of the finished steel output of the country and employs less than four-tenths of 1 percent of the Nation's gainfully employed; and since the plants processing farm food and fiber likewise require only a small percent of the total supply of critical materials and labor; and since so much in the way of farm production and processing depends on so little in the way of material and manpower that it would be wise to plan for a safe agricultural program and for an adequate equipment program with which to produce and process it; and

Whereas the farm-equipment industry and the farm-product-processing industry will in the future as in the past wholeheartedly support and fully participate in any direct military program necessary to the national defense and will endeavor in every way possible to fit its needs for materials to the military requirements; and

Whereas, in the event military requirements increase to a point where they seriously affect the civilian economy and adequate production of essential nonmilitary items is thereby jeopardized, the farm machinery and equipment industry should then be assured, by all means possible, that the materials it must have to produce sufficient farm equipment and to process such food and fiber farm commodities will be made available; and

Whereas the emergency, and world war III if it comes, in spite of everything that can be done to avoid it, will impose heavy demands upon a food-producing country such as ours; and

Whereas the Armed Forces must be kept in fighting form, and granary reserves must be developed against possible crop failures, shipping losses, and unforeseen military requirements; and

Whereas the health of the civilian population must be preserved for employment at more strenuous work for longer hours; and

Whereas friendly nations, if unable to produce the food they require, as a result of their lands being used as a battleground, must be helped: Therefore be it

Resolved, That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of five Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate and five Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a full and complete investigation and study of the needs of industries of the United States producing machinery and equipment for the production and processing of farm products for the purpose of determining: (1) The requirements of such industries for critical materials essential to the production of so much of such machinery and equipment as the committee may have determined in the course of its investigation to be sufficient to assure the successful prosecution of the Nation's food, feed, and fiber program; (2) the necessity for securing from the appropriate administrative authority preference for such industries in the allocation of such materials; and (3) those products (other than such machinery and equipment) essential to the national defense, which might be manufactured by such industries during the present emergency.

SEC. 3. The joint committee shall advise the Joint Committee on Defense Production of its findings from time to time and otherwise cooperate with such Joint Committee on Defense Production and shall report to the Senate (or to the Secretary of the Senate if the Senate is not in session) and to the House of Representatives (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session), as soon as practicable during the present Congress the results of its investigation and study, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

SEC. 4. The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-second Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable.

SEC. 5. (a) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties.

(b) The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of the disbursements so made.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR INVESTIGATION OF PROBLEMS RELATING TO AIRLINE INDUSTRY

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 55), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

Resolved, That the time within which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may complete the investigation authorized by Senate Resolution 50, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to April 11, 1949, as continued by Senate Resolution 308, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to July 27, 1950, hereby is extended to June 30, 1951.

INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. KEFAUVER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 57), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 202, agreed to May 3, 1950 (establishing a special committee to investigate organized crime), is hereby increased by $50,000.

SUBMISSION OF REPORTS BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. KEFAUVER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 58), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That section 6 of Senate Resolution 202, agreed to May 3, 1950, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. The Committee shall make an interim report to the Senate on or before February 28, 1951, and a final report to the Senate on or before March 31, 1951, with respect to the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem advisable. All authority conferred by this resolution shall terminate on March 31, 1951."

ESA FOR DEMOCRATS ONLY—ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, we are off to a bad start. Here is the pattern, as summarized in four words in an article in the Washington Daily News of Saturday, January 27, 1951, ESA for Democrats Only.

This was the conclusion of the Washington staff of the Scripps-Howard newspapers after the hectic activities in the Nation's Capital last week.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the column to which I refer be reprinted at this point in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

ESA FOR DEMOCRATS ONLY

Economic Stabilization Agency (ESA) is being built into Nation-wide Democratic machine.

Democratic National Committee is in charge; is passing on candidates for every job paying $4,000 and up.

Committee asks Democratic governors, Senators, State chairmen, national committeemen, for names, sends them on to Price Administrator Michael V. DiSalle.

Party loyalty is a test. No Dixiecrats accepted and no one who opposed President Truman's renomination or otherwise offended top Democrats. Backing from potent party figures is required. Some appointees have price-control experience; most have not. Lists submitted by Republican officials aren't considered.

It's a contrast to procedure in OPA 10 years ago. Politicians weren't consulted, party labels weren't checked. One result: Constant attacks on OPA from Capitol Hill, constant threats to withhold appropriations.

A few Democrats in Congress worry about staffing ESA with party men from top to bottom because it pins responsibility for success or failure of new price-control agency directly on party. They're afraid it may be unpopular by next election. Same men refuse to sponsor candidates for district office, for same reason. But they're the exception.

Regional administrator for Rocky Mountain States will be George Rock, president of Truman-Barkley Club in 1948. Before Alan Valentine was fired, a five-man panel he had named picked another man.

New outfit's a haven for "lame ducks." Already slated for jobs: Vernon Dwyer, Indiana State director, defeated Democratic candidate for Congress; Doc O. A. Noland, consultant to DiSalle, and father of a defeated Indiana Congressman; Herbert Meighan, defeated for reelection as mayor of Gadsen, Ala.; James G. Lyons, New York regional office, defeated for reelection to State legislature; Michael Howlett, Jr., Illinois temporary consultant, defeated for State treasurer.

Washington's full of party officials elbowing each other in rush to pie counter.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the agreement previously entered into, the Senate will proceed to the call of the calendar for the consideration of measures to which there is no objection. The Secretary will state the first order of business on the calendar.

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 6) favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 17, 1951, pp. 352–353) was considered and agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 17, 1951, pp. 353–356) was considered and agreed to.

SOLICITATION OR ACCEPTANCE OF FEES IN CONNECTION WITH FEDERAL APPOINTMENTS

The bill (S. 15) to amend section 215 of title 18 of the United States Code was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 215 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"Whoever solicits or receives any money or thing of value in consideration of aiding any person to obtain any appointive office or place under the United States either by referring his name to any executive department, agency, or independent establishment of the United States for consideration, or otherwise, or by requiring the payment of a fee from any person because such person has secured any appointive office or place under the United States shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

MAILING OBSCENE MATTER—AMENDMENT OF TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE

The bill (S. 34) to amend title 18 of the United States Code, relating to the mailing of obscene matter, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 1461 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"Every obscene, lewd, lascivious, indecent, filthy, or vile article, matter, thing, device, or substance; and * * *."

SEC. 2. The fifth paragraph of section 1461 of title 18, United States Code, reading "Every letter, packet, or package, or other mail matter containing any filthy, vile, or indecent thing, device, or substance; and" is hereby repealed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 35) to provide for the appointment of deputy United States marshals without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws and regulations was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I notice that the bill deals with provisions of the civil-service laws and regulations. I have talked with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary about the bill, and we are considering sending it to the Committee on Civil Service and Post Office for further consideration. Therefore, I ask that the bill be passed over at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, what is the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is Calendar No. 6, Senate bill 35.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator? Does he ask that the bill be passed over?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes, Mr. President; I ask that the bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN E. TURRI AND EDWARD H. TURRI

The bill (S. 44) for the relief of John E. Turri and Edward H. Turri was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b) and (c) of section 404 of the Nationality Act of 1940, John E. Turri and Edward H. Turri, honorably discharged United States citizen veterans of World War II, shall be held and considered to have retained their United States citizenship regardless of any period of residence outside of the United States: Provided, That the said John E. Turri and Edward H. Turri return to the United States for permanent residence within 1 year following the effective date of this act.

RUTH OBRE DUBONNET

The bill (S. 46) for the relief of Ruth Obre Dubonnet was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mrs. Ruth Obre Dubonnet, a native-born former citizen of the United States, born in New York City on January 28, 1900, who lost citizenship of the United States on May 18, 1943, under section 401 (a) of the Nationality Act of 1940 (8 U. S. C. 801), may be naturalized by taking, prior to 1 year from the date of enactment of this act, before any court referred to in subsection (a) of section 301 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended, the oaths prescribed by section 335 of the said act. From and after naturalization under this act, Mrs. Ruth Obre Dubonnet shall have the same citizenship status which she had immediately prior to its loss.

MR. AND MRS. LUCILLO GRASSI

The bill (S. 48) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Lucillo Grassi was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 401 and section 404 of the Nationality Act of 1940 (relating to loss of nationality) Mr. and Mrs. Lucillo Grassi shall not be considered to have lost their United States citizenship because of voting in a foreign election or because of any period of residence outside the United States prior to the enactment of this act.

ARTHUR HENRIK SORENSEN ET AL.

The bill (S. 51) for the relief of Arthur Henrik Sorensen, Maren Anderson Sorensen, and minor child, Evelyn Sorensen, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Arthur Henrik Sorensen, Maren Anderson Sorensen, and minor child, Evelyn Sorensen, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fees and head taxes. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct three numbers from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

DELFO GIORGI

The bill (S. 52) for the relief of Delfo Giorgi was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Delfo Giorgi shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fee and head tax. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

VITTORIO QUILICI

The bill (S. 53) for the relief of Vittorio Quilici was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Vittorio Quilici shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fee and head tax. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

STELLA JEAN STATHOPOULOU

The bill (S. 54) for the relief of Stella Jean Stathopoulou was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I am not going to object to the bill; but, as I recall, objection was made to consideration of a similar bill during the last call of the calendar at the last session. I wish to inquire whether there is objection to the bill at the present time.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is a case of a United States citizen——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. No, Mr. President; but I should like to ask whether there is any difference between this bill and a similar bill which was on the calendar at the last session.

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill was not objected to at that time.

Mr. WHERRY. It was not objected to?

Mr. McCARRAN. Not so far as I understand.

Mr. WHERRY. Then I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 54) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, Stella Jean Stathopoulou shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required head tax and visa fee. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State is authorized and directed to instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

ERTOGROUL OSMAN AND MEHMED FAHREDDIN

The bill (S. 57) for the relief of Ertogroul Osman and Mehmed Fahreddin was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Ertogroul Osman and Mehmed Fahreddin shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fees and head taxes. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such aliens as provided for in this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct two numbers from the appropriate quotas for the first year that such quotas are available.

EDULJI DINSHAW AND HIS SISTER, MRS. BACHOO DINSHA WORONZOW

The bill (S. 58) for the relief of Edulji Dinshaw and his sister, Mrs. Bachoo Dinsha Woronzow, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Edulji Dinshaw and his sister, Mrs. Bachoo Dinsha Woronzow, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fees and head taxes. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such aliens as provided for in this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct two numbers from the appropriate quotas for the first year that such quotas are available.

VERNON CRUDGE

The bill (S. 59) for the relief of Vernon Crudge was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Vernon Crudge, who was born in China of British parents, shall be deemed to have been born in Great Britain.

STEFANOS STEFANOU

The bill (S. 62) for the relief of Stefanos Stefanou was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the Attorney General of the United States is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence in the United States of Stefanos Stefanou as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fee and head tax.

SEC. 2. Upon enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year the said quota is available.

MARIE LOUISE ARDANS

The bill (S. 63) for the relief of Marie Louise Ardans was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question about the bill, if I may. If, in order to ask a question, I have to temporarily reserve the right to object to the present consideration of the bill, I shall do so. However, I simply wish to ask a question: Is it not a fact that the report shows that administrative relief is available and might be given to this person?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not think so. I should like to make a brief statement regarding the bill, and probably I shall answer the Senator's question in the course of the statement.

Mr. WHERRY. I merely wish to raise a question as to whether it is good policy for the Congress to provide legislative relief before all possible administrative relief has been taken advantage of.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that that is one matter which the committee constantly has in mind, namely, that when administrative relief is available we try to avoid the provision of legislative relief.

Mr. President, this is the case of a woman who is a native and a citizen of France. She is presently being supported by her two brothers, both of whom are engaged in the ranching business in the United States. One of them is in Buffalo, Wyo., and the other is in Reno, Nev. She no longer has any relatives in France and has no income of her own. Her brothers are quite able and willing to take care of her.

The purpose of the bill is to let this woman remain in the United States. Immigration visas under the French quota are not presently available to aliens temporarily residing in the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. If such persons leave the United States, cannot they apply for admission and be allowed to return within 2 or 3 months? That is my point.

Mr. McCARRAN. The French quota is presently heavily oversubscribed; in fact, the quota for every nation is now heavily oversubscribed.

Mr. WHERRY. I have been unofficially advised that as of Friday, January 19, the French quota was not in that condition; or if the handling of the applications of persons seeking admission under French quotas was not current, it was nearly so, and that persons awaiting admission to the United States under that quota probably would not have to wait for more than 2 months, or not more than 3 months at the most.

I am not objecting to this bill, because I know the Senator from Nevada is attempting to iron out all these problems, and I also know that he is short of staff members for his committee and needs additional staff members in order to be able to make sure that all available administrative relief is taken advantage of, before attempts are made to provide legislative relief.

However, I wish to point out that, if I am not mistaken, the person referred to in this bill would be inconvenienced only to the extent of having to wait outside the United States for 2 or 3 months, after which time she would be able to enter the United States under the French quota.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if what the Senator from Nebraska says were factual, it would have previously been called to the attention of the staff of the committee, I am sure. However, I believe the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not insisting on it; I merely point out that if administrative relief is available we should proceed on that basis, rather than on the basis of the provision of legislative relief.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska does not have to raise that point with me; in the committee we are constantly on the alert in regard to that situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 63) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Marie Louise Ardans, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of head tax and visa fee. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

TRANSPORTATION OF OBSCENE MATTER PROHIBITED

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 27) to prohibit the transportation of obscene matter in interstate or foreign commerce, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 2, line 15, after the word "shall", to strike out "be presumptive evidence" and insert "create a presumption", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the analysis of chapter 71 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by inserting, immediately after and underneath item 1464, as contained in such analysis, the following new item:

"1465. Transportation of obscene matters for sale or distribution."

SEC. 2. Chapter 71 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by inserting, immediately following section 1464 of such chapter, a new section, to be designated as section 1465, and to read as follows:

"§ 1465. Transportation of obscene matters for sale or distribution.

"Whoever knowingly transports in interstate or foreign commerce for the purpose of sale or distribution, any obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy book, pamphlet, picture, film, paper, letter, writing, print, silhouette, drawing, figure, image, cast, phonograph recording, electrical transcription or other article capable of producing sound, or any other matter of indecent or immoral character, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"The transportation as aforesaid of two or more copies of any publication or two or more of any article of the character described above, or a combined total of five such publications and articles, shall create a presumption that such publications or articles are intended for sale or distribution, but such presumption shall be rebuttable.

"When any person is convicted of a violation of this act, the court in its judgment of conviction may, in addition to the penalty prescribed, order the confiscation and disposal of such items described herein which were found in the possession or under the immediate control of such person at the time of his arrest."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 32) to amend title 28, United States Code, section 456, so as to increase to $15 per day the limit on subsistence expenses allowed to justices and judges traveling while attending court or transacting official business at places other than their official stations and to authorize reimbursement for such travel by privately owned automobiles at the rate of 7 cents per mile was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard, and the bill goes over.

ALFRED F. BOSCHE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 45) for the relief of Alfred F. Bosche, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in line 8, after the word "States," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the said Alfred F. Bosche returns to the United States to reside permanently within 2 years following the effective date of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 404, of the Nationality Act of 1940, Alfred F. Bosche, an honorably discharged veteran of the United States Armed Forces, shall be held and considered to have retained his United States citizenship regardless of any period of residence outside the United States: Provided, That the said Alfred F. Basche returns to the United States to reside permanently within 2 years following the effective date of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS KUEEN SAN THU ET AL.

The bill (S. 56) for the relief of Francis Kueen San Thu, Mary Luke Thu, Catherine Thu, Victoria Thu, and Anne Bernadette Thu was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Francis Kueen San Thu, Mary Luke Thu, Catherine Thu, Victoria Thu, and Anne Bernadette Thu shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fees and head taxes. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such aliens as provided for in this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct five numbers from the appropriate quotas for the first year that such quotas are available.

PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF PAMPHLET ENTITLED "SELLING TO YOUR GOVERNMENT"

The resolution (S. Res. 40) providing for the printing of additional copies of the pamphlet entitled "Selling to Your Government" was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] whether the resolution makes provision for something new in the way of appropriations. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], who is unavoidably absent, has taken up this matter.

Mr. HAYDEN. This resolution provides for the printing of additional copies of the pamphlet entitled "Selling to Your Government." The total cost of printing 30,000 copies would be $589.55. The committee was advised by the Small Business Committee that it has received letters from all over the United States requesting copies of this pamphlet.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, under those circumstances there will be no objection to this particular item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 40), submitted by Mr. SPARKMAN on January 17, 1951, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 30,000 additional copies of the pamphlet entitled "Selling to Your Government", such additional copies to be for the use of the Select Committee on Small Business.

ADDITIONAL PERSONNEL FOR COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE

The resolution (S. Res. 19) authorizing the temporary employment of additional personnel by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona the facts in regard to the resolution. It is another resolution to which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] objected. So I should like to have the resolution passed over at this call of the calendar.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I think there will be no objection to the resolution; but if there is objection, the Senator from South Carolina can explain the resolution better than I can, I am sure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me inquire whether the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] told the Senator from South Carolina that he wished to have the resolution go over.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have not talked to the Senator from Louisiana concerning the resolution. However, the resolution, if adopted, would allow an additional expense of $3,000 for this purpose; and if the authority requested in this connection is provided, we shall avoid the expenditure of almost $11,000 annually, instead. In other words, at the present time, without additional authority, the committee can employ an additional administrative assistant or expert at a salary of $10,800. However, I do not wish to do that.

So I hope we can obtain authority for the employment of an additional member of the staff at a salary of $3,000, thus avoiding the expenditure of a considerably greater amount. It is a matter of saving some money. I am on the committee. We need another stenographer, but we do not need two experts at this time. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Committee on Rules and Administration was satisfied there would be a saving, and therefore favorably reported the resolution.

Mr. McFARLAND. I am sure the Senator from Louisiana would not object, under the circumstances, and I do not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 19) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by section 134 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Eighty-second Congress to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators and such technical, clerical, and other assistants, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $3,000 (in addition to amounts heretofore made available for such purposes), shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

INVESTIGATION OF FUEL RESERVES

The resolution (S. Res. 33) extending the authority for the investigation of the fuel reserves and to formulate a fuel policy for the United States was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. This resolution comes within the objections made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. I therefore object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to withhold the objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee that I consulted the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] last Thursday, after the objection had been made. I find that this resolution and the next one, Calendar No. 36, Senate Resolution 32, do not fall within the objections raised by the Senator from Louisiana. He gave me his assurance that he would have no objection to their adoption. I may say that in each instance the resolution, and the authority granted thereunder, terminate on the 20th of June. On page 659 of the RECORD for January 25, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] said:

May I suggest, if the Senator insists on action being taken now, that we extend the life of the existing subcommittees to June 30, the end of the present fiscal year?

His objection was directed toward the extension of authority beyond the fiscal year. Neither of these resolutions conflicts with the policy which he laid down, because the authority expires as of the 30th of June. I am very glad to be able to advise the Senator from Tennessee that the Senator from Louisiana assured me he would have no objection to these two resolutions in this respect.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator give me the further assurance that an extension will not be requested on and after July 1? If so, I shall withdraw the objection; if not, I shall feel obliged to insist upon it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say to the Senator that it is my purpose, and I know it is the purpose of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, to complete both of these studies before the 30th of June. I have no reason to believe that I shall come back to the Senate, or that the committee will come back, asking for any more money.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will give me the same sort of assurance that he gave the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], I shall withdraw the objection; otherwise, I shall have to make the objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have done my best to give the Senator that assurance.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. First, I want the distinguished Senator from Wyoming to know that I am in favor of extending the resolution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. WHERRY. I say that because, if the study is cut off now and a report is not made, what has been spent will have been lost to a large extent. But I do not quite understand the statement by the Senator of the reasons for taking these two out of the category of the other investigations. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] objected to the expenditures, and while it is true, as I understand, that no money will be requested in addition to the amounts called for by these resolutions, it is further the fact that any of the appropriations unexpended would be returned in the event of the investigations being cut off.

The point I am trying to make is that I am for each of these resolutions. I think the cost will be considerable. I think the Senator from Louisiana stated it will cost 10 times more to conduct investigations during the present year than it cost 10 years ago. That is probably true. But I favor these resolutions, because all that has been done heretofore will have been lost if these committees are not continued. They are supposed to complete their work by the end of June. If the distinguished Senator from Wyoming could give me assurance, and could assure the Senator from Tennessee, that the studies would actually terminate on that date, then I can see why the resolutions should be regarded as being in categories different from the others. But if such assurance is not forthcoming, it seems to me it is a question of expense, and, if these resolutions were to be adopted, I should like to see the others agreed to also; for example, Senate Resolution 17, submitted by the Senator from Arkansas, regarding the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which is also on the calendar, and is Calendar No. 39. We shall lose the benefit of all the work heretofore done unless the resolution can be adopted enabling the committee to bring its work up to date before it goes out of existence. I merely desired to make that point clear.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely correct. If the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Wyoming will give us that assurance, I shall have no objection to the work being continued to July 1, but not beyond that. The Senator from Wyoming has given us that assurance. He has construed his words, and I have accepted them. I think the Senator from Arkansas will do likewise.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. We only ask for an extension to April 30. I can absolutely assure the Senator that I shall not ask either for an extension or for more money beyond that date; much less, following June 30.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, with that assurance, I withdraw the objection made on behalf of the Senator from Louisiana and myself.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, Mr. President, I feel that an amendment should be offered to fix the termination date of both resolutions.

Mr. HAYDEN. The date is in the pending resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. But there is also a resolution regarding RFC.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is a date in each resolution submitted by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe that is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the same amendment be adopted now, if the Senator will offer an amendment fixing the time.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is already included.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The date in my resolution is April 30, which is even before June 30.

Mr. McKELLAR. We shall leave it that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 33) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 239, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to August 15, 1950, and as further extended by Senate Resolution 374, agreed to December 21, 1950 (providing for a study and investigation of the fuel reserves and to formulate a fuel policy of the United States), is hereby continued through June 30, 1951.

XCVII—46

RELATIONSHIP OF THE UNITED STATES WITH THE INDIANS—EXTENSION OF INVESTIGATION

The resolution (S. Res. 32) extending the authority for an investigation of the relationship of the United States with the Indians was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not wish to reserve the right to object, but there is no doubt from what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that this is the resolution on which the assurance was given by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I gave assurance with respect to two resolutions, Calendar No. 35, Senate Resolution 33, and Calendar No. 36, Senate Resolution 32.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 32) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 292, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to July 13, 1950 (to investigate the relations of the United States with the Indians and Indian tribes), is hereby continued through June 30, 1951.

TEMPORARY ADDITIONAL PERSONNEL FOR COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS—INCREASE OF LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

The resolution (S. Res. 51) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to employ temporary additional personnel and increasing the limit of expenditures was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McKELLAR. Under instructions of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] I am obliged to object.

Mr. McFARLAND. Will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. I withhold it.

Mr. McFARLAND. It was my understanding that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] had no objection to this particular resolution. I feel that it is imperative that it be acted upon. If it is not considered now, I must give notice to the Senate that I shall later move that the resolution be considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is within the province of the majority leader to move to consider it at any time he wishes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee whether it is not a fact that the legislative subcommittee will terminate as of February 1.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This is not a resolution regarding a legislative subcommittee, but a standing subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. WHERRY. What I mean is that the funds will be exhausted as of February 1, will they not?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is true.

Mr. WHERRY. It is a legislative committee, is it not?

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is a standing subcommittee.

Mr. WHERRY. Therefore, if the funds are not available after February 1, the committee will be without funds and, in reality, will be out of business. Is that not correct?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thought we were discussing Calendar No. 38.

Mr. WHERRY. We were discussing Calendar No. 36, Senate Resolution 32.

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes; I find we were discussing Calendar 36, Senate Resolution 32.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should like to make a brief statement regarding the resolution, if I may have the floor for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, regarding Senate Resolution 51, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is undertaking to make a study of the Reorganization Act of 1946, with a view of determining what amendments should be made to that act. We have secured temporarily the services of Dr. Galloway, who is with the Library of Congress, and who was on the staff of former Senator La Follette and the other members of the committee which originally, after long hearings, drafted the act. We have simply borrowed the doctor from his present position. Of course, the committee wants to pay him. The purpose of the resolution is to have his counsel and his assistance during the period of study of the Reorganization Act. I hope the Senate will act on the resolution before February 1. It is not all-important that it act today.

May I inquire of the able Senator from Tennessee if he knows when the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] expects to return to the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand he will be back tomorrow.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Frankly, I seriously doubt that the Senator had in mind this resolution at the time he was speaking of funds for special investigating committees.

Mr. McKELLAR. He stated that he had reference to appropriations for subcommittees and special committees. I told him I would make the objection in his name.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This does not have to do with the work of an investigating subcommittee of the Senate. It has to do with work of the full committee, not of a subcommittee or a special committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me suggest that the resolution go over, and we will take it up later.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The resolution will be passed over.

EXPRESSION OF AMERICA'S FRIENDSHIP FOR THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I desire to take a moment to say that the suggestion which I made a week ago——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the Senate.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, if we had used good judgment and had placed loud speakers in the Senate 2 years ago, we would not have difficulty in hearing Senators. We became sufficiently modern to remodel the Senate Chamber, but we have not taken advantage of the amplification facilities which I see have been halfway arranged for on the floor of the Chamber. I hope that in the near future we will go the rest of the way. It would be much easier for me.

Mr. President, the suggestion I made a week ago that the Senate go on record as expressing its friendship to the Russian people as distinguished from the gentlemen in the Kremlin has had a splendid reception in the press of the Nation. I rose to state that although the resolution has not yet been presented, it is in process of preparation, and I do not want the Members of the Senate or of the press to think that simply because the resolution has not been presented during the past week the idea which I expressed is going to be abandoned. It will be pressed with a great deal of vigor. I personally believe that it is the wise thing to do, and Members of the Senate will, I am sure, have an opportunity to vote on the resolution before a long period of time has elapsed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the next measure on the calendar.

INCREASE OF LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES BY COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 18) to increase the limit of expenditures for hearings and investigations by the Committee on Armed Services, which had been reported from the Committee on Armed Services with amendments and subsequently reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with additional amendments, as follows:

From the Committee on Armed Services, with amendments, in line 10, after the word "resolution", to strike out ", which shall", in the same line, after the word "not", to insert "to"; and in the same line, after the figures "$115,000", to strike out the comma and insert "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951,".

From the Committee on Rules and Administration, with additional amendments, as follows: In line 6, after the word "ending", to strike out "December" and insert "January"; and in line 10, after the word "resolution", to strike out the comma and "which shall not exceed $115,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951," as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Armed Services, and insert "shall not exceed $190,000 for the period beginning February 1, 1951, through January 31, 1952, and", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That in carrying out the duties imposed upon it by section 136 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (Public Law 601, 79th Cong.), the Committee on Armed Services, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the period ending January 31, 1952, to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution shall not exceed $190,000 for the period beginning February 1, 1951, through January 31, 1952, and shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that means that the resolution will continue through January 31, 1952.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Nebraska is correct. If I recall correctly, he suggested the amendment in the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

STUDY OF OPERATIONS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION AND ITS SUBSIDIARIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 17) continuing the authority for a study of the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries, which had been reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with an amendment in line 9, after the word "continued" to strike out "until May 1," and insert "through April 30,", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the authority of the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 219, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to on February 8, 1950 (providing for a study of the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries), as continued by Senate Resolution 279, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to on May 19, 1950, and Senate Resolution 307, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to on July 13, 1950, is hereby continued through April 30, 1951, and the limit of expenditures under such resolution is hereby increased by $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL PERSONNEL BY COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY—INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

The resolution (S. Res. 6) authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to employ additional personnel from February 1, 1951, to January 31, 1952, and increasing the limit of expenditures, which had been reported by Mr. McCARRAN from the Committee on the Judiciary without amendment, and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and reported from that committee by Mr. HAYDEN on January 8, 1951, without amendment was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada to explain the resolution.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is to provide an appropriation to enable the Judiciary Committee to carry on its work in connection with immigration and naturalization matters which have been assigned to it by law.

Mr. McKELLAR. How did it happen that it was not provided for in the deficiency bill or in the regular appropriation bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Because it is different work from the regular work of the committee, in that it has to be conducted by a special staff. We received last year for consideration a total of approximately 4,000 general immigration cases and approximately 1,400 private immigration cases. All those cases have to be screened, dealt with, and reported to the Senate. This resolution makes provision for an additional sum of money to give the committee the needed facilities with which to work.

Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that if objection is made to the consideration of the resolution, the Committee on the Judiciary will be found with a staff but with no money to pay the staff on and after the first day of February. In other words, we have money to operate only until February, and then the staff will be through. The work continues just the same, but no result can be accomplished without the staff. This is not a case of a special committee; this is the Committee on the Judiciary which is doing the work which the law assigns to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I see there is one other measure on the calendar to be considered, and in view of the request of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], I suggest that the resolution go to the foot of the calendar, and then it can be taken up by motion.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is my intention, if the Senator objects, to endeavor to have the resolution considered on motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I usually find myself in complete agreement with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, but many of the bills on the calendar prior to the point where this resolution was reached involve questions of immigration requiring research and investigation of persons who seek to remain in the United States. If this were a special committee, the life of which is supposed to terminate at a specific date, there might be some justification for the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] offering a blanket objection to the consideration of these resolutions. But that is not the case.

I know the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee does not want to hurt the work of a legislative committee. I hope that point may be made clear. I do not know that it has yet been made clear. The Senator from Nevada did not press it.

It seems to me this is one legislative committee which stands between the United States of America and persons who are involved in deportation proceedings. The Judiciary Committee is the only committee which does that work. As the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee knows, it is very difficult to staff a committee when it is not known, except from month to month or from day to day, whether such staff will be employed.

Let me remind the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that I served on the Judiciary Committee for many years. I know that under the Reorganization Act the additional work devolved on that committee amounts to between 40 and 50 percent of all the resolutions and reports that come before the Senate. That shows that the Committee on the Judiciary must have the necessary staff if they are properly to protect the interests of our citizens.

I shall not make an extended plea. I know what the Senator from Tennessee wishes to do. He wishes to carry out the request of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to the effect that no unnecessary money be appropriated for special committees, and so forth. I commend the Senator. However, we are dealing with a legislative committee. To deprive the committee of the necessary funds is to jeopardize and penalize a legislative committee of the Senate, which was set up under the Reorganization Act. Unless the resolution is agreed to the staff of the committee will terminate its work on February 1. If the Senator from Louisiana does not return to the Senate by the 1st of February, the committee will have lost its staff.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, in support of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, I wish to say that today there are pending before the Committee on the Judiciary several cases—and there are innumerable other instances of the same kind—involving persons of supposed subversive tendencies who are in the country. Those persons are being screened by the Committee on the Judiciary. Unless a continuing investigation is made by the committee serious consequences may result. It is only through the work of the committee that such persons may be detected and investigated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if I have additional time, I should like to make one further observation. Of course, if the Senate had seen fit to adopt the proposed change in the rule which was submitted by me at the beginning of the session, under which more Senators could have been assigned to do the work of the Committee on the Judiciary, and thus provide a more equitable distribution of the workload, it might have been possible to get along without some of the important staff members. However, in view of the workload which is imposed on the committee, and in the light of our failure to increase the membership of the committee from 13 to 17 members, so that Senators could do some of the additional work of the committee, the only thing to do, it seems to me, is to have an adequate staff to handle the cases which come before the committee.

In conclusion, I should like to say once again that I know what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for whom I have the profoundest respect, and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] are attempting to do. I commend them for it. However, I appeal to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations not to object to the resolution, particularly because it relates to a legislative committee which is trying to perform its functions. As the ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules and Administration I know that the requested appropriations are justified.

Mr. MCKELLAR. No matter before the Congress of the United States is of greater importance at the present time than that of having our immigration affairs looked into. I want to say that no one in the Senate has done a better job than has the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] in dealing with the question of immigration since it has been placed under his jurisdiction. He and his committee have done a grand work. I think it ought to be continued. Inasmuch as the committee is functioning under a specific statutory provision, and because we are at this particular time in a turmoil on the whole question of communism and other isms infiltrating into this country from abroad, I shall take the liberty of differing on this question with my good friend from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER].

Therefore I shall not object to the resolution. I believe the internal interests of the people of the country ought to be safeguarded. Such matters as those referred to should be scrutinized. Therefore, instead of refusing an appropriation for this purpose to the committee of my distinguished friend from Nevada, money should be provided for his committee, and should be given at this time.

I withdraw my objection and take the chance that the Senator from Louisiana will adopt the view I am taking. I think the resolution ought to be agreed to in the interest of the Government. I am very much more afraid of communism in this country than I am of communism in other countries of the world. Communism in other countries does not concern me very much; but we should combat communism in this country. I know there is not in the Senate a better man to look after matters of immigration than the Senator from Nevada. I withdraw all objections on my part and on the part of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for his timely observations. I am satisfied that the adoption of the resolution will result satisfactorily to everyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 366, RELATING TO INTERNAL SECURITY OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 7) to increase the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 366, Eighty-first Congress, relating to the internal security of the United States, which had been reported by Mr. MCCARRAN from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in line 4, after the word "by", to insert "$150,000", and referred to Committee on Rules and Administration, and subsequently reported by Mr. HAYDEN from the Committee on Rules and Administration with additional amendments, as follows:

In line 4, to strike out "$150,000", as proposed to be amended, and insert "$75,000"; and in line 10, to strike out "December" and insert "January", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the limitation of expenditures under Senate Resolution 366, Eighty-first Congress, relating to the internal security of the United States, agreed to December 21, 1950, is hereby increased by $75,000, and such sum together with any unexpended balance of the sum previously authorized to be expended under such resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee and covering obligations incurred under such resolution on or before January 31, 1952.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution, as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

WORK OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, I think it proper that I should say a word at this point with respect to the magnanimous and rightful attitude taken by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. We hope that we may live up to his kind words. I believe the Senate should know what the Committee on the Judiciary does.

The workload of the Senate Judiciary Committee during the two sessions of the Eighty-first Congress, consisted of 40.9 percent of all Senate bills and resolutions introduced; 52.7 percent of all House bills and resolutions presented in the Senate; 44.1 percent of all bills and resolutions irrespective of origin.

Not only has the Judiciary Committee received a far larger share of the Senate's total workload than any other standing committee of the Senate; it has also performed a larger share of all committee work than any other committee. Of 2,701 written reports filed in the Senate by all committees, the Judiciary Committee has filed 1,417, which represents 52.4 percent.

The total of reports filed to the Senate does not give the whole picture of committee activity, because committee consideration of many bills resulted in adverse action and indefinite postponement. Furthermore, the committee has handled and disposed of more than 4,716 individual immigration cases, involving suspension of deportation. Each immigration case is equivalent to a bill.

During both sessions of the Eighty-first Congress, the Judiciary Committee has received 2,039 Senate bills and resolutions and 959 House bills and resolutions, making a total of 2,998 bills and resolutions.

As of the close of the Eighty-first Congress, the committee had disposed of 1,659 Senate bills and resolutions and 917 House bills and resolutions, or a total of 2,576 bills and resolutions.

Of the bills thus disposed of, 276 were general bills other than claims or immigration, 938 were private relief bills,

1,274 were private immigration bills, 31 were general claims bills, and 57 were general immigration bills.

Committee approval was granted to 647 Senate bills and resolutions and 783 House bills and resolutions, or a total of 1,430 bills and resolutions of both Houses.

It will be noted that written reports were filed by the committee with respect to all but 13 of the 1,430 bills and resolutions approved.

Of the bills and resolutions acted upon favorably, 149 were general bills other than claims or immigration, 574 were private relief bills, 674 were private immigration bills, 20 were general claims bills, and 13 were general immigration bills.

Bills indefinitely postponed by the committee included 1,012 Senate bills and resolutions, 134 House bills and resolutions, or a total of 1,146 bills and resolutions of both Houses.

Of the bills thus acted upon unfavorably, 127 were general bills other than claims or immigration, 364 were private relief bills, 600 were private immigration bills, 44 were general immigration bills, and 11 were general claims bills.

Measures pending before the committee at the close of the Eighty-first Congress included 380 Senate bills and resolutions and 42 House bills and resolutions, or a total of 422 bills and resolutions of both Houses.

Of these bills, 102 are general bills other than immigration and claims, 96 are private relief bills, 209 are private immigration bills, 7 are general claims bills, and 8 are general immigration bills.

Committee action, in most cases, must await reports from interested departments and agencies in the executive branch. When the Eighty-first Congress adjourned sine die, the number of bills and resolutions pending before the committee, with respect to which reports had been requested, but not received, was 225, of which 29 were general bills other than claims or immigration, 36 were private relief bills, and 160 were private immigration bills.

Thus it will be seen that out of the 2,998 bills and resolutions referred to the committee, the number of cases in which the committee has not acted but in which the committee either had received the reports or deemed reports unnecessary totaled only 197, of which 73 were general bills other than claims or immigration, 60 were private relief bills, 49 were private immigration bills, 7 were general claims bills, and 8 were general immigration bills.

It will be noted the committee disposed of 917 House bills and resolutions out of 959 such measures referred to it, leaving only 42 House bills and resolutions pending. This means the committee took action on 95.6 percent of all House measures received.

In comparison, out of 2,039 Senate bills and resolutions referred to it, the committee acted upon 1,659, leaving 380 Senate bills and resolutions pending. This means that although the committee had to start from scratch in all such cases, action was taken on 81.3 percent of all Senate measures received.

In this connection it should be noted the committee received 58 Senate bills and 5 House bills subsequent to the reconvening of the Congress on November 27, 1950.

Suspension of deportation by the Attorney General, under authority delegated by the Congress, are reported to the Congress in groups; but in the committee, each such individual case requires separate investigation, appraisal, and action. At the beginning of the first session of the Eighty-first Congress, there were pending in the committee 1,501 cases of suspension of deportation, to which were added 6,037 additional cases submitted during the Eighty-first Congress making a total of 7,538 cases, of which 4,716 were approved, 59 were rejected, and 10 were withdrawn by the Attorney General; leaving 2,753 cases in process.

During the Eighty-first Congress, the committee received 264 Executive nominations, of which 117 were Federal judges, 61 were United States district attorneys, 60 were United States marshals, 1 was Attorney General of the United States, 1 was Assistant Solicitor General, 5 were assistant attorneys general, 1 was Commissioner of Patents, 4 were members of the Displaced Persons Commission, 4 were members of the War Claims Commission, and 5 were members of the Motor Carrier Claims Commission, and 5 were members of the Subversive Activities Control Board.

Nominations not acted upon totaled only 11, all of which were received in committee between November 27 and December 21, 1950.

During the Eighty-first Congress the committee and its subcommittees conducted 190 hearings which involved 330 separate hearing sessions. The records of these hearings total 36,991 folios.

AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 658) to further amend the Communications Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], I ask that the bill go over for 1 week.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the request by the Senator from North Dakota. This is certainly a very far-reaching bill. It has heretofore passed the Senate. It makes a complete modification of the Federal Communications Act, authorizing the granting of emergency authority and providing for more complete compliance with certain treaties.

As I understand, the North American Broadcasting Agreement will shortly come before the Senate for consideration. In view of that fact, it seems to me that those of us who are not familiar with the contents of this bill should have a little opportunity to study it. Therefore, I very much appreciate the request of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, of course I could have no objection to any Senator having an opportunity to study the bill. However, it is most important that the bill be acted upon at an early date if it cannot be passed on the call of the calendar. Previously it has been passed twice by the Senate on the call of the calendar.

The bill has almost the unanimous approval of the industry. There has been a great deal of criticism of the procedure of the Federal Communications Commission. The bill is as nearly noncontroversial as any bill on the subject that could be written. It is the result of long study by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committees of both Houses, and consideration of the reports of the House committee. I am hopeful that the bill may be passed at an early date. The House has not yet seen fit to act upon it.

The bill contains certain provisions in regard to the monitoring features. The Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission is very anxious that the bill be passed at an early date. If there are any differences, I think they can be ironed out in conference. I want every Senator to have an opportunity to study the bill, but I feel that we should pass it at a very early date, so that the House may have an opportunity to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TEMPORARY INCREASE OF PERSONNEL OF COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS—INCREASE OF LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, has the call of the calendar been concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the calendar has been completed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to return to Senate Resolution 51, Calendar No. 37. I came into the Chamber a few moments ago, after having been summoned to the reception room, and this resolution was called up. At that time I was a bit confused. From the way the calendar was called, I thought another resolution had been called, one which involved the matter which I discussed at that time. I find I was mistaken as to the nature of the resolution.

The purpose of Senate Resolution 51 is to authorize funds for the regular standing Subcommittee on Senate Investigations of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The funds for that subcommittee will expire February 1. As everyone knows, this is the over-all committee which is charged with the duty of conducting investigations into all departments and activities of Government. The subcommittee in question was set up as a regular standing subcommittee in the Eightieth Congress, immediately after the enactment of the Reorganization Act. It is under the chairmanship of the able and distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], who now occupies the chair.

Mr. President, I wish to say that I heard the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] on Thursday last, when he made objection to the various resolutions reported at that time and asked that they be passed over, by reason of the increases in expenditures of this character proposed to be made under the resolutions. I may say to the able Presiding Officer and to my colleagues that this year we are asking for less money than was expended last year, notwithstanding that we anticipate the work will be heavier this year. The $100,000 we are requesting in Senate Resolution 51 includes the unexpended balance of $16,000 from last year's funds. So we are actually asking for only about $84,000 in addition to the carry-over funds.

I understand the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] will return tomorrow at some time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say I was mistaken when I said the Senator from Louisiana will return tomorrow. He will return, I believe, Tuesday of next week. At least it will be a week before he returns.

I ask the Senator from Arkansas, has the committee in question made a report of any kind this year?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; it has made a comprehensive report on all the work of the committee and its activities, and particularly with reference to the general investigations it has conducted. I am speaking now of the Subcommittee on Senate Investigations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it proposed that the appropriation shall extend beyond the 1st of July? That is, will the appropriation extend the activities of the committee beyond the 1st of July?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes, it will extend the activities of the committee until the next year.

Mr. McKELLAR. For the whole year?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Arkansas, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, knows it is a very bad practice to authorize a committee to receive its appropriations at a different time than the general run of committees receive their appropriations. If the Senator from Arkansas will amend the resolution so as to provide that money be provided until the first of July of this year, I shall have no objection to it. Then when the appropriation bill comes up in the regular way we can determine what shall be done.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I may say that the money for the subcommittee comes out of the contingent fund which is appropriated to the Senate, and not out of direct appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; the money comes out of appropriations.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is money which comes from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. A great many appropriations are continued in just that way. If the Senator would amend his resolution so as to provide for money until the first of July I shall have no objection. Then when it comes up we can consider the matter on its merits. It is very difficult to consider such a matter when it comes up as it does now, and not in the regular way. I hope the Senator will agree to amend his resolution accordingly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection if that is going to be the policy applied to all committees. But I ask the Senator to remember that we are not dealing now with a special committee. We are dealing with a regular standing committee of the United States Senate charged with a specific duty.

Mr. McKELLAR. We ought to deal with it as with other regular standing committees, and, so far as I am concerned, I wish to say to the Senator that is what I expect shall be done.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If what the Senator has suggested is going to be established as a precedent I am willing that my committee follow it. But if our committee is to be singled out and dealt with in a different manner than others, I shall object.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I know the Senator does not mean to do any such thing. All the funds granted to the committees for their purposes are granted from the first of February through the first of February of the next year. That is the practice of the Senate. That is its policy. We do not operate on a fiscal year basis, but rather on a calendar year basis. I can hardly see the justification for making an exception and applying a different rule and procedure to this committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have objected in the name of myself and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to measures making appropriations in this way. The only exception to the rule was the case of the Senator's colleague from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], who said that his committee would go out of existence on the 30th of April.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That committee was charged with one specific task.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Whereas the one I am speaking of is charged with a continuing duty and responsibility.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, and continuing appropriations will be made for it. When the Senator asks for special appropriation for the committee, to extend its activities for a year, that would take it out of the regular appropriation bill. I hope the Senator will agree to have it done in the manner I have suggested. That is the way such matters should be handled. I say to the Senator there will be no exception in his case.

Mr. McCLELLAN. There is no rule to that effect, Mr. President. That has not been the practice in the past. If it is desired to proceed in the way the Senator has suggested, I certainly shall feel that we are changing precedent here now, we are establishing a new precedent with reference to standing committees. I feel that the same rule should apply to all committees with respect to allowance of funds to them.

Mr. McKELLAR. In his effort to have the rule apply to all committees in exactly the same way the Senator will have my support.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. I regret I was not able to be present at the time the calendar was called, so I am not familiar with the whole background of the debate proceeding at this time, but I believe I have a correct picture of it. I wish to say that the Subcommittee on Senate Investigations of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has done a magnificent job. I think it would be a tragic error if provision were not made for continuance of the work of that committee. I hope that at the next session of the Senate, or at a very early date, the matter may be taken up in the regular manner and that provisions for the funds will be made.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The authorization will soon expire and we will have no funds with which to pay the staff of the Subcommittee on Senate Investigations. In order to secure the necessary funds I shall yield to the suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee. I wish to say, however, that it will simply mean that we will review such matters twice each year, if that is the program to be followed, instead of once each year. We make all appropriations for committees on an annual basis, and make the general appropriations for a fiscal year. With respect to the permanent standing committees of the Senate, it seems to me we are simply burdening ourselves by having to consider the matter twice each year.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall agree to the resolution if the Senator will agree to amend it to provide that the funds shall extend only to the first of July.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do so reluctantly, but I do so because of the situation which exists. If we are going to handle the committee's work in the manner proposed, we had better give some serious thought to the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. I appreciate the Senator's position.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I may say that a number of other resolutions similar to this one have already been agreed to; they were not objected to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; all of them were objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. During the call of the calendar two resolutions were agreed to, without objection.

Mr. McCLELLAN. They call for a continuation for 1 year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Both of the resolutions which have been agreed to call for a continuation for 1 year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I should like to have the Senate return to the ones which provide for continuing the authority beyond the first of July.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I shall be obliged to object. Most of the Members on my side of the aisle have left the Chamber; and this resolution was originally reached during the call of the calendar, when a large number of Senators were present.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to introduce a bill and make a short statement explanatory thereof. Will it interfere with the Senator's plans if I do so at this time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, before we go to another matter, I simply wish to say in regard to the resolution we have been discussing that in all probability all the other resolutions will be handled in the usual way, the way in which they have always been handled, so far as I know. However, if the change now proposed is made, it will simply mean that in 6 months' time we shall have to ask for additional authority and additional funds for this purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas modify his resolution?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; I modify it simply by striking out "January 31, 1952," in line 8, on page 1, and inserting "July 1, 1951."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection to that.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, very reluctantly and regretfully, I have to object, because hardly any of the Members on my side of the aisle are now present. They relied on the action previously taken in regard to this resolution when it was reached during the call of the calendar. Therefore, I am obliged to object.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I may say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota that it was the minority leader who called my attention to my error in regard to which resolution was referred to.

Mr. LANGER. I may say to my friend that if there is no objection to doing so, I should like to have a quorum call, and then we can take up the resolution.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection to having a quorum call.

Mr. LANGER. Then, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Butler, Md.	Ives	Murray
Butler, Nebr.	Johnson, Colo.	Neely
Carlson	Kefauver	Russell
Chavez	Kem	Saltonstall
Dirksen	Kilgore	Stennis
Dworshak	Langer	Taft
Green	McCarran	Thye
Hayden	McClellan	Young
Hoey	McKellar

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. AIKEN, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. BRICKER, Mr. CAIN, Mr. ECTON, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. JENNER, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. KERR, Mr. McFARLAND, Mr. NIXON, Mr. WATKINS, and Mr. WELKER answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not present.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until next Thursday at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. McCARRAN. I withhold the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's motion to adjourn to a day certain is not in order. When there is no quorum present, a motion can be made to adjourn only to the following day.

Mr. McCARRAN. The majority leader is now present.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Nevada will not press his motion to adjourn.

Mr. McCARRAN. There is nothing else to do.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion has been made.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After a little delay, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. O'CONOR, Mr. HUNT, Mr. SMITH of North Carolina, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. HILL, Mr. CLEMENTS, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. CORDON, and Mr. FREAR entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

After a little further delay, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. BENTON, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. CASE, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. DUFF, Mr. FERGUSON, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. HENNINGS, Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. LODGE, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MALONE, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. McMAHON, Mr. MORSE, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mrs. SMITH of Maine, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. WHERRY, and Mr. WILEY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN] that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 51, Calendar No. 37.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 51) reported by Mr. McCLELLAN from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments on January 23, 1951, and subsequently reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with an amendment on page 2, line 1, after the figures "$100,000", to strike out "in addition to" and insert "including", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by subsection (g) (2) (B) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, or any other duties imposed upon it, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the period beginning on February 1, 1951, and ending on January 31, 1952, to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, and such technical, clerical, and other assistants, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $100,000, including any unexpended balance under Senate Resolution 206, Eighty-first Congress, second session, agreed to February 1, 1950, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, at the time I yielded for the purpose of the quorum call the Senate was considering Calendar No. 37, Senate Resolution 51, which, at the request of the able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] I had agreed to modify by changing the date on line 8, from January 31, 1952, to July 1, 1951. I do not see in the Chamber the distinguished Senator from Tennessee who suggested the modification. He had indicated that he would object if the resolution were presented in its original form.

Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I am reluctantly agreeing to modify the resolution. I want to say to the Senate, however, that in doing so, if my action should set a precedent, it should apply to every special committee and every regular subcommittee which seeks special funds to cover its expenses for the purpose of carrying on its work. I believe that the proposed action will result in an exception being made with reference to this committee, and that upon full consideration the Senate will agree that it is not sound policy to do so. I believe the Senate will agree that it is neither a wise policy nor a necessary procedure. I dare say that the Senate will not further apply the precedent, because we appropriate funds on an annual basis for all committees, except in the case of a special committee which is created to do a special job and when it is anticipated that the job will be completed within a limited time. This subcommittee is not of that order. We are dealing with a regular subcommittee of a standing committee, which is charged under the law and under the rules of the Senate with performing a continuous service, not a limited service within a limited time. I do not see any justification for the action proposed in regard to this resolution when two other committees have today received funds for their subcommittees. One of them is a new subcommittee, which is to conduct a year's service for the full committee.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is operating economically, as is shown by the report. We are asking for less money than we received last year. By limiting the time to 6 months, it will mean that we shall have to come back to the Senate and make further request in another 6 months. I think it is entirely uncalled for.

I see that the able Senator from Tennessee is not on the floor. He indicated he would object if the proposed modification is not made. Therefore, I shall modify the resolution, but I point out now, and I shall continue to point out when other similar resolutions come before the Senate, the course of action taken on the pending resolution. I shall not insist that other resolutions be treated in the same way. I do not think they should be. However, I want to point out that it will result in an exception being made with respect to this one committee, without rhyme or reason, and without justification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the approval of the Senator from Arkansas, the date will be changed as indicated, because of the fiscal-year situation.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I modify the resolution in line 8 by striking out January 31, 1952," and inserting in lieu thereof June 30, 1951."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified and amended.

The resolution, as modified and amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by subsection (g) (2) (B) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, or any other duties imposed upon it, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the period beginning on February 1, 1951, and ending on June 30, 1951, to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, and such technical, clerical, and other assistants, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $100,000, including any unexpended balance under Senate Resolution 206, Eighty-first Congress, second session, agreed to February 1, 1950, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

GOOD FAITH PRICE DIFFERENTIAL AS DEFENSE TO CHARGE OF PRICE DISCRIMINATION

Mr. YOUNG obtained the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may introduce a bill and make a short statement in connection with it?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Nevada for that purpose without my losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to establish beyond doubt that, under the Robinson-Patman Act, it is a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination for the seller to show that its price differential has been made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor, and I desire to say just a few words regarding it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the Senator from Nevada may proceed.

The bill (S. 719) to establish beyond doubt that, under the Robinson-Patman Act, it is a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination for the seller to show that its price differential has been made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor, introduced by Mr. MCCARRAN (for himself and other Senators), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McCARRAN. The purpose of this bill is, as its title states, "to establish beyond doubt that, under the Robinson-Patman Act, it is a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination for the seller to show that its price differential has been made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor."

Enactment of this bill will end the so-called "basing-point" controversy.

Senators will remember that I recently discussed the Supreme Court decision in the Standard Oil case. The bill which I have just introduced would reaffirm the doctrine of that decision, and write it into permanent law.

This bill, Mr. President, borrows from the language of the Court itself, in the Standard Oil case. It does not change the doctrine laid down in that case. It does not extend it, or contract it. It merely asserts, in statutory form, what the Court, in the Standard Oil case, declared the law to be.

I believe, Mr. President, that this bill can be speedily enacted. I do not anticipate that it will be the subject of any substantial controversy.

Speaking very frankly, Mr. President, the reason I do not anticipate much controversy over this bill is that those of us who sought enactment of S. 1008, which the President vetoed after it had passed both Houses of the Congress, can say, with accuracy, that the decision of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil case, and this bill, which writes that decision into permanent law, are exactly in accord with what we said the law was at the time we were pushing for enactment of S. 1008.

On the other hand, those who opposed the enactment of S. 1008 can say that they held the fort and prevented the enactment of legislation until the Supreme Court had spoken on the question, and they can go along with this bill because it is in complete accord with the Supreme Court's decision.

Language which was contained in the various versions of S. 1008, and which was the subject of violent controversy, has been eliminated. This bill uses the language of the Court, almost verbatim, and yet there is nothing in the bill that a nonlawyer will have any difficulty in understanding.

The bill is very short and I ask unanimous consent that the complete text of the bill, as I have introduced it, may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 719) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730), as amended, is further amended by adding at the end of section 2 thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) In any proceeding involving an alleged violation of this section, it shall be a complete defense to a charge of discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished for the seller to show that his differential in price, or his furnishing of greater services or facilities, was made in good faith to meet the equally low price of, or the equally extensive services or facilities furnished by, a competitor: Provided, That a seller shall not be deemed to have acted in good faith if he knew or should have known that the lower price or more extensive services or facilities which he met were in fact unlawful."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am a cosponsor, with the Senator from Nevada, in introducing this bill. I should like to make a very brief statement in connection with the bill, to go into the RECORD following the printing of the bill itself.

Mr. President, last December the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee completed a lengthy study of what the Federal Trade Commission was doing to eliminate confusion as to the legality of freight absorption and other competitive pricing practices. Our report (S. Rept. 2627) concluded that the Federal Trade Commission had not, and could not, eliminate this confusion. We recommended that the Congress enact legislation and directed our staff to prepare a bill.

Since that time the cause of businessmen who really want to compete has been advanced by a marvelous decision of the Supreme Court. I refer to the decision in Standard Oil Company against Federal Trade Commission on January 8, 1951. On January 17, 1951 the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. MCCARRAN] made one of his customary fine analyses to the Senate in which he discussed this case. I shall not attempt to expand upon his excellent discussion of that case, except to make one point. I want to call to the attention of the Senate that both the majority and the minority of the Supreme Court agreed that the position of the Federal Trade Commission in this matter weakened competition. I have consistently opposed that position as I oppose everything that weakens competition.

In finding that the present law is exactly what the supporters of S. 1008 in the last Congress advocated, the majority of the Court said:

> The heart of our national economic policy long has been faith in the value of competition.

The Supreme Court minority—who sustained the Commission's view—admitted that—

> Nondiscriminatory pricing tends to weaken competition in that a seller, while otherwise maintaining his prices, cannot meet his antagonist's price to get a single order or customer.

The Court minority did not say that that was a good thing, they merely argued that weakening competition in this manner was the intention of the Congress.

I am indeed pleased, however, that the majority of the Court did not attribute to Congress a policy which would be so destructive to the interests of the consumers. On the contrary, the majority of the Court held that—

> It is enough to say that Congress did not seek by the Robinson-Patman Act to abolish competition or so radically to curtail it that a seller would have no substantial right of self-defense against a price raid by a competitor.

The Supreme Court certainly expressed the view of the senior Senator from Colorado when it said:

> Congress was dealing with competition, which it sought to protect, and monopoly, which it sought to prevent.

I know that when the Court said this, it also expressed the views of the overwhelming majority of the Congress. To accomplish the purposes sought by our committee, as well as those referred to on January 17 by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, we have collaborated to draft suitable legislation.

I am glad to join with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and others who have worked diligently on this matter in the introduction of a bill to amend section 2 of the Clayton Act.

This bill will not change the law from what a majority of the Supreme Court say is now the law. However, for the reasons given on this floor last week by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, it is vital that we end the existing confusion by clarifying the statute to conform to the interpretation given to it by the majority of the Supreme Court.

The enactment of this bill will also eliminate any basis for the surprising view expressed by the minority of the Court that the Congress intended to "weaken competition."

My concern in this matter relates primarily to freight absorption. This bill applies to a seller lowering his price in good faith to meet a competitor's lower price. This is a complete solution to the freight absorption problem, as far as the Clayton Act is concerned, for freight absorption is merely one means by which a seller reduces his price to meet the lower price of a competitor. Whenever a seller absorbs freight to meet the lower price of a competitor who is located nearer to the buyer he is not doing anything other than to reduce his price to meet the equally low price of a competitor.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to study the bill just introduced, but my opinion is that it is an effort to overturn the decision of the Supreme Court, which has been in favor of the common people of the country for a long time. If we are to permit a measure like this to become law, we might just as well repeal the antitrust acts entirely.

The bill is not now before the Senate, but I want the RECORD to show that I am opposed to it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield? I shall not take much time.

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I hope that my good friends the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] will not take violent exception if I make the observation that when the Supreme Court hands down decisions against business practices existing in the major industries of the country, such as the basing point pricing practices, and so forth, legislation is then introduced in Congress to reverse the decisions of the Supreme Court and to uphold business practices, whether or not they are in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Then when the Supreme Court hands down a decision upholding business practices, we have legislation introduced to fasten the Supreme Court decisions into the statute laws of the country.

I hope that my good friends from Nevada and Colorado will pardon me if I say that it looks like "Heads the public loses; tails the monopolists win."

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR SUBCOMMITTEE OF COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE TO FILE REPORTS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, in accordance with Senate Resolution 140 of the Eighty-first Congress, the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare created the Special Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations, of which I am chairman. This subcommittee has made exhaustive investigations and held extensive hearings on which formal reports must be made. The latest hearing was held on December 7, 1950, and this hearing, like the others, has required careful analysis, the digesting of voluminous testimony and exhibits, and the preparation of a report. Tentative drafts of all reports have now been submitted to the subcommittee. Some have been approved; others are under consideration, either by the subcommittee or the standing committee. In some cases there will be minority reports, and because of the lateness of the hearings that were held and the volume of the work it has been impossible to prepare drafts. Under our present authority all reports must be filed on or before January 31, 1951.

Consequently, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and I have agreed that the time for filing reports and minority views should be extended. There is no objection to such an extension on the part of any member of the subcommittee, and the standing committee unanimously approved and instructed me to make this request. The budget of the subcommittee is exhausted, and the proposed extension will not involve either additional appropriation or the expenditure of any funds.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the time within which the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations may file reports, or minority or separate views, be extended through February 28, 1951.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the time within which the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations may file reports will be extended through February 28, 1951.

THE FOOD-PRICE SITUATION

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, like all Members of Congress representing agricultural States, I am greatly concerned about the adverse publicity on the food-price situation which is appearing in many newspapers and magazines. Often these stories are very inaccurate and do not tell the true story.

For example, most farm-commodity prices now are far below what they were in 1947 and 1948. Wheat is a good example. The price of wheat is far below what it was in 1947 and 1948, yet bread is selling for 2 or 3 cents a loaf higher. A similar situation exists with respect to most farm commodities.

During that same period the price of everything the farmer has had to buy has risen. I wish to go into that subject in greater detail later during my remarks. First, I wish to read a portion of an article from Sunday morning's Washington Post, dated January 28, 1951, on the farm-price-support situation:

> The Government's price-support program has cost more than $100,000,000 already this year, according to President Truman's budget message. It probably will reach double that figure by the year's end, June 30. It cost $1,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1949.

I called the Commodity Credit Corporation this morning to get some accurate figures on the situation, if I could. I have received a letter from Mr. Frank Wooley, Vice President of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The letter is dated January 29, 1951. In part, he has this to say:

> From 1933 through November 30, 1950, the Commodity Credit Corporation has sustained a net realized loss of $736,300,000 on all of its price-support operations, or approximately 5 cents per dollar invested in loans and purchases of commodities.

It seems to me that the little more than $700,000,000 used to stabilize the great agricultural economy of the Nation over a 17-year period is a very small price to pay. That is in considerable contrast with the $20,000,000,000 or more which we have spent in Europe since the war, often on purely boondoggling projects.

Mr. President, I should like to read another very interesting paragraph from this letter. This is in answer to Mr. Ball's statement in the Washington Post that the price-support program for 1949 cost $1,600,000,000. Mr. Wooley has this to say:

> The figure of $1,600,000,000 which has been used in newspapers as the figure representing the cost of CCC price-support programs actually represents the net withdrawals of funds from the United States Treasury during the fiscal year 1950 (about the same in 1949) for investment in loans or inventories by the Corporation.

That is quite a different story. It would be just as fair to take the total loans of, say, the RFC and assert that that figure represented the total operational loss under that program.

Many of these loans programs result in a profit, and certainly at the present time our Government stockpiles of food are a great asset to this country. I believe the fact that we have a large supply of wheat on hand is a great asset. We ought to have had more cotton on hand, more wool on hand, and we probably would had it not been for the severe critics of this worth-while program.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the letter from Frank Woolley, Vice President of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1951.

Hon. MILTON R. YOUNG,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR YOUNG: This refers to our telephone conversation of this morning.

The Commodity Credit Corporation showed a net realized loss on its price-support operations in the fiscal year 1949 amounting to $254,761,993. Of this loss, $28,507,649 represented the realized loss on basic commodities.

From 1933 through November 30, 1950, the Commodity Credit Corporation has sustained a net realized loss of $736,300,000 on all of its price-support operations, or approximately 5 cents per dollar invested in loans and purchases of commodities. During the same period, the Corporation has realized a gain of approximately $49,000,000 on the basic commodities, this amount representing a gain of about one-half cent per dollar invested in loans on and purchases of such commodities.

Our current budget estimates anticipate a net realized loss of approximately $374,000,000 during the fiscal year 1951 on all price support commodities. On the basic commodities, it is estimated that a net loss of approximately $45,000,000 will be realized in the fiscal year 1951.

The figure of $1,600,000,000 which has been used in newspapers as the figure representing the cost of CCC price-support programs actually represents the net withdrawals of funds from the United States Treasury during the fiscal year 1950 (about the same in 1949) for investment in loans or inventories by the Corporation. It in no sense represents the net cost of the price-support program since, as you know, a large portion of the investment in both loans and inventories is recovered by the Corporation when commodities are sold.

Sincerely yours,
FRANK K. WOOLLEY,
Vice President.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, since the outbreak of the Korean War, many metropolitan newspapers, nationally circulated magazines, and radio commentators have undertaken what amounts to a smear campaign against the American farmer. They have played up stories of rising living costs, with special emphasis upon food prices. The farmer is invariably represented as a villain whose political influence is so great that Congress dares not impose effective controls on agricultural prices.

A typical example of this may be found on page 1 of the pro-Democrat Washington Post of Sunday, January 21, 1951. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, it is captioned "Farmer gets most of hike in food cost—more than 75 percent of recent increase in edibles found going to producer." The story carries the byline of Mr. John W. Ball, the Post's agricultural expert. The gist of the story, which is based upon a report by some unnamed governmental agency, is that the farmer has received more than three-fourths of the increased prices paid by consumers for foods since last June 25.

Mr. Ball asserts that the study makes it plain why consumers are shouting for price controls while farmers are opposing them.

The story goes on to quote from a report by the Commodity Exchange Authority which shows that futures prices of a number of agricultural commodities have risen sharply in recent months.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Is it not true that a report appeared very recently to the effect that the producer was receiving only 51 percent of the consumer's dollar expended for food; that 51 percent of the consumer's dollar expended for food was the amount the producer actually received?

Mr. YOUNG. That is correct.

Mr. THYE. And that included green vegetables, such as out-of-season vegetables, which were shipped into the United States and even Spanish watermelons and cantaloupes which were shipped in. All of that was figured into the actual market-basket food dollar; and the producer received only 51 percent of that dollar.

Mr. YOUNG. I am very happy to have that observation made by my friend from Minnesota. Of course, Mr. Ball used future price quotations, and future price quotations oftentimes have little relationship to cash market prices.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator knows, of course, that those prices purporting to be farm prices were completely erroneous. In fact as I understand they are not in the Commodity Exchange Authority report. Where they came from seems to be a mystery. But evidently they were compiled by taking farm prices, then adding to the farm prices such costs as transportation, packing, storage, warehouse charges, transfer charges, commission charges, and others, and calling them all farm prices. They were erroneous. I do not know whether the Senator intends to put in the RECORD the farm prices which appeared in the Washington Post the next day or not, but if he does he knows, of course, that when the purpose was to prove something else the next day a completely different list of farm prices was used, with the price of wheat varying 40 cents a bushel between Sunday and Monday, although both were given as authoritative figures out of the Department of Agriculture. I would assume that the Commodity Exchange Authority is not happy over the liberties that were taken with its report.

Mr. YOUNG. I am very happy to have that statement coming from the Senator from Vermont, who follows the agricultural situation very closely, and who, I believe, has always been very fair to the consumer and labor as well—also the farmer.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the mystery is why a responsible paper like the Washington Post will lend its columns to such erroneous and mischievous propaganda.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I am happy to yield to my colleague.

Mr. LANGER. As a matter of fact, the average person reading some of the metropolitan newspapers conducting what my colleague has said is a smear campaign, would figure that the farmer, for example, is receiving a dollar a dozen for eggs. Is that not correct?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. As a matter of fact, the farmer in the West today is receiving from 21 cents to not more than 30 cents a dozen for his eggs on the farm. Is that not correct?

Mr. YOUNG. That is correct. I have received many letters from farmers complaining about the price of eggs being only 21 cents a dozen.

Mr. LANGER. And the farmer must feed his chickens oats valued at about 70 to 75 cents a bushel as a part of the feed for his chickens. Is that not correct?

Mr. YOUNG. It certainly is.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to say further that all over the Northwest there is an intense feeling of resentment over the fact that the surplus of dried eggs was not sold to the Army. The Army said that these millions and millions of pounds of dried eggs could not be used. Is that not true?

Mr. YOUNG. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. As a matter of fact, after the Army had spent thousands and thousands of dollars, even millions of dollars, for dried eggs, it developed that the dried eggs in the possession of the Department of Agriculture were in perfect condition and could be used by the Army.

Mr. YOUNG. I am very happy to have that observation.

A second villain now appears on the stage: the speculator.

The reader is left with the impression that between the farmer and the speculator, the poor consumer just does not have a chance.

Mr. Ball winds up his piece by asserting that these figures are direct answers to President Truman and the chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee [Mr. ELLENDER], both of whom have charged that food-price increases are attributable to gouging by middlemen and processors and that farmers are not profiting.

It should be fairly obvious that if farmers have been profiteering, that fact would be reflected in their incomes for 1950. A quick check with the Bureau of Agricultural Economics would have provided Mr. Ball with an interesting footnote to his story. It would have revealed that while gross farm income in 1949 was $28,100,000,000, the 1950 figure to be released this week will show a total below $28,000,000,000. The Department of Commerce could have told the Washington Post that net farm income in 1950 was only $13,000,000,000, as against $13,400,000,000 in 1949.

Meanwhile, let us see how the rest of the population has been faring. Our national income for 1950 is estimated at $236,200,000,000 against $216,800,000,000 in 1949. In other words, while the income of the Nation's farmers was declining some $400,000,000 below the 1949 level, the income of the rest of our citizens was increasing by approximately $20,000,000,000 during 1950.

Department of Agriculture figures also reveal that farm production expenses for 1950 were at a record high, and that during 1951 they are expected to advance an additional 5 to 10 percent. As an example of this, a tractor which cost the farmer $1,270 during the 1935–39 period had advanced in price to $2,420 by September of last year. The wholesale price of such a tractor jumped from $1,595.67 in June of last year to $1,743.27 in November.

Could it be just barely possible that the farmer must receive higher prices for his products if he is to meet the mounting costs of his operations?

If farming is as profitable as some of the farmers' critics would like to make the public believe it is, then it is difficult to understand why for several decades the population trend in America has been from the farms to the cities. Perhaps at least a part of the explanation is to be found in the studies of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which reveal that in 1948 the average per capita income for farm people was $892, as compared with $1,551 for nonfarm residents. In 1949, the figures were $765 and $1,520.

When 1950 statistics are available, they will show an even wider discrepancy. It should be remembered that these farm-income figures include the value of food produced by farmers for their own consumption, as well as wages received in outside employment.

Generally speaking, the American farmer not only earns far less than his city cousin, but he also works longer hours. Mr. President, I often wonder what would happen to the Nation if the farmer only worked 40 hours a week. There is only one answer to that: The result would be a terrible shortage of food, and prices two or three times what they are at the present time.

Mr. President, the farmer's children attend poorer schools. The farmer is likely to have inadequate medical service for himself and his family. His opportunities for recreation and entertainment are limited. He enjoys far fewer modern conveniences than do city folks. Finally, when he is depicted by city newspapermen as a profiteer, about all the farmer can do by way of retaliation is kick the side of the barn.

The following tabulation, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, is compiled from official Department of Agriculture figures, and reveals unmistakably that prices of the agricultural commodities cited by Mr. Ball have not skyrocketed since the outbreak of the Korean War—and that, in fact, most of them are still well below parity. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire table be printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Commodity	Average price received by farmers			6-month increase or decrease	Effective parity price
	Dec. 15, 1947	June 15, 1950	Dec. 15, 1950		Dec. 15, 1950	Percent of parity

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, comparing the figures cited above with those which Mr. Ball attributes to the Commodity Exchange Authority, it will be seen that the price farmers actually received for wheat did not increase 27⅜ cents a bushel in the 6-month period. The rise was an even 10 cents a bushel, as against the 27⅜ cents a bushel which Mr. Ball said the increase was. It happens that the parity price for wheat increased by about the same amount during the period. Putting it another way, the $1.93 which the farmer received for a bushel of wheat on June 15, 1950, gave him as much purchasing power as did the $2.03 which he received for a bushel of wheat 6 months later.

Whereas the Post story says that the price of flaxseed increased by 94 cents during a 6-month interval, official Department of Agriculture figures show that farmers were actually receiving less for flax on December 15, 1950, than they were on June 15, 1950. The decline was from $3.68 a bushel to $3.59.

The CEA figures cited by Mr. Ball show an increase of 26¾ cents a bushel in the price of corn between the pre-Korean War 30-day period and December 1950. The Agricultural Prices bulletin published by the Department of Agriculture shows that the average price to farmers increased from $1.36 to $1.45, an increase of 9 cents. So it goes for various other commodities. As the foregoing tabulation will show, the prices of most major farm commodities are still well below parity—the level which Congress has said would give the farmer a fair exchange price for his commodities.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I think there is another reason for the erroneous impression as to the prices received by the farmers, namely, the farmer markets certain of his commodities seasonally. For instance, soybeans are sold when they are harvested, as a rule. If the Senator has observed the trend in the prices of soybeans in recent years, he has noticed that after they have left the farmers' hands, the price increases rapidly.

Let us consider wool, which is sheared from late March until the middle of June. It is usually out of the farmers' hands by midsummer. Since midsummer the price of wool has approximately doubled, or at least that was the case as of December when the figures which are so popular with the press today were compiled. That increase in the price of wool took place after the wool left the farmers' hands, but it is still figured into the prices received by the farmers, and it is responsible for a considerable part of the over-all paper increase in farm commodity prices, although not all of that increase has been received by the farmers themselves.

We know that when the price of wool doubles by mid-December, that doubled price is listed as the price received by the farmers. Of course it is true that if the farmer had kept back his wool until December, he probably could have received that price or somewhere near it. However, he does not have any wool by that time. The same situation exists in the case of other commodities.

Incidentally, Mr. President, the price of wool is not established in the United States, but is a world price. We are importing two-thirds of all the wool we use.

The price increases of other commodities which have risen so much in price—commodities such as coffee and cocoa—should also be considered in connection with an understanding of the origin of the crops. Coffee and cocoa are not produced at all in the United States; yet the prices of those commodities enter into the cost-of-living index, which I believe has recently been changed in name to consumer-price index. Yet the prices of those commodities are figured into the consumer-price index, in an effort to put on the farmers of the United States the blame for the increase in the cost of living. The farmer is getting about 50 percent of the consumer's food dollar, which is a smaller percentage than he was getting several years ago.

Mr. President, let me point out that today the method of living contributes especially to the high cost of living. I know of persons who go to a grocery store and buy canned potatoes, and pay as much for four cans of potatoes as they would pay for a bushel of uncanned potatoes, if they wished to buy potatoes in the way they used to buy them, and then prepare them at home.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont has given us some very important information. It leads me to observe that any increase in the price of any canned vegetable, for example, is an increase in which the producer has no part whatever. The farmer was paid for his vegetables last summer or last fall at canning time; and all the increase in the price of the canned goods goes to people other than the producer.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President——

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Mr. President, I did not hear the first part of the Senator's statement, but I presume that either he did or he will touch on the fact that the storage of crops in the raw stage is now almost exclusively in the hands of one agency, and that is a Government agency. I wonder whether that fact may in any way tend to bring to the producer a larger share of the price paid by the consumers—the larger share which he should receive, as the Senator from Vermont was just indicating.

Mr. YOUNG. I think it will—that is, if the farmer holds the crop under loan. If he holds on to the crop, and if the price goes above the loan price, the farmer will receive the benefit of the increase.

Mr. BUTLER of Nebraska. Of course it is also necessary to consider another cost, namely, that involved in the processing and distribution of the commodity. Of course, that cost is incurred at a time when the commodity has left the hands of the producer. It appears that it is at that stage that most of the addition occurs to what we call the cost of food. The increase occurs, not in the cost of the raw food, but in the cost of the processed food.

That leads me to ask this question: Under the price-control orders which recently were issued—and which I suppose as yet none of us really understand—it was very definitely stated that they do not apply to the raw crops produced by the farmers. However, they do apply to the processed crops. I wonder whether it is a foregone conclusion that fixing the price of the processed commodities—for instance, the price of meat—automatically will fix the price of the livestock on the hoof.

Mr. YOUNG. I think it does in a large measure.

Mr. President, at this time I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he intends to insert or whether he has inserted in the RECORD some of the most recent parity prices—for instance, the parity prices for wheat, corn, and other commodities—as of the last announced figures given out in December 1950.

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; they are included in the table I have had inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. THYE. The RECORD will have the table of parity figures in the case of wheat, corn, dairy products, poultry, and so forth.

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; some of those figures will appear in the RECORD. It might be well to insert the table following my remarks, also, because probably it will cover some figures which I shall not include in my own statement.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. YOUNG. I am very happy to do so.

Mr. THYE. It has been very interesting to note the remarks of the very able and distinguished Senator on the question of what the producer receives and what the consumer actually has to pay. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] gave a very clear and understandable description of how the consumer is purchasing in the wrong manner, in the case of canned potatoes. Certainly the consumers who buy canned potatoes have to pay for the cost of canning the potatoes and also for the cost of the tin cans which are used in the canning process.

But going back to the simple purchasing habits of the consumer, one reason why beef prices are high is that there is not enough beef to supply the demands of the purchasers; but, if the purchasers had purchased poultry last fall, when there was a tremendous supply, beef prices would then have leveled off. Last fall I noticed that many produce dealers in the Middle West actually paid 13 cents a pound for chickens averaging less than 5 pounds. A 4- or 4½-pound chicken, or a year-old hen makes splendid eating, and they were being marketed by the producer at about 13 cents a pound. Thirteen cents a pound is not an unreasonable price to pay for a 4-pound chicken, and it would certainly be large enough for a good-sized family. If a hen weighed 5 pounds or more, it brought 15 cents a pound, live weight. Fifteen cents a pound to a producer for such a hen was certainly one of the lowest levels reached in many a year; yet if one went to a produce market and attempted to buy a dressed chicken, he found it necessary to pay a very high price.

I recall that when we returned to Washington in December, eggs in the Middle West had been selling for an average of about 48 cents a dozen. Some of the No. 1 grades probably brought 52 or 53 cents a dozen; yet they were quoted on the markets in the District of Columbia at $1, $1.04, and $1.05.

On one occasion when I was shopping for a few groceries, I said to the grocer, "Prices are very high." He promptly replied, "Oh, it is the farm-support program. It is just terrible." I said, "What do you mean?" He said, "It is the farm-support program. That is what is raising the prices of food to the consumers, and to us, who are retailing food." I asked him certain other questions regarding the farm program. He stated that, in his opinion, it was influencing the rising cost of bread and of certain other foods, such as Crisco, vegetable oils, eggs, and so forth.

I am indeed happy that the Senator from North Dakota is going into this matter in detail this afternoon. The housewife is entitled to know the exact figures, insofar as they concern the prices paid the farmers. Last fall, soybeans selling from the field were bringing around $2, or a little over $2 per bushel. Look at the soybean market today. That is an example.

I repeat, I appreciate the fact that the able Senator from North Dakota is delving into this subject and getting some of the facts into the RECORD, in order that we may to some extent determine who is at fault. It certainly is not the producer.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Adding to the example given by the Senator from Minnesota, in connection with chickens, I may say that I do not know what the farm price of turkeys is at the present time. It is probably from 40 to 50 cents a pound. I think it would not be more than that.

Mr. THYE. I withhold my comment on that, because I have not checked it.

Mr. AIKEN. In a Washington store recently I saw customers buying cooked turkey at $4 a pound. I am glad they are able to do it. I realize that if we were to return to our old habits of cooking and eating in the home, many people would be thrown out of employment. The housewife would not be thrown out of employment; she would have more to do than ever. I am glad she is freed of her drudgery over the kitchen stove. But I hope that when Washington customers pay $4 a pound for cooked turkey they will not think the farmer is getting three-fourths of it, or even 51 percent of it, because he is getting about 10 percent of it only.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further comment?

Mr. YOUNG. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. THYE. In the month of December the producer of milk selling on the Twin City market—that is, the fluid-milk markets of the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul—received for grade A milk, which is the same quality and type of milk that is demanded on the Washington market, $3.67 per 100 pounds. That was for grade A, 3½ percent butterfat milk. Milk not qualifying as grade A sold for 61 cents per hundred pounds less. That represents the price of the raw product.

An analysis of the figures, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] said as he went out of the door just now, would show a payment of possibly 7 cents a quart. If the producer receives 7 cents, consider his investment for real estate, personal property, equipment to maintain, care, and house and produce the feed for his herd of dairy cattle, as well as for manpower to care for the herd, and to deliver the milk to a central point, where it is bottled for distribution. The farmer receives from 5 to 7 cents a quart, in return for all that manual labor and expense. If he receives 7 cents, who then gets the difference between the 7 cents and the price to the consumer? There is the answer to some of the questions regarding food costs.

Mr. YOUNG. I think the Senator has raised a very important point. What we ought to be doing is to investigate the spread between what the consumer is required to pay and what the producer receives. I think oftentimes it would be found that there are unwarranted price rises. Of course, higher labor costs and higher taxes naturally increase the spread. I think we ought to be fair about the whole thing.

From a reading of magazine and newspaper stories one would get the impression that farmers were receiving an all-time-high price for farm commodities. That is far from the truth. I should like to quote a few figures which I obtained from the Department of Agriculture only last week. These figures will doubtlessly amaze some people. The average price received by the farmer for wheat on December 15, 1947, was $2.79 a bushel. The average price he received on December 15, 1950, was $2.03 a bushel. In other words, the farmer was actually receiving 76 cents a bushel less for his wheat in December 1950 than in December 1947; yet, during that identical period, there was a rise in the price of bread of from 2 to 3 cents a loaf.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. LANGER. It is true, is it not, that the cost of living was never higher than it is today, and that, as a matter of fact, wheat is 15 percent below parity.

Mr. YOUNG. That is correct. It is about that. I think most people believe that corn is perhaps selling at an all-time high. It is not. During most of 1947 and 1948, it was selling at much higher prices. For example, the average price which a farmer received for corn, on December 15, 1947, was $2.37 a bushel; whereas, as of December 15, 1950, he was receiving $1.45 a bushel, or nearly a dollar a bushel less.

In December 1947 the price of oats was $1.18 a bushel. It is now 84.9 cents a bushel.

The average price the farmer received for rye on December 15, 1947, was $2.45. His average price at this time is $1.37.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that since the big slump has come in farm prices, transportation costs have gone the other way and have increased tremendously, that wage rates, on the whole, have also increased, and the prices of everything the farmer buys have increased? Consequently, when a little betterment in farm prices is shown it is from a very low level, whereas any increase in transportation costs, labor costs, and machinery costs is already at a high level, and, therefore, does not rise as much as do farm prices, which start from away down in the valley of the low-price area.

Mr. YOUNG. I think the Senator from Vermont would be interested in these figures on butterfat:

Butterfat, on December 15, 1947, average price received by farmers was 87.7 cents; on December 15, 1950, the average price was 59.2 cents.

Butterfat was selling at approximately 28 cents a pound less on December 15, 1950, than it was in December 1947. Since December 15 I think the price of butter has risen a little, but not very much.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. WATKINS. Is the Senator from North Dakota acquainted with the claim that is being made currently that there is very little labor or wage costs involved in the price of food? That claim was made before the Joint Committee on the Economic Report by Mr. Ching, when he was asked with reference to the cost of labor in connection with the cost of manufactured articles. We put food into a special class. Is the Senator acquainted with that matter?

Mr. YOUNG. I would say that increased labor costs, transportation, and taxes have all had a major part in the spread between what the producer receives and the consumer has to pay.

Mr. WATKINS. Would the Senator agree with the claim that wages and labor are not involved to any great extent in the production of food?

Mr. YOUNG. No; I think that is incorrect. They play a very major part in the cost of food.

Mr. WATKINS. I may observe that I pointed out to Mr. Ching that the matter of labor was entirely misunderstood by the average American housewife and by most of the people in the cities, who think that all a farmer has to do is to plant a crop, wait a certain number of months, and then harvest the crop. We used a loaf of bread as an example. I think the Senator has already called attention to that. The actual value of the wheat involved in producing a loaf of bread would not exceed 3 cents, and is probably 2 cents, whereas the rest of the cost is in railroad labor, transportation of various kinds, manufacturing, packaging, and the final distribution from the bakery to the grocer who disposes of the product. The same would be true of nearly all other foods. The view to which I have referred is largely held by a great many persons who think there is little cost of labor involved in the production of food.

Mr. YOUNG. In most of the cities in the United States it costs from 12 to 13 cents to deliver an empty milk bottle on the doorstep of the consumer. It costs more to deliver the empty milk bottle than the producer gets for his milk. The producer for all of his work and investment gets on the average not more than 10 cents a bottle.

What part speculation has played in the rise of commodity prices, I am unable to say. It is strange, however, that the only time we hear any outcry against speculators is when prices are rising. When farm prices are falling—and over a period of years they go down about as much as they go up—no one seems to be concerned about the possible effects of speculation on our farm economy.

I do know, however, that prices of most farm commodities today are not as high as they were 3 years ago, although wool and cotton are exceptions to this. At the same time prices paid by farmers for goods and services today are the highest on record.

The average working man in America is eating better now than at any time in our history and he is spending a smaller percentage of his disposable income for food than he did in pre-World War II days.

In 1929, for example, the average retail price in 51 large cities for one pound of round steak was 46 cents. At that time the average hourly wage in all industries was 56.6 cents. This meant that a man could buy 1.22 pounds of meat with one hour's pay. By 1949, the average price of round steak had gone up to 85.3 cents but average hourly wages had gone up to $1.40. The pay for one hour of labor would buy 1.64 pounds of round steak. By June 1950, the average price of round steak was 89 cents and average hourly wages were $1.454. This meant 1.63 pounds of meat for one hour of work.

Everything considered, American farmers are doing a remarkable job in the face of grave handicaps. It seems to me that we should be more concerned with expanding our agricultural production—which, after all, is the only solution to the twin problems of shortages and high prices—than in attempting to make the farmer the goat in the present price controversy. Certainly there should be no change in the Defense Production Act of 1950 to reduce the permissible minimum ceiling prices on farm commodities as has been proposed by some.

Given the necessary labor, farm machinery and normal weather conditions, the American farmer will do a production job at least equal to that of any other segment of our population.

FARMER GETS MOST OF HIKE IN FOOD COST—MORE THAN 75 PERCENT OF RECENT INCREASE IN EDIBLES FOUND GOING TO PRODUCER

(By John W. Ball)

A Government study of food prices reveals that almost 80 percent of the huge increases since the Korean fighting started last June 25 has gone to the Nation's farmers.

(President Truman declared at his news conference 10 days ago that the farmer had not profited from food price increases since the Korean War began.)

This study, by one of Government's top economics bureaus, was worked out for the men who are entrusted with the job of stabilizing prices in the present emergency.

Almost an exact half of the increases in food costs since June came between November 15 and December 15, the study discloses. In that month the average annual cost of an average consumer's food went up from $219 to $227 or about $8. Between June and November it had gone up from $211 to $219.

Of this $16 jump since last June the farmer got a little more than $12. The remaining $4 went to transportation, wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers.

The study makes plain why consumers are shouting for price controls, while the farmers are opposing them. A comparison of food prices in June 1946—the last month of OPA ceilings—and those in last November, shows why the public is clamoring for action.

In June 1946 the food cost for an average consumer for a year was estimated at about $160. The same amount of food last month would cost $227. In 1946 the farmer got $87 as his share and last month was getting about $113.

Bearing out these figures as to the sharp increase at the farm level for food and fiber are figures released this week by the Commodity Exchange Authority of the Department of Agriculture. According to these figures, all farm commodities dealt in on the Nation's principal markets, except potatoes, have gone up since the period May 24–June 24—the month before Korean fighting. Here are the CEA figures:

Wheat	$2.18¾	$2.45¾	$0.27¾
Corn	1.46¼	1.73	.26¾
Oats	.82	.97	.15
Rye	1.36	1.72½	.36½
Flaxseed	3.26	4.20	.94
Soybeans	3.09½	3.13⅝	.03⅝
Rice, hundredweight	9.33	10.10	.77
Cotton, hundredweight	33.47	43.05	9.58
Wool tops, pound [1]	1.99⅘	5.60	1.60⅘
Butter	$0.56½	$0.70¼	$0.13¾
Eggs, dozen	.37¾	.39¼	.01½
Cottonseed oil, per hundredweight	16.50	24.03	7.53
Soybean oil, hundredweight	13.19	19.45	6.26
Lard, hundredweight	11.97	18.00	6.03

[1] The price for wool tops reached $4.00½ last Thursday—the highest price since records were started by CEA in 1931. The previous high was $2.01 in 1931. This reflects the state of the Nation's sheep herds—the lowest in number since records were started at the close of the Civil War.

In a statement accompanying the report, Joseph M. Mehl, CEA Administrator, pointed out that:

1. An influx of speculators into the commodity markets last June, following the Korean outbreak, was largely responsible for the sharp increase in prices. In less than 1 month soybeans went up 25 percent, cottonseed oil 31 percent, and lard 41 percent.

2. The dollar value of tradings on the 18 commodity exchanges was almost twice that of all trading in stocks and bonds on the Nation's 16 registered securities exchanges, or $32,400,000,000 compared with $17,300,000,000.

3. Trading in soybeans, for instance, was more than 15 times the size of the crop.

4. Low margin rates have attracted speculators into commodity markets from securities exchanges. Commodity margins range from 6 to 13 percent; those for securities are now 75 percent.

The Government study of food prices and the CEA report are direct answers to President Truman and Chairman ALLEN ELLENDER, Democrat, Louisiana, of the Senate Agriculture Committee. Both have charged that recent jumps in food prices were due to gouging by middlemen and retailers, and that the farmer was not profiting.

Mr. LANGER obtained the floor.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I shall be glad to yield to the distinguished Senator, provided I do not lose the floor.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from North Dakota, and I am sorry I cannot wait to hear his address so that I might follow him instead of preceding him.

Mr. LANGER. It is too bad, because I intend to talk about the Democratic Party, and I cannot imagine having listen to me any Senator more appreciative than is the distinguished junior Senator from Connecticut.

ERIC JOHNSTON

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I rise to speak about two most eminent members of the Republican Party. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will enjoy my words, perhaps more than I might be privileged to enjoy his about the Democrats were I able to remain to hear his address.

I was not on the floor last week, Mr. President, when the nomination of Mr. Eric Johnston was confirmed as Administrator of the Economic Stabilization Agency. The appointment was an urgent one, and the nomination was acted on quickly. If I had been present, I would have tried to pay Mr. Johnston the tribute which I think is due him for taking this hazardous and very onerous job.

When he appeared last week as a witness before the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, of which I am a member, I asked him whether he thought he would come through his new position with his reputation unsullied. I reminded him of a story told me by Mr. Leon Henderson. Mr. Henderson says that at the peak of his OPA activities there were certain persons placed in asylums and institutions throughout the country who still today go to bed at night muttering imprecations against Mr. Henderson.

I have just gone through a political campaign with one of Mr. Johnston's predecessors, Mr. Chester Bowles. His reputation with a certain segment of the business community suffered as a result of the great job he did during the war in his successful effort to maintain prices over a two-year period.

It is my opinion, Mr. President, that if Mr. Johnston has not taken the toughest job in town, at least, he has taken the most thankless job. When the "dead cats" start flying around his ears, I hope we shall remember the fine things now being said about him on the radio and in the press in tribute to his patriotic response to what I regard as a high and imperative call to duty.

I first met Mr. Eric Johnston in the spring of 1942, when he came from the West as a young and enterprising independent businessman to succeed to the presidency of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

It was in the spring of 1942 that Mr. Jesse Jones, then Secretary of Commerce, appointed Mr. Johnston to the first Board of Trustees of the Committee for Economic Development, of which I was Vice Chairman. I worked on the Board with Mr. Johnston, as I did on the Research Committee of the CED, under the chairmanship of the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. We all learned to admire Mr. Johnston for his open mind, his liberal views, his high intelligence, and his integrity. Indeed, it was during the war years that Mr. Paul Hoffman, Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Committee for Economic Development, said—and I agree with Mr. Hoffman's appraisal—that no one in the business community was doing a finer job on behalf of the business community as a whole, and thus on behalf of the American people as a whole, than was Mr. Johnston.

Mr. President, I remembered that statement of Mr. Hoffman's when I saw an editorial this morning in the Spartanburg, S. C., Herald-Journal. It states that Mr. Johnston first came into prominence as President of the United States Chamber of Commerce some years ago, "when he came in with more aggressive and more liberal views than that organization was ready to accept with happiness." I am glad to report that the editorial, according to my observations at that time, is exaggerated, although it is true that there was a certain small segment of the Chamber of Commerce constituency which found Mr. Johnston's views more liberal than it liked. This very fact in part explains why he was so much needed.

I became intimately and personally acquainted with Mr. Johnston in 1943, when I accompanied him to England. It was at the peak of the war. He and I had been invited to go to England as representatives of the American business community to talk to British business leaders about postwar economic problems which would be anticipated between the two countries. Mr. President, for thirty-three days I was constantly with Mr. Johnston. I grew to admire his courage and high sense of duty, as well as his eloquence, for which he is famous and for which he was applauded by British business groups.

Mr. President, if my remarks begin to sound like a eulogy, I admit that that is what they are supposed to sound like, and I am very glad to appropriate that word for my comments. You will see that I think President Truman is to be congratulated on his appointment of Mr. Johnston. Mr. Charles Wilson is also to be congratulated. In passing I should like to say that I have had mail from all over the United States, from leading businessmen, congratulating the people of the United States on the appointment of Mr. Charles Wilson. I have had countless expressions to the effect that his is the finest appointment the President could have made to fill the most difficult role he is assuming. He and Mr. Johnston bring great special values to those two difficult jobs——

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Is it not correct to say that both gentlemen are Republicans?

Mr. BENTON. Both gentlemen are Republicans. That is one reason why I was glad to assure the Senator from North Dakota that he would at least find something he liked in my comments. Does he not agree, however, that it is a great tribute to the open-mindedness of our President that he should appoint these two eminent Republicans from the business community?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BENTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. I believe the newspapers stated that President Truman had offered the job to twenty-five other men and that none of them would take the job. I presume that there were twenty-five Democrats who were not smart enough to handle the job, and that therefore the President finally had to find a Republican who would take the job.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I did not see the newspaper report to which the Senator from North Dakota referred, and I cannot speak as to the accuracy of it. Twenty-five Democrats could have been well advised in thinking that they were not smart enough to handle the job. I know of no job which is more difficult to handle. However, if there is one man in the country who is capable of handling the job I submitted it is No. twenty-six, if there were twenty-five predecessors, which I seriously doubt.

One of the great values which Mr. Johnston and Mr. Wilson bring to their jobs is the willingness of the best men in the country to associate themselves with them. Mr. Wilson and Mr. Johnston will not have to go through a list of five, ten, fifteen, or twenty men to find the men they want. I believe they will be able to call on the top men in the business community and the top civic leaders, who will be proud to come in and accept difficult jobs under such leadership and sponsorship.

Mr. Paul Hoffman, another Republican who was appointed by President Truman, in the President's effort to get the best qualified man whom he could find for a difficult role, brought the same kind of capacity to the development of the ECA. He brought into the ECA leading men from all over the United States. One day I was congratulating him on that fact, and I said to him, "Don't you think that your greatest asset was your ability to staff the ECA out of your intimate knowledge of who the key men are throughout the country? Don't you think that you brought to your assignment as head of the ECA a better knowledge of the American business community than other men who have come to Washington in these tough roles?"

Mr. Hoffman looked at me and shook his head and said, "Don't forget Jesse Jones. It was Mr. Jesse Jones who brought me into Washington in the CED. It was Mr. Jones, with his phenomenal knowledge of the business community, who assembled so many leaders from it, many of whom are now playing an active role in public life."

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I stated several times that I thought it was of great credit to the Administration that Mr. Charles Wilson, the able business executive and leader, was willing to accept the call of the President and take on a very difficult and what will become an unappreciated assignment. I think it was a grand thing for this Nation that Eric Johnston consented to come into Government. Mr. President, if the administration will only permit Charles Wilson and Eric Johnston to make their selections and to staff their organizations with their own recommendations, rather than with the political recommendations which I have seen coming in during the last week, we will be able to go forward with some assurance that the Price Administrator's office will render a great service to our Nation. However, if we are to see every disappointed politician and every individual who is seeking some job security for himself given a place on the staff of the Price Administrator's Office, we shall make a very poor start indeed. That is the danger that I see and wish to call to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut. The danger is that we may see such politicians getting into leading roles, instead of having the able brains of Charles Wilson and Eric Johnston making executive rulings.

Mr. BENTON. I agree wholly, from my knowledge of the problems which confronted former Governor Bowles when he was head of OPA, that there is no other area in our economy in which more effort should be made to eliminate political considerations, and I do not think the President would have appointed either Mr. Johnston or Mr. Wilson without expecting them to take responsibility for staffing their agencies.

Mr. THYE. If the Senator will further yield, we have had a little experience in the past week which does not promise that we are to operate strictly on the basis of the ability of a man to administer a particular job. I think the experience of the past week has shown us that there is more politics in these particular appointments than most of us would like to see. I want the Administration to be successful in this Price Administrator activity, but it cannot be successful if the experience of the past week is to continue. I could relate quite a bit of information about that experience, but I shall not impose upon the distinguished Senator from Connecticut or take his time to relate it.

Mr. BENTON. I do not know the particular experiences to which the Senator from Minnesota refers; but I do not feel that appointments must be Republican in order to be nonpolitical. Cannot we come to an agreement that we do not have to continue to demonstrate, as the President has already demonstrated with Mr. Wilson and Mr. Johnston, that appointments are nonpolitical by appointing only Republicans?

Mr. THYE. If the Senator will further yield, I will say to the very able Senator that I do not believe any one of us is exactly thinking in terms of whether the appointees are Democrats or Republicans. We were all exceedingly happy that a man like Eric Johnston accepted the assignment. We entertain like feelings with respect to Mr. Charles Wilson.

The administration would possibly be more successful and have a greater public acceptance if the so-called political organizations through the States were not moving in to make all the recommendations. Those political organizations happen to be of the same political party that is now in power within the National Government. I have witnessed that situation over much of the Nation. Political committees are proceeding to make recommendations. I do not need to remind the Senator as to what has appeared in the press.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THYE. I should be very happy to yield, but I have not the floor.

Mr. BENTON. I think the Senator from Minnesota and I can agree that it is a question of the ability of the man rather than his political affiliations. The President certainly demonstrated his attitude on that subject with the two major appointments about which I have been speaking. Apparently the Senator from Minnesota has been receiving, as I have been receiving, favorable reports with respect to these two appointments. I have received such reports from all over the country.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENTON. I yield.

Mr. THYE. All the communications which I have received relative to Charles Wilson and Eric Johnston have been most favorable. I do not believe anyone could criticize the ability of either man, or his past conduct in discharging any public trust.

Mr. BENTON. I am sure that they will assume full responsibility for the development of their organizations. Indeed, that is one of their most important duties, because if they do not get able men in the regional and State offices, there will be a violent public reaction, and the opportunity of the top men for rendering public service will be destroyed.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, in connection with this subject I wonder if the Senator will permit me to make an observation and to make a unanimous-consent request for an insertion in the RECORD.

Mr. BENTON. I yield for that purpose. I shall be through in about 2 minutes.

Mr. WATKINS. The observation has to do with this particular subject.

Mr. BENTON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WATKINS. Reference was made to statements in the press about politics being manifest in the Economic Stabilization Administration, in the matter of appointments. In that connection I invite attention to an article which appeared in the Washington Daily News of Saturday, January 27, 1951; also an article in the Washington Post of Sunday, January 28, 1951, the article being entitled "Admiral Hoover Hits 'Politics' as He Quits ESA Post."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these articles be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, may the articles be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the articles may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENTON. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota. Indeed, it was he who yielded a few minutes to me. I am sorry that this is taking longer than I anticipated.

Mr. LANGER. Twice the distinguished and able Senator has said that

Mr. Johnston and Mr. Wilson have done the country a great favor by accepting these jobs. Does not the Senator believe that the President of the United States ought to have the right to call on any man in the country, regardless of what his salary is, for public service? We draft soldiers. We take men from their jobs and induct them into the Army. What is there so sacred about drafting a man who happens to be at the head of a large industry and taking a little of his time to work for the Government at $17,500 or up to $22,000 a year? I think it is his patriotic duty to serve. I believe that such men ought to be glad to have the opportunity to serve their country. Therefore, I cannot quite comprehend just why the distinguished Senator says that we ought to be so grateful because these men have accepted the appointments.

Mr. BENTON. Only a moment ago I heard the distinguished Senator from North Dakota speak of the fact that he had heard that Eric Johnston was the twenty-sixth man who had been asked by the President to take the position.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. BENTON. He therefore should be commended for responding as he did in this patriotic way to the call to duty. That is why I have been congratulating him for so responding.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask my distinguished friend another question. Does not the Senator believe that if the President selected twenty-five other men first, he must have felt——

Mr. BENTON. I do not believe that he asked twenty-five others.

Mr. LANGER. The statement was published in the press. Does not the Senator believe that every one of those men, when asked by the President to serve his country, was under obligation to accept? Does not the Senator believe that the President ought to have the power to say to any man in the country, just as he says to the humblest and poorest soldier, "Come and serve your Government"?

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, in answer to that question, let me say that I think there are certain jobs which men could not fill effectively if they went into them reluctantly and by draft. It may be that in time of war—indeed, it has been proved to be so—that men may become brave and effective soldiers, even though they were drafted. I seriously doubt however, whether any of our civic or business leaders, if he were drafted, and accepted against his will, and reluctantly, could possibly be effective in one of these difficult top jobs here in Washington. Under the circumstances, I think the President has no choice but to continue to seek men who will respond patriotically as demanded by the Senator from North Dakota, and respond in the spirit which he has advocated for all Americans.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. BENTON. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. I was very much interested in hearing the Senator from North Dakota say that he thought that any man or women should respond to a Presidential call for national service. I agree with the spirit of that statement. I wish it could be so. We know that it is not.

I believe that one of the reasons why at least some men and women do not respond to the call to accept public service is the terrific and inexcusable vilification to which men in the public service are frequently subjected. On the floor of the Senate I have heard great Americans, patriotic and loyal men, crucified and called traitors, and disloyal to their country. I have sat through a tirade by a Member of the Senate against that magnificent public servant, General George Marshall.

I have read in the press and have heard over the radio attacks on various persons for political purposes. I have heard them called upon to resign after they had rendered devoted and unselfish service. In my opinion, such demands were based exclusively on political grounds.

I wish to tell the Senator from North Dakota—and I know it from experience, because I have held public office and have had to suffer unjust attacks—that the lack of appreciation, the playing of politics, and the blackening of the reputations of loyal and patriotic American citizens are, and will continue to be, great deterrents to the acceptance of positions of high responsibility by many men and women in this country. I need only cite, in addition to the cases of General Marshall and Secretary Acheson, the names of Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, Mr. David Lilienthal, Dr. Edward Condon, Ambassador Philip Jessup, and most recently, even Admiral Chester Nimitz. There were many others, too.

I wish we could do something to correct that evil situation.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, before the vilification starts on Eric Johnston—and I share wholly the views just expressed by the distinguished Senator from New York—may I read into the RECORD half a dozen sentences, and ask that the editorials from which the sentences are quoted may be printed in the RECORD, following my remarks, because I hope we can remember these sentences and these editorials when Mr. Johnston becomes subject, as he surely will, to the kind of attacks which the Senator from New York has described?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARLSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

He is an executive of tested ability.

Here is another:

He is energetic, resourceful, and quick on his feet.

Here is another:

The country can anticipate fast action by Mr. Johnston.

Here is another:

He is a man who gets things done.

Here is one from the New York Mirror with the headline:

Stabilization job goes to good man. * * * With Johnston in office, we've got an able man in charge.

The Times-Picayune speaks of Eric Johnston's "reputation for forthright action which has long been firmly established."

Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from North Dakota for having yielded to me.

The editorials are as follows:

[From the Oakland (Calif.) Tribune of January 20, 1951]

ERIC JOHNSTON HAS CLEAR TRACK ON JOB WHICH WAS MADE IMPOSSIBLE FOR VALENTINE

Things move rapidly in Washington, once the pressure is on. On Thursday of this week the President, in his press conference, said that he had not discussed with Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson a reported proposal to bring Eric Johnston into the Office of Defense Mobilization as chief economic advisor. If Wilson had any such proposal in mind, he added, he was sure he would discuss it with the President.

A few hours later, on Friday, such a discussion had been held. Alan Valentine had resigned as Economic Stabilization Director, and Eric Johnston had been appointed to succeed him.

The Valentine letter of resignation is frank in its disclosures of differences of opinion and may throw light why action on controls and stabilization has long been held up. As late as Thursday Valentine presented a detailed report which was not acceptable to Mr. Wilson and the resignation followed, "in response to what I understand to be your (the President's) wish."

Mr. Valentine's 3 months in the office have been troubled ones and would have been no easier for any man who happened to fill the post. He was consistently pressured by both sides of the question of price and wage controls and regularly saw one day's high-level memorandum contradict one issued the day before. He did not get along with Michael V. DiSalle, Federal Price Stabilizer, and there were arguments over voluntary versus involuntary controls; selective versus over-all ones. The job became impossible.

Eric Johnston can take over with a slate free of controversy and of "trial balloon" opinions such as were forced from Mr. Valentine. He is an executive of tested ability, as is Mr. Wilson. A program which is at last said to be ready for operation should get under way smoothly.

VALENTINE: VICTIM

Alan Valentine has resigned and President Truman has named Eric Johnston to succeed him as Administrator of the Economic Stabilization Agency.

When Mr. Valentine took the job last October 6, the President said his duty would be—

To plan and develop both short- and long-range price and wage stabilization policies and measures and create the necessary organization for their administration.

Mr. Valentine says the President wished him to resign because of honest differences of opinion as to how and when over-all price and wage controls should be put into effect. The President, Mr. Valentine says, now wants immediate drastic action, which Mr. Valentine has felt would be premature. Despite that feeling, he prepared a plan to start over-all controls on February 1, but it was found unacceptable.

Two things are clear:

1. No well-considered policies and measures for over-all control of prices and wages are ready.

2. No adequate organization has been created to enforce them.

This newspaper is not inclined to criticize Mr. Valentine harshly. He is a victim of the indecision, confusion, delays, errors of judgment, and economic blunders which have characterized the Truman administration's whole attitude toward the menace of inflation for the last 6 months.

If Mr. Valentine was still on a cautious zig course when Mr. Truman suddenly decided the time had come to zag—well, he's not the first man to be caught in such a switch. Nor is he likely to be the last.

But Eric Johnston, who inherits the mess, has a better understanding of how things operate, or don't operate, in Washington. He's spent a big part of his time here, for a good many years, as president of the United States Chamber of Commerce and, more recently, of the Motion Picture Association. He is energetic, resourceful, and quick on his feet.

Here's hoping he will get done fast the job that Mr. Valentine didn't, and under the circumstances probably couldn't, do. He, or somebody, will have to if this runaway price-wage race is to be stopped short of inflationary disaster.

[From the Springfield (Ohio) News-Sun of January 21, 1951]

THE COMING ERIC JOHNSTON

President Lincoln experimented with inadequate generals for 3 years before he finally found the man fitted to command the Army of the Potomac, U. S. Grant.

It is not surprising that President Truman has had to fish around for a while before finding the right leaders for the economic mobilization that lies ahead. Now, for one phase of that activity, the directorship of the Office of Economic Stabilization, he apparently has settled on a splendid man. Eric Johnston, a man of business experience and rather extraordinary diplomatic talents—and a tough guy when he has to be—takes the place of Dr. Alan Valentine.

Before things in Asia really got tough, the President was having a terrible time convincing men of first class ability and reputation to come to Washington. The financial sacrifice in taking such posts, plus the hazards to peace of mind and reputation caused by mushrooming of the smear brigade, frightened off the men most eagerly sought.

When the country really got into a jam, with the invasion of Korea by the Chinese Communists, the call of national duty became the overriding call in most minds. Hence the coming of men like Charles E. Wilson to top jobs in Washington—and now Eric Johnston.

In a job of frightening complexity, Dr. Valentine, a former president of a small university, did the best with what he had. It was not good enough. The effort to stabilize the economy was simply not getting under way fast enough. The penalty of delay loomed so large that a change had to be made. The country can anticipate fast and effective action by Mr. Johnston.

FIRMER DIRECTION

The appointment of Eric Johnston to replace Alan Valentine as Director of Economic Stabilization should help to step up the pace of measures designed to check and control inflation. Dr. Valentine who stepped into a thankless job before the real framework for mobilization had been established still was inclined toward the "wait awhile" attitude of those earlier days—an attitude that conflicted with Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson's belief that too much ground already has been lost and that the time has come for prompt and positive action.

The change should bring more harmony into the organization of the economic mobilization agencies, and it demonstrates that Mr. Wilson does indeed have full administrative power and intends to use it. The new Stabilization Director, Mr. Johnston, is a former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce and certainly cannot be regarded as an advocate of "controls-for-controls sake." Like Mr. Wilson, however, he is conscious of the hard necessities of the present situation and he is a man who gets things done.

Both qualities are needed in Washington.

[From the New York Mirror of January 20, 1951]

STABILIZATION JOB GOES TO GOOD MAN

Crisis is separating the men from the boys in Washington. As things get tougher, they're finally bringing in capable men.

Eric Johnston's appointment as United States price-wage boss will make the Nation heave with relief. It's the first sane move so far to cope with economic stabilization.

Johnston, former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce and now president of the Motion Picture Association, is an executive of international repute. On merit, he enjoys the respect of business and labor.

Johnston is getting no bargain. His new job is one of the toughest in the defense setup. He inherits little but a mess of confusion compounded by previous indecision and ineptitude.

Outside of some tall talk, most of it conflicting, and the naming of nonentities who have shown conspicuous inability to cope with a gigantic chore, the Truman administration had done nothing to stabilize our crisis economy before Johnston was named to office.

Food prices this week topped all previous records. This hits the average family hard, as food costs take a larger slice of the total budget in lower and middle income brackets.

Failure to impose proper economic controls months ago has cost us billions. Tax dollars won't buy as many airplanes and tanks and other tools of defense now, because arms costs have skyrocketed along with everything else.

Contradictory statements about stabilization plans have prompted scare buying, driving prices higher in the consumer goods field.

Bernard Baruch urged imposition of real controls 6 months ago, but his advice was disregarded. (Baruch was in the political dog house, because he refused to shake down his friends for the 1948 political campaign. Apparently the Missouri waltzers around Mr. Truman felt it was better to let the economy go to pot than follow Baruch's advice.)

Politics as usual decreed no controls until after the November election. The results showed the people prefer the facts of life to economic fairy tales, but still Washington failed to move in any practical way.

With Johnston in office, we've got an able man in charge. If they give him a free hand, he will bring sense to confusion and order from chaos. It's about time.

[From the New Orleans Times-Picayune of January 21, 1951]

PUSSYFOOTING OUT?

Judging by reports of rapid events in Washington in economic stabilization circles upon the advent of Eric Johnston to replace Alan Valentine as economic stabilizer, quick action seems to be on the way to freeze wages and prices. It seems that Mr. Johnston, thanks to mobilization director Wilson, is being given power to act. Present limitations on the authority of both Price Stabilizer DiSalle and Wage Stabilizer Ching apparently are being moved. Mr. Wilson has gained, according to reports, the immediate action he has recommended and the kind of organization needed to stop constantly rising prices and wages.

As Government statistics were released last week end showing that average wholesale prices had risen to a record high for the tenth successive week as of January 16, the tide of angry complaints from housewives, businessmen, Congressmen, and the press had reached a corresponding zenith. No crystal ball is needed to suspect that it was this deluge of criticism from the people that finally forced President Truman to act on Mr. Wilson's urgings. For months now Mr. Truman has hesitated. There can be little doubt that Mr. Valentine was acting with the President's consent in opposing immediate wage and price controls against Mr. DiSalle's insistence. But public protest finally impelled the President to agree with Mr. Wilson and Mr. DiSalle that voluntary controls are worse than futile and price controls without concurrent wage controls would be equally disastrous. Once the President had accepted the defeat of his wait-and-see policy, it was only necessary to fire Mr. Valentine and, by implication at least, fix on him the blame for pussyfooting.

Because Mr. Wilson, it seems to us, must be credited with finally persuading the President to give a new economic stabilization set-up adequate authority to move quickly to freeze wages and prices, the big boss of economic mobilization should be cleared of any suspicion of having become, too, a servant of the White House politics. Certain Congressmen had expressed this fear last week after his indefinite broadcast speech. But, backed by Mr. Johnston—whose reputation for forthright action has long been firmly established—and the forceful Mr. DiSalle, Mr. Wilson should be able to keep politics out of the Nation's economic mobilization.

ESA FOR DEMOCRATS ONLY

Economic Stabilization Agency (ESA) is being built into Nation-wide Democratic machine.

Democratic National Committee is in charge; is passing on candidates for every job paying $4,000 and up.

Committee asks Democratic governors, senators, State chairmen, National committeemen, for names, sends them on to Price Administrator Michael V. DiSalle.

Party loyalty is a test. No Dixiecrats accepted and no one who opposed President Truman's renomination or otherwise offended top Democrats. Backing from potent party figures is required. Some appointees have price-control experience; most have not. Lists submitted by Republican officials aren't considered.

It's a contrast to procedure in OPA 10 years ago. Politicians weren't consulted, party labels weren't checked. One result: Constant attacks on OPA from Capitol Hill, constant threats to withhold appropriations.

A few Democrats in Congress worry about staffing ESA with party men from top to bottom because it pins responsibility for success or failure of new price-control agency directly on party. They're afraid it may be unpopular by next election. Same men refuse to sponsor candidates for district office, for same reason. But they're the exception.

Pay of new officials isn't fixed. They'll get $50 a day until Congress acts.

Regional administrator for Rocky Mountain States will be George Rock, president of Truman-Barkley Club in 1948. Before Alan Valentine was fired, a five-man panel he had named picked another man.

New outfit's a haven for lame ducks. Already slated for jobs: Vernon Dwyer, Indiana State director, defeated Democratic candidate for Congress; Doc O. A. Noland, consultant to DiSalle, and father of a defeated Indiana congressman; Herbert Meighan, defeated for reelection as mayor of Gadsden, Ala.; James G. Lyons, New York regional officer, defeated for re-election to State legislature; Michael Howlett Jr., Illinois temporary consultant, defeated for State treasurer.

Washington's full of party officials elbowing each other in rush to pie counter.

[From the Washington Post of January 28, 1951]

ADMIRAL HOOVER HITS "POLITICS" AS HE QUITS ESA POST

Vice Admiral John H. Hoover, in a terse statement explaining why he resigned as price-wage enforcement chief, declared yesterday "politics has no place in an organization affecting every American home."

The resignation of the retired veteran of World War II became known Friday just as the Economic Stabilization Agency decreed its price-wage freeze.

He issued this statement yesterday.

"It is true that I have resigned as price control enforcement officer of the ESA. It is also true that I believe politics has no place in an organization affecting every American home."

He refused to elaborate.

TRIBUTES TO SENATORS McKELLAR AND GEORGE

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to one of our own number who has a birthday anniversary today. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], has served in the Senate for many years with distinction and with faithfulness, as he served in the House of Representatives before coming to the Senate. I hope he will have many and happy birthdays in the years to come.

Mr. President, I cannot speak too highly of the senior Senator from Tennessee. Members of the Senate know that he is one of the most faithful Members in his attendance at the sessions of the Senate. He is present when many other Senators are absent, and that in the face of the fact that he has more duties to perform than almost any other Senator.

I also wish to pay tribute to another great Senator who has a birthday today, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. He, too, has served this body well and long, and is one of the outstanding Members of the Senate. He is well qualified in the field he has chosen. He is an authority on the finances of the country. I also wish him a happy birthday, and many more years of achievement.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I join my distinguished colleague, the leader of the majority, in congratulating the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. He came into the Senate on the fifth day of March 1917, and by 5 years is the senior in service of any Senator in this body.

It is not generally known, but Senator McKELLAR is the father of the public road system of the United States. When Woodrow Wilson was President, the Senator from Tennessee went to him and sold him on the idea of having the Federal Government contribute some portion of the expense of the building of public roads, the first appropriation being in the amount of roughly $16,000,000.

It was my great honor to serve under the Senator from Tennessee when he was chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. He did a magnificent job. Particularly he did a fine piece of work in connection with the Post Office Department. During the time he was chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads there was not always a deficit in the Post Office Department. In fact, at one time the Department actually showed a profit.

I have been impressed, as has our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. McFARLAND], by the fact of the constant and faithful attendance of the Senator from Tennessee at sessions of the Senate. I do not believe the Senator from Tennessee missed a single committee meeting when I was a member of his committee. He always arrived in time to help produce a quorum.

I hope he may be with us for a long, long time to come.

THE ECONOMIC STABILIZATION AGENCY

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, earlier today the distinguished and able senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] had, by unanimous consent, an article placed in the RECORD. The article which will appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow is headed:

IN THE OFFING—A WEEKLY SIZE-UP BY MEMBERS OF THE WASHINGTON STAFF OF THE SCRIPPS-HOWARD NEWSPAPERS

ESA FOR DEMOCRATS ONLY

Economic Stabilization Agency (ESA) is being built into Nation-wide Democratic machine.

Democratic National Committee is in charge; is passing on candidates for every job paying $4,000 and up.

Committee asks Democratic governors, Senators, State chairmen, national committeemen for names, sends them on to Price Administrator Michael V. DiSalle.

Party loyalty is a test. No Dixiecrats accepted and no one who opposed President Truman's renomination or otherwise offended top Democrats. Backing from potent party figures is required. Some appointees have price-control experience; most have not. Lists submitted by Republican officials aren't considered.

It's a contrast to procedure in OPA 10 years ago. Politicians weren't consulted, party labels weren't checked. One result: Constant attacks on OPA from Capitol Hill, constant threats to withhold appropriations.

In connection with that, Mr. President, I desire to read another article. This is one which appeared in the Minneapolis Star, and it involved the State of North Dakota, my own State. I rise to speak in protest against what has been done by the national administration. The article is by Wilbur Elston, Minneapolis Star Tribune correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Four officials have been named to the Minneapolis Regional Office of the Economic Stabilization Agency, it was learned Tuesday night—

From whom, Mr. President? Not from the man who appointed them. Not from the office of Eric Johnston, but—from Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY'S office.

They are Philip Neville, Minneapolis attorney and Edina municipal judge, regional director; Louis G. DeNayer, Billings, Mont., assistant director; Joseph Robbie, Mitchell, S. Dak., enforcement officer, and Wesley Silvian, Duluth, Minn., chief regional counsel.

The four men will be in Washington Thursday to be indoctrinated in ESA's price policies before taking over their new jobs.

The regional office in the Northwestern National Bank Building was opened last week with temporary officials provided by the regional civil-service office.

Mark this, Mr. President:

Three of the four States in the region, Minnesota, South Dakota, and Montana, are represented by these appointments. North Dakota is the fourth State to be served out of the Minneapolis regional office.

So the State of North Dakota was entirely ignored when the appointments were made.

I read further:

Neville, a graduate of the University of Minnesota Law School, is a member and secretary of the Minnesota State Board of Law Examiners. He has been an Edina municipal judge since 1948.

In 1944 and 1945, he was regional attorney for the Minneapolis War Production Board's regional office, and after that for the Civilian Production Agency.

So he has had a political job for a long, long time, Mr. President.

I read further:

Robbie is a personal friend of HUMPHREY, who is a native of South Dakota. Robbie was the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Governor of South Dakota last fall.

So we get another politician, Mr. President, but a poor one at that, because he could not even get elected.

I read further:

Silvian is with the Office of Alien Property in Washington, and was with the Labor Department's regional office in Minnesota from 1937 to 1939. He also is a University of Minnesota Law School graduate.

Tentative plans call for appointment of a price administrator for each of the four States in the region, but HUMPHREY'S office said the jobs have not yet been filled.

So we have my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] making the announcements in regard to what takes place in Montana, South Dakota, North Dakota, and Minnesota.

However, Mr. President, that is not all. I hold in my hand the Democratic platform. When the great Democratic Party wanted votes, when it was groveling in the dust, when it was making any kind of promise of economy to get the taxpayers to vote for it, the Democratic Party solemnly pledged itself to this platform, from which I now read one paragraph:

The Democratic Party solemnly promises by appropriate action to put into effect the principles, policies, and reforms herein advocated, and to eradicate the policies, methods, and practices herein condemned. We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, what does the record show? It shows that the Democratic Party says one thing when it wants votes, but does exactly the opposite when it comes to take action. I have before me now a map which shows the four States in this regional agency. Those States are Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana. What is the present plan in regard to that agency, Mr. President? With rubber becoming in short supply, with automobile manufacturers going to be limited, with gasoline going to be rationed, I expect, where is the regional office located? Is it located in the center of the four States, so that the officials of the agency will have not more than 200 or 300 or 400 miles to travel? Oh, no Mr. President; those officials will have to travel all the way across the thousand miles of Montana, that State which is so wide that when one is traveling on a train, if he enters the State of Montana at early dawn and continues to travel through that great State all day, he barely leaves the limits of Montana by midnight. However, Mr. President, the officials of this Agency will have to travel farther than that if they are traveling from western Montana to the regional office in Minneapolis, for they will also have to traverse all of the State of North Dakota and then all of the State of Minnesota. Consequently, Mr. President, it is clear that on the basis of an allowance of nine cents a mile for transportation and on the basis of the per diem allowance, the extravagance involved will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars every month.

However, that is not the worst of the present proposal, Mr. President. Not only will there be great extravagance and much useless expenditure for traveling the nearly 2,000 miles from the western portion of Montana to the eastern portion of Minnesota to attend the regional meetings, but the officials who have to travel that distance will, consequently, lose a great deal of time, during which they will not be on the job. Therefore, they will be most inefficient.

Mr. President, I, for one, certainly wish to protest against the location of a regional agency of this sort way off in one corner of the region concerned—in this case, very close to the Mississippi River. The State of Montana alone is as large as 5 or 6 of the New England States. Yet, as I said a moment ago, a man who attends one of the regional office meetings will, if he happens to be in western Montana, have to travel all the way across Montana and all the way across North Dakota and all the way across Minnesota, in order to reach the city of Minneapolis.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the regional office could have been located in Miles City, Mont. I am not asking that the regional office be located in North Dakota. There are three or four large cities, anyone of which has sufficient housing to take care of those who will be needed at the regional agency. However, those who decided on the location of the agency did not choose to locate it at Miles City, Mont. They could have located the regional agency at Aberdeen, S. Dak., or at Bismarck, N. Dak., where Fort Lincoln is one-half empty, and where this agency would not have to pay one penny of rent.

However, instead of doing that, the article based on information from the office of my distinguished friend the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], states that the agency will have its offices in the Northwestern National Bank Building, in Minneapolis. Mr. President, I happen to know where those offices are located. In that building, very high rents are charged—some of the very highest rents charged in the Northwest. Yet the offices of this agency will be located there, and I assume the agency will take an entire floor in that building, and will pay thousands and thousands of dollars in rent, whereas, as a matter of fact, the agency could be established at Fort Lincoln, N. Dak., where its quarters would be rent free.

Mr. President, what confidence can the ordinary citizen of the United States have in his Government when he finds that those who are running it administer a great agency such as this OPA agency in that manner? I do not know; perhaps Eric Johnston is the great man that my distinguished friend, the Senator from Connecticut, said he was a short time ago. I hope he is. I promise you one thing, Mr. President: Every public action he takes will be watched. Regardless of whether he may be a Republican, if he condones the kind of thing I have just brought to the attention of the Senate, you can be sure, Mr. President, that the senior Senator from North Dakota will call it to the attention of the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. President, taxes are so terribly high now that the withholding taxes deter men from working on Saturday. They do not want any extra pay on Saturday. They work for 5 days a week, and they say, "Why should we work on Saturday in order to help out? The Government is going to keep most of it, anyhow."

I call attention to the fact that it is said we should not bring politics into our discussions. The distinguished senior Senator from Texas recently said we should not even criticize what has taken place in the Foreign Relations Committee, or what has been done by our Government in foreign affairs. But I submit that the American people are entitled to have some criticism of past acts, in order that mistakes may be avoided in the future.

We pick up the newspapers today, and I shall presently discuss something which recently appeared in the Wall Street Journal. Every Senator upon this floor knows that General Eisenhower has been in Europe, where he has been trying to assemble an army. He has been in France, and he has been in Italy. He spent 3 days in West Germany. I shall in a moment read some of the things he said. While General Eisenhower was in Europe trying to get people to fight, or at least to join with our Army, what has the administration been doing here in Washington? The administration is doing all it can to undermine General Eisenhower as far as West Germany is concerned.

In this country, roughly one-fifth of the population is of Teutonic origin. About 33,000,000 of our people are related to the people of West Germany. They were writing their relatives in Germany, when General Eisenhower was there a few weeks ago, telling them about the ideals of our American democracy. The Americans of German ancestry in this country are great friends of the German people, some of whom are their own sisters, brothers, uncles, or aunts.

Mr. President, how much credit can we expect that the German people are going to give to General Eisenhower's words? What is the situation over there? I made a long and careful study, and I am convinced that there are still certain people in certain branches of our Government who, either through ignorance or through deliberate blunders, apparently resulting from continued hatred, but which may actually be due to more sinister motives, are still carrying on policies which play directly into the hands of the Communists. They may yet bring about the loss of Europe, and thus necessarily imperil the lives of thousands of American boys, unless stopped by this body.

Before going further, let me state the Kremlin master plan for aggression as we now know it to be. The plan requires in all instances carefully prepared campaigns, often subtle, and often indirect; many times using causes which in themselves are good, for evil ends, carried out over long periods of time; plans which have as their sole purpose the weakening of the will of the free people to resist Communist aggression when the time is ripe. Let me repeat, the latter part of that statement, so that we will remember it and will see how it is going to tie in with the disclosures I am going to make today. The Kremlin master plan for aggression is to do everything to weaken the will of the free people to resist Communist aggression when the time is ripe. Our military men know this. They know that this is the Kremlin master plan. Their primary interest, therefore, lies in seeing to it that everything is done to strengthen the will of the free people to resist Communist aggression. They know that we cannot have a strong Western European defense without that, and they know that the people of Western Germany must play a part in that defense. Yet today I pick up the Wall Street Journal for Friday, January 19, 1951, which contains a display advertisement. That was only last week. I want to call the advertisement to the attention of my distinguished friend from Arizona, the majority leader, because I do not believe he knows what is taking place. If he did, I think he would rebel. I think that when he learns what is taking place he will try to stop it. The advertisement is headlined, "Offer for Sale by the Attorney General of the United States of America." The lengthy subhead continues: "Of His Right, Title, and Interest in and to the Following Described Real Property Situated in the City of Washington, District of Columbia."

Description of property: Valuable downtown location, 1435–41 Massachusetts Avenue NW.

Improvements of brick construction, consisting of 70 rooms, large ballroom, 13 baths and 5 additional toilet rooms, garages, and storage space. Situated on plot containing 20,000 square feet.

In other words, it says, on the 16th day of November 1951, this property is to be sold to the highest bidder. What property is it? It is the German Embassy in Washington. At the same time General Eisenhower says to the German people of Europe, "Come on in; join us. Sooner or later you are going to be a nation again in your own right. Sooner or later there is going to be a peace treaty between the United States and Germany, and we welcome you with open arms to join the community of nations." At that very time, there appears in the Wall Street Journal an advertisement offering for sale by the Alien Custodian, working through the Attorney General of the United States, the German Embassy.

Omar Bradley recently said that the side that controls Western Germany controls Europe. No one is fooling Omar Bradley in any way. In addition, our military men know that everything must be done to weaken communism behind the iron curtain, by going over the heads of their Communist enslavers, directly and indirectly, to the civilian population, with messages of democracy, messages of hope, messages that will strengthen their will to resist, and finally to overthrow their enslavers. Our military men know, as we do, that we must do those things, which are vital, in order to save the lives of American soldiers; which is their primary obligation, along with the winning of any war. They know that these things are vital, and that they may perhaps win a peace without further conflict—which is every American's hope and prayer.

So far as the first part is concerned, Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, who had just returned from Germany, stated to the press on January 20 at Frankfurt, as reported in the New York Times, as follows:

I would like to see the German people lined up with others in the defense of the western type of civilization.

When asked by the press whether he believed the Germans should be mobilized to assist in the western defense, he said:

There is no place for neutrality when civilizations are in conflict.

General Eisenhower emphasized, however, that the Germans should be allowed to come into the defense alliance "of their own free will." He further said:

It is silly to think of trying to put them in against their wishes. No soldier loves the front lines. He likes to feel he is fighting for a cause, and no man in the front lines ought to feel he is lacking in that conviction.

We believe that most Americans and all the Members of Congress will agree with the general's statement, especially the following:

It is silly to think of trying to put them in against their wishes.

Mr. President, let us take a look at what we have done and still are doing in Western Germany that would make them wish to join us. Let us take a look and see what we have done and are doing to give them the feeling that their men would be fighting for a cause, as the General said, which means to strengthen their wills to resist Communist aggression.

Let us take a look at the administrative policies with which the military had nothing to do and with which the Congress and the people of the United States had nothing to do—policies practiced in Germany from 1945 up to the present time—and learn whether these policies have given them cause to want to join the western defense alliance of their own free will, and then let us see how they really feel about it.

It is now agreed by the vast majority of the people of the United States and of their elected representatives that the policies put into effect with the complete destruction of Hitlerism were not American policies based on American principles of justice. When stripped of their trappings, they were naked policies of hatred and revenge imposed on an entire people. They were policies in implementing the false theory of mass guilt and mass punishment, contrary to Christian principles of morality on which all western civilization must of necessity stand or fall.

Let us ask ourselves, Why were these policies indulged in? Was it really believed that we must punish all the German people for the crimes of their political leaders, or were these policies planned by the Kremlin and carried out by its agents and dupes to alienate all the German people from true democracy—alienate them forever from the west? Was it planned to weaken their will to resist aggression?

Mr. President, I charge that these were Kremlin policies, because only the Kremlin could gain from them. Let us see how the Kremlin agents and dupes played their part. Remember it was Harry Dexter White, at that time Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who conceived the Morgenthau plan for the harsh treatment of the entire German civilian population. Remember it was the same Harry Dexter White who was an intimate associate of the now convicted Alger Hiss, the same Harry Dexter White who died suddenly 5 days after he was called before the Committee on Un-American Activities, having been drawn into the Hiss inquiry. Remember, the cause of his death was said to have been an overdose of digitalis. It was the same Harry Dexter White who, in the second Hiss trial, in which Hiss was convicted, is named in testimony as having been a secret member of the Communist Party.

He was the same Harry Dexter White who was a close associate of Laurence Duggan, former State Department official and named in the testimony in the second Hiss trial as "in a special category of the party apparatus, not a party member, but maintaining a special liaison with the underground through the divorced first wife of Gerhard Eisler, fugitive, former No. 1 Communist agent in the United States."

Remember, a few days after the FBI man called on Mr. Duggan he died in a plunge from a window of his sixteenth-floor New York office, his body landing so far from the building wall that suicide or murder, not accident, is the choice of tenable theory.

I say, Mr. President, it may not have been suicide; it may have been murder.

Let us ask ourselves whether these plans for the oppression of the German civilian population were merely based on hatred, or, as some said, "Just punishment for the crimes of their political leaders," or whether they had a more sinister background. Was this all planned by the master minds of the Kremlin to get us to do things the Kremlin knew would weaken their wills to resist when the time for such aggression arrived?

The policies of Potsdam and Morgenthauism result in taking from the German people their tools, their factories, needed by them to earn a living, and then, for the most part, turning the same over to the Communists; the policies which not only permitted the mass expulsion of 13,000,000 people of German ethnic origin and then forcibly moving them into already dismembered and overcrowded Germany and then insisting that these people be excluded from the benefits of the International Refugee Organization, over whose constitution neither the people of the United States nor the Congress had anything to say, but to which the American taxpayers made the largest contributions. Who planned that?

Remember, Mr. President, what Winston Churchill said about it in the House of Commons. He said, "It is the greatest tragedy of the age." He was referring to the 13,000,000 persons who were expelled. I say, Mr. President, and I say it with sorrow, where, oh, where, in heaven's name, was the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate? What was that committee doing? The answer is "Nothing," Mr. President. I say to the citizens of America today who want to blame the President or who want to blame the Republicans or the Democrats, that the Republicans are just as guilty as are the Democrats—those who were members of the Foreign Relations Committee—because all through the Eightieth Congress the votes were 13 to 0. Some of the Republicans will, when the damage is done, try to blame the Democrats. But I say look at their votes. They made the record of the Eightieth Congress, Mr. President. They made their record on the floor, and it comes with ill grace now for leading Republicans to throw out their chests and say, "We do not want to send any troops over to Germany," after they helped to get this country into the mess in which it is at this time.

Who planned that these 13,000,000 expellees would be without food, without clothing, without shelter? Who planned to kill their hope that they may have had in western democracy? Remember, Alger Hiss was top policy man in the State Department. Who played the game of the Kremlin to weaken the wills to resist?

Who planned that, Mr. President. In the Eightieth Congress, when I asked the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee why German and Austrial children were not included in the International Refugee Organization, why they were to be permitted to starve to death, what was his answer? He said, "They are included."

The next day, when I showed him the constitution of the International Refugee Organization, that distinguished Senator wrote me a letter of apology.

It is to the great credit of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that he said, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, "I am going to vote for all the money necessary to feed those little children in Germany and Austria." I believed he referred to the speech of the late President Roosevelt given on the 23d day of October in Chicago, in which he said, "We are not fighting the German people; we are fighting Hitler. We want all the German people to know we are their friends."

But when the International Refugee Organization began operations, those little children were permitted to starve to death.

Mr. President, I ask again, Who planned it? Who planned that 13,000,000 expellees should be without food, without clothing, and without shelter? Who planned to kill the hope which they have have had in western democracy? Who did it? Let us remember that Alger Hiss was the top policy man in the State Department. Who played the game of the Kremlin? Alger Hiss. Alger Hiss was secretary general of the San Francisco Conference when the United Nations Charter was drafted. It was Alger Hiss who, after that organization came into being, was the principal adviser to the American delegation, the same delegation which approved the IRO charter, which specifically excluded these expellees. Is it any wonder that these 13,000,000 expellees are ripe for communism?

Mr. President, when I walked into the office of John J. McCloy, the High Commissioner, a few weeks ago, there were tears in his eyes. Why? Because on Sunday—I walked into his office on Monday—there had been an election in Wurttenberg-Baden. He had been up all night listening to the election returns. For the first time in Germany's history Wurttenberg-Baden voted for a majority of social democrats, whose chief plank was not to fight with the United States of America. That same day there was another election, in the state of Baden. How did that election go? Again the social democrats, led by Mr. Schumacher and the Reverend Niemöller, won. In discussing the election which was coming up on the following Sunday in Bavaria—an almost solid Catholic country—the prediction was freely made that for the first time in all its history Bavaria would go Socialist by voting for the Social Democrats. Mr. President, a week later I picked up a copy of the New York Times. For the first time in all of its history Bavaria had voted overwhelmingly for the Social Democrats, led by Mr. Schumacher and the Rev. Niemöller. They had voted against the Adenauer cabinet.

Mr. President, what about the 13,000,000 expellees? Millions of them are dead. They starved to death. Under German law, Mr. President, every expellee automatically becomes a citizen of Germany, and every one of them has a vote in Germany. Let us not forget that fact.

Mr. President, Omar Bradley has said that we must have the western Germans with us. Why are these 13,000,000 expellees ripe for communism? I say they were driven to communism by the traitors in our own Government. We now know that the denazification policies were many times carried out in a brutal and stupid manner, in many instances by Communists now masquerading as believers in democracy, whose sole purpose was to get the Germans to hate America.

Mr. President, upon my return from Germany I offered a resolution. If the Committee on the Judiciary will call witnesses—and I will give them names—it will be found that men who worked on the Daily Worker changed their names and were sent over to Western Germany. They were on the payroll of the United States. They were sent over to Germany to carry out the denazification program.

Mr. President, we have their photographs. Up to the present time the Committee on the Judiciary has not seen fit to report the resolution. Under the denazification program these people were denied the right of even earning a livelihood. A teacher could not teach school. A lawyer could not practice law. A doctor could not practice medicine. No one could do anything until he was denazified. There were millions of them, Mr. President. Collier's magazine and the Saturday Evening Post fought against the program. Time and time again we took up the question on the floor of the Senate. We could not get anywhere. What did Russia do? They tried the denazification program for only a few weeks. Then they stopped the program. They invited the scientists into the east zone. There were some 50,000 of them who went to the east zone. Every scientist who had been employed by Hitler was placed on the payroll and given a great deal of money. They helped the Russians finish some of those tools of destruction. For example, they finished the submarine, which our Navy says is one of the best submarines that has ever been manufactured. If there should be a war, our boys will have to bleed and suffer and die because of what was done by the State Department of the United States and what was left undone by this Congress and its predecessors.

The reprisals and repressions were all carried out over there on the theory of mass guilt and mass punishment. Now we know that that is exactly what the Communists wanted the United States to do. In fact, no real attempt was made to teach our American democracy to the German people. I saw some of their schools. The whole thing is abhorrent. Suppose Hitler had said to our school people, "Your theory is all wrong. You should have an emperor in the United States." How many centuries do Senators think it would take before they could educate the people of the United States to believe that we needed an emperor in this country? In Austria-Hungary, the people had the House of Hapsburg. The House of Hapsburg was the oldest royal house in the world. It was over a thousand years old, making it older than even the English royal house. However, at the end of World War I Americans went into Austria-Hungary and said to the people, "You do not want that kind of government." So the 19 nations which composed the Austro-Hungarian empire were separated from one another, and the result was chaos.

In fact, no real attempt to teach those people true American democracy could have been made, because the theory and practice of mass guilt and mass punishment was incompatible with American democracy. While we were denazifying the letter carrier, the street cleaner, the janitor who cleaned the public buildings, or those who had to join a Hitler-controlled labor union in order to eat and live, the Communists behind the iron curtain were making converts of the dyed-in-the-wool Nazis in their territory. Individually and collectively those Nazis were reeducated. They were told, "We welcome you into the Communist fold. You former Nazis and we Communists are all Socialists at heart. There are certain things which we have in common, but your Hitler, the pig, tried to give socialism a nationalistic character and became the tool of western capitalism and imperialism and attacked the mother country, the great Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Now look at your homeland. Your people are enslaved and your country is dismembered. We Communists are for a united Germany free from Fascist and capitalistic influences. The dictatorship of the proletariat under our great leader Stalin is necessary to free you and people of the world." To which the former Nazis answer, "Heil Marx, heil Lenin, heil the great leader of all peoples, Stalin."

That is the way they operate over there, Mr. President. Fortunately I was one of those who could understand the language. I talked with hundreds of them. I went over there at my own expense, free from the military and the Department of State. I wandered around and talked with the people here, there, and everywhere. I know their attitude. Those people over there made converts to communism. Our policies made few believers in western democracy, except those who already believed in it, but to whom our practices, which were contrary to democracy, were abhorrent. Can there be any question about this? Is there any question that such policies or practices weaken the will of the people to resist aggression?

Let us take a look at what General Eisenhower discovered on his arrival in Frankfurt, Germany, when he was handed a survey made by United States High Commissioner John J. McCloy. Mr. McCloy's office had in recent weeks made a poll-type study to determine the attitude of the West German civilian population as to their willingness "to join the western defense alliance on their own free will" as General Eisenhower would like to have them do. The quotation is from the Wall Street Journal. Certainly the Wall Street Journal is not a Communist newspaper. I quote from the Wall Street Journal of January 19. When the question was submitted, and the survey was made by United States High Commissioner John J. McCloy, the question was as to their willingness "to join the western defense alliance on their own free will," as General Eisenhower would like to have them do.

How many wanted to join, Mr. President? According to the Wall Street Journal, the news services stated that the results of the survey are being kept secret because they are so shocking.

Think of it, Mr. President. After all the billions upon billions of dollars which we have poured out, we do not dare to make that survey public. But I demand that it be made available to the United States Senate, so that we may learn the true facts and then give them to the American people. Before we send another American boy to Europe, we must insist on getting the facts. If the American people are to be asked to send their sons to Western Europe, they are entitled to know the facts, and it is a crime to keep them from them.

Parts of the survey have leaked out to the press, and the news stories regarding them state:

> The findings are considered so grave that the United States High Commissioner will not allow them to be published in detail.

I understand that after looking at the poll figures, experts say they now believe that no more than 5 percent of Germany's fighting-age men would volunteer for service in the western defense army, and less than 10 percent would serve even if drafted.

Now we know how these policies, planned by the Kremlin and carried out by its secret agents and dupes in our own Government, undermined the will of the people to resist. This is a tragic situation for America. It is a tragic situation for the freedom-loving peoples of the world. America is the country we all love, the country which every Senator swears to defend under our Constitution when he takes his oath. There can be no doubt that to a great extent this attitude, as expressed in the survey, is due to the policies which we pursued against the civilian population of Western Germany, about which the leader of Western Germany, Chancelor Conrad Adenaur, in perhaps the greatest understatement ever made, told the press and the German people some 2 weeks ago, at a time when he was turning down the proposal of the Communist East German government for unification, that, the west made some grave psychological mistakes.

Yet we ask ourselves, "How can this be when we think of what the American people have done for the West German population?" In that question lies the entire answer to what otherwise seems to be an enigma. It is a well-known fact that the American people as a whole are loved by the German population, far more than any other national group. That is because of their forbearance arising from the realization that they were enslaved by their political leaders, and because of our great acts of Christian charity toward them since the end of hostilities; and last, but certainly not least, because of the kindness shown them by our American soldiers. These German people cannot reconcile this attitude on the part of the American people with the opposite policies practiced by their government. They well remember, and will never forget, the hundreds of thousands of tons of food and clothing sent them and still being sent them by individual American citizens, by Christian churches of every denomination, and by American charitable and philanthropic organizations. But they also remember that the policymakers in our executive branch of the Government daily denied that there was hunger and starvation in Germany when they knew it was true, and they kept this up for almost a year and a half after the end of hostilities. Who was responsible for that? Alger Hiss and his co-conspirators in the Department of State and Harry Dexter White, who, as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, controlled all matters relating to the Trading With the Enemy Act. At any time he could have issued a general license which would have permitted Americans to write to their relatives and friends in Germany and to send them food and clothing without being subjected to a 10-year penitentiary sentence, which was the penalty still in force and effect, since the war was not officially ended. That was the penalty provided in the Trading With the Enemy Act for unlawful correspondence with the enemy. Remember the smear artists, who were carrying on lies fostered by the Hiss and White gang that there was no hunger and starvation in Germany? Every United States Senator, who brought the true facts before this body and to the American people, was smeared unmercifully. Remember, at that time none of us had reason to suspect Alger Hiss or Harry Dexter White, for they had not yet been exposed and they had the confidence of the President, the Cabinet officers, and Members of Congress. Remember that after a year and a half of fruitless effort on the part of many Members of the Senate to get Harry Dexter White to issue such a general license it finally became necessary for the Congress of the United States to take the matter out of his hands when overwhelming evidence of mass starvation and hunger supplied to us, often secretly by American soldiers in Germany who saw mass starvation all about them, and the complete revulsion on the part of the American people to let even their former enemy starve, forced us to amend the Trading With the Enemy Act, so as to permit Americans to write to their relatives and friends in Germany, and to send them food and clothing to keep them alive.

I charge that this conspiracy against our American form of democracy was carried on by these men and their associates even after that.

The German civilian population was thrilled when our Government took a firm position against the plan of the Communists to take over Berlin. They were thrilled by and greatly appreciate the magnificent job done by our soldiers on the airlift, but here, too, because of such contrary policies as those mentioned above, they wonder if the Communists were right when they said, "The American Government is doing this not because they want you to eat but because they do not want to lose face, do not want to suffer diplomatic defeat"; and "that they want Berlin only as a jumping-off place from which finally to launch an attack against Soviet Russia." Is it any wonder that the West Germans are confused and apathetic?

The German civilian population has the highest regard for the American soldier, who in his correct military attitude was nevertheless solicitous of the civilian population, but they were afraid of the political administrators we sent over there, although to some extent this has now changed, but surely not fast enough. But here too they wonder if this change is due to military exigencies or whether it represents a real change of heart to get our policies in line with the thinking of the vast majority of the American people and the vast majority of the Members of our Congress, and with the heads of the executive branch of our Government.

Some will say, "We thought all those things changed when we repudiated Potsdam and all these other policies." But were they changed? To a great extent they were changed only on paper and not in reality. The same men, with few exceptions, stayed on the job in Germany and their attitude toward the civilian population changed but little if at all, and many of the same men and their fellow travelers stayed in the executive branches of our Government here. They were not changed very much, if at all, except those the Un-American Activities Committee caught up with.

Mr. President, time does not permit me to go further into this matter at this time. I serve notice now that I shall finish on Thursday, if possible. I should like to get the entire speech into the RECORD before General Eisenhower addresses the joint session of Congress, which I understand is to be on Friday.

Mr. McFARLAND. No, on Thursday.

Mr. LANGER. On Thursday. I shall try to do so if I can. If I cannot, I serve notice now that immediately after General Eisenhower has talked to the joint session of Congress I expect to take up this matter further.

Mr. President, in that connection I want to say that my mail has been flooded with letters dealing with the matter of what our allies in the Atlantic Pact have as their draft laws. A survey of the 12 Atlantic Pact countries, most of whom are presumably closer to any war that might occur overseas, reveals that young men in France, Italy, Belgium, and Denmark do not enter military service until they are 20 years of age. Not 18, not 19, but 20. Holland and Portugal require men to enter service at 21, while Norway begins its conscription of youth at 19.

Two Atlantic Pact countries, Canada and Iceland, have no conscription system.

England drafts 18-year-old boys, and her term of service is 24 months instead of the 27 months proposed for the United States.

I have prepared a chart dealing with our proposed draft system, compared with those of the North Atlantic Pact countries, which I ask to have printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following chart compares the proposed draft system with those of the North Atlantic Pact countries:

Atlantic Pact countries

	Normal age of draft	Period of service
		Months
United States	[1] 18	[2] 27
France	20–21	18
Italy	20–21	12
Denmark	20	12–18
Norway	19	9–12
Belgium	20	12
Netherlands	18	12
Portugal	21	12
England	18	24
Canada	[3]
Luxemburg	18
Iceland	[3]

[1] Proposed age.
[2] Proposed period of service.
[3] Volunteer system.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have in my hand a very fine editorial in connection with what I have said relative to Alger Hiss and Harry Dexter White. I want to make it plain again that I do not know whether Lawrence Duggan or Harry Dexter White committed suicide or whether they were murdered. There cannot be any doubt in any honest man's mind that they were Communists in high position, and that they betrayed the United States of America.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial entitled "A Sinuous Trail Winds to a Close," published in the Chicago Sunday Tribune of January 22, 1950, be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A SINUOUS TRAIL WINDS TO A CLOSE

Alger Hiss, the bright young Harvard-trained New Dealer, who rose high in the New Deal State Department, was taken by Mr. Roosevelt to Yalta as his adviser, and became the darling of the internationalists as president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, is guilty on both counts of a Federal indictment charging perjury. That is the judgment of the jury.

But before the court of public opinion Hiss and the Roosevelt-Truman administration which sponsored him, fostered his career, and protected him, are guilty of an offense of far greater gravity. Hiss could not have been convicted of perjury if he had not first been a traitor in the service of Russia, channeling the secrets of the United States to Soviet espionage agents. And he could not have engaged in these treasonable activities if the State Department and the whole New Deal had not been honeycombed with men whose loyalties, like his own, were pledged to an alien ideology.

Hiss did not serve the Communists for pay. He served them out of conviction. When he decided that Russia and communism were worthy of his devotion, and that they represented the things that are right, he decided also that the United States and republican economic and political institutional liberties were wrong. What he did, he did with no divided mind and conscience. He made his choice.

Having made that choice, having rejected his own country, where could he be of most service to his adopted cause? Where but in the Government itself? And where within that Government? Obviously, within the most strategic sector of the administration, which happened to be the State Department, and at the side of the men whose office and influence controlled the course of the Nation.

So we find this traitor hobnobbing through the years with the mightiest of the New Deal mighty. He advises the President. He is the favored protege of two men who are kingmakers within the bureaucracy. One of them, Felix Frankfurter, is a man who moves the members of his personal entourage into ever greater posts of power and influence. He is the patron of Hiss.

Another, Stanley Reed, is solicitor general of the United States. Hiss serves him as his right hand man. And in time these men rise to places on the United States Supreme Court, and when Hiss finds himself in trouble, both of them came forward at his first trial to testify to his loyalty and good character. Why? Because their own loyalty and reputation are by now hopelessly compromised.

In more than a dozen years in the New Deal, there is scarcely a man of influence in the upper range of the bureaucracy with whom Hiss is not on the most familiar terms. Secretaries of State Cordell Hull, Edward R. Stettinius, and James Byrnes are his friends, and they vouch for him. The governor of Illinois, Adlai Stevenson, his associate in the State Department, is a character witness. When the investigation of the House Committee on Un-American Activities finally turns up some of the suspicious activities of Hiss, the first man to say that the whole thing is a "red herring" is the present President of the United States.

Under such patronage, Hiss moved from one position of influence to another, his activities always exercising a fateful leverage on the policies which have shaped the Nation's course. He is executive secretary of the Dumbarton Oaks conference, where the groundwork is laid to place the United States in the United Nations. He is secretary general of the San Francisco conference, where the UN Charter is drafted. When the organization comes into being he is principal adviser to the American delegation.

He enjoys the acclaim of the internationalists, who are always eager to plunge the Nation ever deeper into foreign entanglements, even though the successive descents always prove to be to the country's detriment; and the $20,000 a year post with the Carnegie endowment is their reward for these services. With his outlook and convictions, now proved to the satisfaction of the jury and the public, whom was Hiss serving all this time?

Some judgment can be made on the basis of his associations. One of his intimates was Harry D. White, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who conceived the Morgenthau plan for a harsh peace to be imposed upon Germany and who conceived still another of these internationalist schemes—the Bretton Woods World Bank and Monetary Fund. Five days after White is called before the Committee on Un-American Activities, having been drawn into the Hiss inquiry, he dies suddenly. The cause is said to be an overdose of digitalis.

Another man interrogated by the FBI as a result of the Hiss investigation is Laurence Duggan, former State Department official, by then holding the presidency of another Carnegie agency—the Institute of International Education. A few days after the FBI men call, Duggan dies in a plunge from the window of his sixteenth-floor New York office, his body landing so far from the building wall that suicide or murder, not accident, is the choice of tenable theory.

Finally, at the trial resulting in Hiss' conviction, White is named in testimony as having been a secret member of the Communist Party and Duggan as "in a special category" of the party apparatus—not a party member but maintaining a special liaison with the underground through the divorced first wife of Gerhard Eisler, fugitive former No. 1 Communist agent in the United States.

These descriptions of secret allegiance are taken from the notes of A. A. Berle, former Assistant Secretary of State, to whom Hiss' principal accuser, Whittaker Chambers, first related the existence of the Communist spy ring within the New Deal in 1939. But neither then nor in 1945, when Chambers repeated his story to the Department's security officer, was the New Deal willing to proceed against the traitors. Why? Because the New Deal was more than implicated. It was a principal collaborator and codefendant.

Berle's confidential notes said that the role of Hiss in the Communist service was to mess up policy. If that was his role, it was also a reasonable role, highly serviceable to Russia.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that an advertisement published in the Wall Street Journal of Friday, January 19, 1951, of the sale of the German Embassy to be made on the 16th day of February, be published at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the advertisement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFER FOR SALE BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Notice inviting citizens of the United States of America to make offers to purchase from the Attorney General all his right, title, and interest in and to the following described improved real property situated in the city of Washington, D. C.:

DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY

Valuable downtown location, 1435–41 Massachusetts Avenue NW.; improvements of brick construction consisting of 70 rooms, large ballroom, 13 baths and 5 additional toilet rooms, garages, and storage space, situated on plot containing 20,000 square feet.

This property is ideally located and offers unusual opportunities for development. The neighborhood is improving, with new construction in the immediate area and is within easy walking distance of the best hotels, many Government departments, churches, schools, financial district, good shopping and restaurant facilities. The site has a frontage of 138.6 feet on the north side of Massachusetts Avenue between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets NW., the avenue is 160 feet wide and is one of the main traffic arteries of Washington.

Which property is more particularly described in a certain Vesting Order No. 15004, dated August 14, 1950, recorded on August 25, 1950, in the Office of the Recorder, in and for the District of Columbia in the Record of Deeds of said District of Columbia in folio 41 on page 9282.

Sealed bids addressed to the Office of Alien Property, Department of Justice, 101 Indiana Avenue NW., Washington, D. C., will be received until 10 o'clock a. m. on the 16th day of February 1951, at which time and place said bids will be publicly opened and declared. Each bid must be in duplicate and an irrevocable offer to purchase the property.

Bids will be received only from American citizens and corporations controlled by American citizens and organized under the laws of the United States. Bids must contain an affidavit stating, among other things, that the bidder is not purchasing on behalf of an undisclosed principal, a person not a citizen of the United States, or for resale to a noncitizen.

A bank draft or certified check payable to the Attorney General in an amount equal to 10 percent of the bid price must accompany the bid. Any commission payable must be stated in the bid. The Attorney General reserves the right to reject any or all bids or at his election to waive all defects in any bid. The Attorney General's right, title, and interest in the property will be conveyed by quitclaim deed without covenants or warranties of any kind. Further particulars with respect to the said property and forms for submitting bids may be obtained by communicating with the Office of Alien Property, Department of Justice, 101 Indiana Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

Dated at Washington, D. C., this 12th day of January 1951.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH,
Attorney General.

Mr LANGER. Mr. President, I might add that I intend to submit a resolution to keep the German Embassy from being sold. I hope that I may have the cooperation of the appropriate committee, Mr. President, because I can conceive of no single individual act that would do more harm to the friendly relations—because they are friendly—between the people of Western Germany and the rank and file of the people of the United States of America, than the sale of the German Embassy. I sincerely hope that enough Senators will join with me to impress upon the Attorney General of the United States that it would be the height of folly to have the Embassy sold when, at the same time, our representatives in Western Germany are telling the people there that we are their friends and that we are looking forward to the time when they will fight side by side with us if there is war, and that in any event we are trying in every way possible to reestablish them as a nation, when they in turn will have their proper representatives over here again in an appropriate place representing their government in Washington.

I hope I may have the help and cooperation, as I believe I shall, of the distinguished majority leader, who, after he has an opportunity to look into this matter of the sale of the German Embassy, and after he has a chance to talk with the Director of the Office of Alien Property and with the Attorney General of the United States, will, I believe, be very glad to join with the senior Senator from North Dakota in at least having the sale postponed until an appropriate committee of the Senate may have a chance to go into the matter at great length.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. McFARLAND. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, February 1, 1951, at 12 o'clock meridian.

MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1951

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose all-pervading presence is our shield in the stillness of the night and our strength in the struggles of each new day, we rejoice that Thy blessings are abundantly adequate for our many needs.

Grant that this moment of communion with Thy spirit may be for each of us a cleansing of heart and a consecration of purpose to serve Thee faithfully and to minister to the welfare of all mankind.

Show us how we may lift the shadows of fear and sorrow from every darkened and burdened land, enlarge our faith in the moral and spiritual forces, and may we never lose the vision of a lasting world peace.

We pray that daily we may include and remember in our prayers our fellow citizens who are out on the far-away battlefields. Make us more truly worthy of their sacrifices as they struggle to safeguard our liberties. We are sending them our thoughts of love through Thee.

Hear us in the name of the Captain of our Salvation. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 25, 1951, was read and approved.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. KILDAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes today, following any special orders heretofore entered.

Mr. WHITTEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes today, following any special orders heretofore entered.

CRITICISM OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, these remarks are addressed to those who prefer believing the worst in man rather than the best, who would let cynicism displace faith, who act as dupes for demagogery, defamation, and disunity.

A day never passes but what congressional mail carries letters demanding that Members of Congress deliver some public official's head. Some writer's charges have only the limits of their imagination. On coming to Congress and receiving the first avalanche of such mail I begin to wonder if the Democratic Party had a monopoly on skulduggery but after talking to some of the older Members of the House who have survived previous cries of "Throw the rascals out," I have decided that perhaps baseball is not the national sport, but rather it is a game of let us see who is best at blaming those currently in office in Washington for crop failure, droughts, sickness, or why the Dodgers did not win.

The fellow who is foolhardy enough to offer himself for public office can expect to find himself, family, and friends at the large end of Mt. Wilson's telescope and a galaxy of eyes at the small end with a thousand charges leveled and usually little thought given to substantiating evidence. The results, of course, many well-qualified, capable men refuse to offer themselves for public service. All of this, we the American people had come to accept as a bit of the cross to bear for the privilege and honor of serving these United States.

Back home I seldom heard the charge of liar leveled at any man because it was a serious one and a bluffer could count on his hand being called, but in Washington I find officials, columnists, and others have used the term so often and indiscriminately that headline hunters have had to embellish it with terms such as revolving, congenital, unmitigated, and on ad infinitum before they can hope to crack the front page and receive public recognition of their mudslinging.

Lest it be that I am becoming thinskinned and defending myself I say to you that the folks in my district have been exceedingly kind to me and most tolerant of my shortcomings.

I think it is time we declare a moratorium on hate, bias, prejudice, mudslinging, and personal vilification for the duration. I do not think the times allow us this luxury and extravagance. "A house divided will fall" was never truer than today.

Following World War II America turned to peace and prosperity unlimited and late was the hour that America wakened to find while she stacked the chips, Communist Russia was stacking the deck. The Communists are masters of propaganda, intrigue, and deceit. Whom they would destroy they first divide and turn against each other.

Some public officials, too, have given way to character assassination and have added their stones to the job of confusing, confounding, and complexing the American people as to who can and who cannot be trusted. Communists, moral degenerates, and Johnny Come Lately's to democracy have leveled their charges like shrapnel at high officials—we are in danger of reversing one of the first tenets of our jurisprudence and now, deeming the accused guilty until he proves himself innocent.

Yes, yes, I do not know one of our public officials from Washington to Truman who has not made his mistakes, nor even you and I.

You and I have differed at times with them and perhaps even with each other and sometimes our crystal ball might have been clearer than theirs, but there is cold comfort indeed in saying I told you so now. Monday morning quarterbacks and hindsight prognosticators will not get the job done.

We have taken a real shellacking in Korea, we are going to have to eat some crow, but if we are smart we will not spend our time blaming each other or looking for a scapegoat. We will be telling the executive department to train Japs, Chinese Nationals, and West Germans, help Franco Spain and anyone else who looks like they will fight Communist aggression. This is a tough war. There are no holds barred. We had better take friends where we find them and worry about their table manners later.

Let us not just criticize policies of government without offering a proposed solution. If you believe, as I do, that we are not taking sufficient advantage of the great manpower reserves available in Japan, Formosa, and West Germany, sound off and say so. We know we cannot combat the manpower under Communist influence with American men alone.

Even with the manpower of these countries we will be outnumbered and outgunned in the trials ahead unless we in this country are prepared to sacrifice and unite. The Communists continue to devote their efforts and industrial production toward a tremendous armed force. For what other purpose if not continued armed aggression with the United States as its ultimate target? Our only escape from world conflagration is peace through strength. We must remember that this time there is no great military power as Great Britain was in World War II to buy us time while we prepared, that this time too little and too late will mean the end of life as we know it today in this country, that we will not have another chance—that this one is for keeps.

This country must prepare to measure up to the rigors of mobilization, price controls, scarcities, and sacrifices on the home front as well as the battle front. In the face of the insatiable Communist horde let us make our solidarity as impenetrable as an ebony thicket. Argue with our policy makers and legislators on the issues, tell them in no uncertain terms when you think they are off course in what is best for the country and if at the next election you think someone else can do a better job, well, "throw the rascals out," but until then they are your elected officials. The sophisticate will possibly call me naive, but I believe the vast majority of public officials to be men and women who are sincere, able, and loyal Americans, doing their best to help save America. Let us make up our minds that we cannot afford politics as usual, that patriotism shall not be a monopoly of the young alone, that those of us this time, who cannot share our countrymen's sacrifices on the battlefront will not comfort the enemy by helping destroy confidence in the Nation's leadership by character assassination.

We worry today about economic bankruptcy, but most of all I am concerned with political bankruptcy. Let the Commies and their subtle propaganda panic us into a run on our bank of confidence in the character, loyalty, and morals of our Nation's leaders and the doors of communism will blot out the light of freedom of mankind for a thousand years. Let not America's heritage be lost in a Gethsemane of libel and slander.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

CONTROL OF FOOD PRICES

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a bill to repeal those provisions of the Defense Production Act of 1950 which prevent effective control of food prices.

The recent wage-price freeze is bitter bread, indeed, for the American consumer. The dilly dallying of the past 6 months has resulted in the highest prices in our history. That these prices have not been rolled back is, indeed, shocking. This situation is the responsibility of the executive branch.

The end, however, is not in sight. Most food prices are not included in the freeze. Food prices can still soar. Forty percent of the average American cost of living is in the cost of food. This means higher prices to the housewife. This means more inflation is on the way. It means serious blows to the consumer.

Congress must take the blame for this condition. Last session the farm bloc wrote into price legislation a ban on ceilings for farm products selling at less than parity. Almost all grains, poultry, fruit, vegetables, and dairy products are included.

Any group seeking special advantage for itself eventually brings on its own downfall. The farm interests have done themselves great harm for the long pull and incurred the antagonism of the consuming public. The consumer cannot continue forever on the bottom of our economic totem pole. Farm products must be treated the same as all other commodities. A long-suffering public cannot long endure such discrimination as to the necessities of life.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. ALBERT asked and was given permission to address the House today for 10 minutes following any special orders heretofore entered.

ADMIRAL CLIFFORD A. SWANSON

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, today Rear Adm. Clifford A. Swanson, Medical Corps, United States Navy, finishes his tour of duty as Surgeon General of the Department of the Navy. While Admiral Swanson was fourth youngest in the history of our country to hold this responsible position, he has served with such distinction as to have reflected credit upon the medical profession, the Medical Corps of the Navy, and the administration of medicine and surgery generally in our armed services.

We are most fortunate in this country to have had the services of such an outstanding doctor and surgeon as Admiral Swanson. During his term as Surgeon General he has accomplished a great deal, as, for example:

Establishment of the Medical Service Corps by law, an officer corps which affords opportunity for enlisted hospital corpsmen to secure commissioned rank. It also affords personnel to relieve medical and dental officers of much administrative work.

The establishment by law of officer status for nurses.

Increase in the membership of the Medical Corps Reserve enabling the Navy to lend the Army 570 doctors to meet the emergency of the Korean action.

By strong and courageous action he persuaded the Secretary of Defense to leave open five of the six naval hospitals scheduled for closure. Had all six been closed, we could not have taken care of casualties. The United States Naval Hospital, Corpus Christi, in my home district was one of these and it now has 423 patients.

Although head of the Naval Medical Department, Admiral Swanson still took time to perform surgical operations at the Naval Medical Center almost every Friday afternoon.

As a representative of the people, I have been most impressed, however by his sincere desire to carry out the will and purpose of Congress in providing superior facilities for those who serve and have served in the Armed Forces.

Because Admiral Swanson had the character and foresight and the courage to fight for the maintenance of sufficient medical services in the Navy at a time when others in the Department of Defense were slashing without regard to any principle except that of making a showing of economy we are today able to meet the demands for medical facilities for the thousands who have suffered as the result of combat in Korea.

Mr. Speaker, I salute this splendid gentleman and say to him that he has done an outstanding job for his profession and for his country and I wish for him great success in his next assignment.

RIGHT OF ACTION AGAINST GOVERNMENT

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill which gives an individual a right of action against the Government if that individual has been injured by a privileged libelous or slanderous statement made by Members of Congress.

This bill does not attempt to make the Member liable for such statements or publications and, of course, he could not be made liable as article I, section 6, clause 1 of the Constitution of the United States provides that "for any speech or debate in either House," Senators or Representatives, "shall not be questioned in any other place."

This constitutional provision confers absolute immunity upon Members of Congress for their acts or speech, even though they deliberately make a false statement; nor is it limited to words spoken in debate. It is applicable, for example, to written reports presented in either House by its committees, to resolutions, to resolutions offered, to acts of voting; in short, to things generally done in a session of the House by one of its Members in relation to the business before it.

This constitutional provision simply restates the common law. It was first incorporated in the Bill of Rights. Its original purpose was to prevent the King from arresting and prosecuting members of Parliament who made statements in debate. This had become an abuse at that time. Long experience has demonstrated the necessity for this rule to insure free and unrestricted debate in our legislative halls.

While this privilege of the Member of Congress is necessary, it works a great hardship on a defamed person. He has no opportunity to go to court where it can be determined if the statement was true. Statements made in Congress are given great publicity. They are generally carried throughout the country in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and are given wide coverage by the press and radio. Such statements could cause irreparable damage to an individual's reputation, destroy his means of livelihood, and bring disgrace to him and his family.

While this privilege should be granted to Members of Congress, it is not fair that the individual should suffer this loss. While Members of Congress might not be agents of the United States Government in the true legal sense, they are performing a necessary function of government by taking part in legislative debate and proceedings.

Since the individual has been injured by a necessary function of the Government, it is not fair that he should bear this loss. The loss was caused by a necessary act of the Government, and it is much fairer that the Government bear this loss and pay the proven damages.

The Federal Tort Claims Act gives an individual the right of action against the United States Government when he has been injured by a tortious act, but this remedy does not extend to libel and slander. Another statute gives him an action against the Government for malicious prosecution. There is an old legal maxim that "where there is a wrong, there is a remedy." I think a remedy should be granted in this case.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means may have until midnight tonight to file a committee report on the bill H. R. 1612, and that anyone desiring to file minority views have the same privilege.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF WILLIAM McKINLEY

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this is President McKinley's birthday. We, the Members from Ohio, appreciate very much the uniform courtesy that the Speaker extends to us every year when we ask for recognition to say a few words about that distinguished gentleman. We also appreciate the uniformity with which the Members on the majority side, the Democratic side, wear the red carnations which the Ohio delegation provides for distribution at our annual observance. The red carnation is Ohio's State flower, and it was McKinley's favorite flower.

Mr. Speaker, I think it might be said that the greatest work of President McKinley was done in this House when he was a Member of Congress. Several great men have gone from the Congress to the Presidency, and several from the Senate. McKinley did not serve in the Senate. He served in this body about 12 years. I have said repeatedly that his greatest work was not his work as Governor of Ohio or as President of the United States. His greatest work was that which he did as he stood over here on this side of the aisle. William Tyler Page, whom we, who have been Members of the House for several terms, remember with pride and pleasure, told me much about Mr. McKinley. He was here at that time. Mr. Page said that Mr. McKinley's desk was over here on my left and he spoke from that desk, and what he said from that place was what made him immortal.

It is not my purpose to make a long speech. I can say that President McKinley was, as we all agree, a great man. And I can say that he was a great boy also. He found his way into the Union Army at a very early age and distinguished himself on many a battlefield. The large monument erected by the State of Ohio in his honor on the battlefield of Antietam is erected on the spot where young McKinley distinguished himself. He distinguished himself in another way that I want to tell you about.

When Phil Sheridan made his great ride from Winchester up to Cedar Creek, of which the poet has spoken so beautifully, Phil said in his memoirs that he did not do that quite as heroically and enthusiastically as the poet said, because between Winchester and Cedar Creek he encountered several situations that were very discouraging. He found that his ranking commanders had failed to reorganize his army, and that things were in very bad shape.

However, he said, the most capable assistance that came to him at that time was the help of a young captain who could not have been more than 22 years old. His name was William McKinley. General Sheridan cites this incident in his memoirs and compliments young McKinley highly. He did not know when he wrote his memoirs that McKinley was going to be a great Congressman or a great Governor or a great President, but he was a great captain in the eyes of General Sheridan. From this little captain and his ability on the field of battle the great general got great comfort and inspiration.

Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit me, I should like to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOW], a new Congressman, who represents the district that was once represented by Mr. McKinley.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, it is with humility I address the House today. It is my distinct honor to represent the great industrial and agricultural Sixteenth District of Ohio. Seventy-five years ago William McKinley entered upon a distinguished career in this House from my district, and served seven consecutive terms. To follow so illustrious a predecessor, even after 75 years, is an honor with responsibilities.

William McKinley was not only one of the greatest, but one of the most revered of Presidents. He rose to the Presidency at a time when all America was stricken by a great depression; at a time when much of America had concluded that the period of expansion and progress which occurred following the War Between the States was at an end; at a time, in fact, when many Americans were declaring their belief that these United States had reached the summit of progress, and from that time on could go no way but downward.

William McKinley could never subscribe to such philosophy. He believed that these United States had rather just begun to develop. He believed that a strengthened economy and the reestablishment of the faith of the people in their Government was all that was needed to put the United States back on the road to its proper place in the family of nations.

His prompt action in calling a special session of Congress to consider the Nation's fiscal status, and his calm, firm hand at the helm soon restored the Nation's economy and the faith of the people. By the time the new century had arrived, the United States had become recognized as a world power.

It was during his period of service in this very House that William McKinley displayed to men from throughout the Nation those characteristics of honesty, sincerity, and patriotism which were to win him unanimous nomination to the Presidency on the first ballot at the Republican convention of 1896.

He won a smashing victory at the polls that fall over a strong opponent, William Jennings Bryan. His domestic policies as well as his conduct of the war with Spain so endeared him with the people of this Nation that he was reelected in 1900 by an even greater plurality.

But despite all his great work, despite the possible effects of Nation-wide esteem which often verged on adulation,

William McKinley remained the man of the people.

The entire Nation mourned the death of that great President at the hand of an assassin in Buffalo in 1901.

Though he died in that year, McKinley still lives in the hearts of all Americans, and particularly in the hearts of the people of the great State of Ohio.

The people of his home town and mine, Canton, as well as the people of the entire State of Ohio, loved McKinley the man, rather than McKinley the President. This love was firmly imbedded in their hearts long before William McKinley gained the highest office in the land.

Their great affection for William McKinley was easily understood. For William McKinley was a friendly man, a home-loving man, and a religious man. He was a gracious friend and neighbor.

The people of Canton revered him for his never-failing devotion to his wife, who never completely recovered from the effects of the deaths of their two infant daughters. They were proud of the fact that in Canton, Ohio, he would never permit himself to be addressed as "Mr. President." He said, "In my home town I'm still Major McKinley—the same man who came home from the war." Thus he always treated the people of Canton as old friends.

His close friend and noted Senator from Ohio, Mark Hanna, once said:

> An ideal homebody was William McKinley, and the American fireside was a shrine of worship with him.

An Assistant Secretary of State said:

> If the Lord ever breathed the breath of life into a more gracious and amiable man than Mr. McKinley, I have yet to find it out.

Even his opponents regarded William McKinley highly. William Jennings Bryan, in an address following McKinley's death, declared that his party had never found it so easy to concede defeat graciously as when they lost to McKinley.

William McKinley was a devoutly religious man.

Business was never permitted to encroach upon the observance of the Sabbath. Visitors who called at the White House on Sunday afternoons in hopes of discussing affairs of state, instead wound up joining the President and Mrs. McKinley in singing hymns in the music room.

In concluding his last speech at Buffalo, William McKinley said:

> Our earnest prayer is that God will graciously vouchsafe prosperity, happiness, and peace to all our neighbors, and like blessings to all the people and powers of the earth.

So were his thoughts always devoted to the welfare of all the people, for William McKinley was a true Christian, who might well be set down as one who loved his fellow man.

It is for those great qualities that we here today pay tribute to William McKinley—soldier, lawyer, and statesman—but above all, to William McKinley the man.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, in my service in this House I have had occasion to notice some very warm friendships that have grown up between men on different sides of the aisle. For instance, I remember the fine friendship between Jack Garner and Nick Longworth. They tell me that was the case between William McKinley and Roger Q. Mills, of Texas. They fought each other on the great issue of the tariff, but through the heat of conflict they welded themselves together into a devoted and lasting friendship.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] such time as he may desire; and in doing so I wish to make this comment: Some of you new Members may not know this, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is the ranking Republican of all the Republicans in the House, serving now, I think, in his thirty-third consecutive year.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, after the masterly address by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOW] I feel a little hesitant about taking the floor. However, I have always been a great admirer of William McKinley, and all I am going to say today in a few words is to give a little picture of the late President McKinley's fighting spirit.

You will recall that after his district had been gerrymandered and the Republican Party was defeated in 1893, the editor of the local paper went down to Mr. McKinley's home and said: "Major, what shall we say to the American people?" McKinley, without a moment's hesitation, replied, "You may say this: 'The Republican Party values its principles no less in defeat than in victory. It holds to them after a reverse, as before, because it believes in them, and believing in them is ready to battle for them. They are not espoused for mere policy, nor to serve in a single contest. They are set deep and strong in the hearts of the people, and are interwoven with its struggles, its life, and its history. Without discouragement our great party reaffirms its allegiance to Republican doctrine, and with unshaken confidence seeks again the public judgment through public discussion'."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that any Member wishing to extend his remarks with reference to Mr. McKinley may be permitted to do so at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, speaking for the Members of the House who are elected as Democrats, I am very glad to join with the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] in paying tribute today to President McKinley.

The office of President is the first office in the hearts and minds of the people of the United States, and the highest office within the gift of our people. Americans of all generations respect deeply not only the office but the man who fills that office.

We in this day and age, and Americans of yesterday, may differ as we do and as they did with the Chief Executive of our country in this position on public questions. That is one thing, but the deep respect for the office and the man is another thing that is never disturbed or affected in the minds of the people of America. President William McKinley in his day and age played a very important part in the progress of our country. We on this side, not only as Democrats but over and above that, as Americans, honor his memory today.

My friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] said that "the greatest work of President McKinley was done while he was a Member of the House of Representatives"—while a Member of this distinguished body. That is true from one angle, but I think his leadership during the Spanish-American War as President of our country was outstanding, and I think the results of the Spanish-American War have played a very important part in the life of our country since that great event took place. Under his leadership, while Americans of that day may not consciously have appreciated it, America was compelled to extend itself into other areas of the world. As a result the Philippines came under our jurisdiction and other island possessions became a part of the jurisdiction of our country. I think that one of the greatest effects in the history of our country has flowed from the leadership of President McKinley, and that is our extension and our continued extension into international affairs. To me the Spanish-American War was the turning point in the history of our country in this particular respect and I think that important event which took place in the history of our country while William McKinley was President, and under his leadership, inures to his benefit, and that he should be given proper credit for his sterling leadership that first brought about the successful culmination of the Spanish-American War, and second, the assumption on the part of our country of its duties and responsibilities internationally as the great and powerful Nation we were in those days and which we have developed into since.

Speaking, therefore—I would rather not say on the basis of speaking for the Democratic Members of the House, but speaking for us Americans who are Members of this House and elected as Democrats, and speaking as their leader and as the majority leader of the House, I am very glad not only for myself but also for my colleagues on this side to join with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and our Americans who are Members of the House who are elected as Republicans in honoring the memory of this great man, this great American, this outstanding President.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am sure all of us, especially the delegation from Ohio, appreciate the very statesmanlike utterances of Mr. MCCORMACK, the distinguished majority leader from Massachusetts. It is true that those of us who have had occasion to speak in the memory of Mr. McKinley in times gone by, have taken the position that Mr. McKinley was President at the time when the United States became a world power. From that time up to now we have been increasing in our national and international influence. Our hope is that we will continue to increase in power and influence.

I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that, after listening to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], it is not out of order for some of us who represent a different school of thought on the international problem, and who come from that section of the country that was most involved in the great war in which Mr. McKinley participated, to say a few words at this time.

I cannot agree that if McKinley were here today he would be in favor of this United Nations that is out to wreck the Republic of the United States and subordinate the American people to the domination of foreign powers.

Coming, as I do, from a Southern State in which McKinley fought during the War Between the States, I also desire to say that, in my opinion, if McKinley were here today he would never favor placing the flag of the so-called United Nations above the flag of the United States.

May I say if any of you really want a new flag, I will be glad to get you a Confederate flag. It would at least be an American flag. But I am not in favor of any other flag being placed above the flag of my country, especially at this time when influences are being used to destroy everything for which our people fought.

McKinley was a great American.

I have noticed here that whenever dangers to this country arise, whenever those undermining influences that are trying to destroy this country, manifest themselves, the Members of this House who are first to fly to the defense of the country are the sons, grandsons, and collateral relatives of those old men who wore the Blue and the ones who wore the Gray in the War Between the States in which McKinley himself fought.

If he were here today, he would be just as strong for the preservation of this Government and the American way of life as any man in this House, no matter from what State he comes.

As I said, McKinley was a great American. When he passed away, when he was murdered by a Communist, by a member of the same gang that is trying to undermine and destroy this country today and has been for more than a generation, his death was mourned throughout the Southern States, because as President, however we might have differed with him on political policies, we found in him the heartbeats of a great American who put the welfare of his country ahead of all other considerations.

God bless his sacred memory.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. I wish again to thank the Speaker for his courtesy in giving us time for this our annual observance. We appreciate the efforts of our colleague [Mr. MCGREGOR] for his thoughtfulness in bringing to us these beautiful carnations; one of which every person on the floor including the House attendants is wearing.

ADMIRAL CLIFFORD A. SWANSON

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the gentleman from Texas in expressing my appreciation of Admiral Swanson's very fine service of Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery of the Navy. Everyone who has worked with him or who has come in contact with him realizes his anxiety to have the best possible medical and surgical service for those of the Navy. They all know of his fight to have the best naval hospital facilities for his men. They respected him, all respected him, for his fight to get what was necessary no matter whether it was a popular thing or not. He dared to speak. He had great courage.

SIXTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 13)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and together with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith the Sixty-seventh Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission. This report covers the fiscal year ended June 30, 1950.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 29, 1951.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. CANNON asked and was given permission to address the House today for 1 hour following any special orders heretofore entered, and that on Thursday next, and if not on Thursday then on Friday next, an additional hour following any special orders heretofore entered.

THE LATE CHARLES NOEL CROSBY

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the older Members and people throughout the old Crawford-Erie District will mourn the passing of Charles N. Crosby, a democratic Member of this House from January 1, 1933, to January 1, 1939. Mr. Crosby was a distinguished gentleman in his own community and he served faithfully here in this great body.

The Titusville Herald had this to say about our great friend:

Charles Noel Crosby, only man from Crawford County to represent the old Crawford-Erie District in Congress since 1912, died in a Frederick, Md., hospital yesterday from heart disease. He was 75.

He was a Democratic Congressman from January 1, 1933, to January 1, 1939, serving three terms.

Born on a farm near Andover, Ohio, he attended private schools in that State. He was graduated from Western Reserve University, where he was a member of the school's unbeaten football team in the 1890's.

At Linesville he operated a factory which made silos. He later moved that construction and lumber business to Meadville.

Entering politics, he made three or four unsuccessful bids for Congress before he was elected in 1932. That year when Franklin D. Roosevelt was elected president Mr. Crosby defeated Milton W. Shreve, an Erie Republican. Mr. Shreve had been in office since 1912 with the exception of one term when Mike Liebel of Erie was in.

In 1934 and 1936, Will P. Rose, Cambridge Springs newspaper publisher, opposed Mr. Crosby on the Republican ticket. The Democrats swept virtually all the offices in the State that year and George Earle was named Governor. In 1936 Mr. Crosby was also nominated on the Social-Justice ticket which backed the Townsend plan for old-age pensions. He endeavored to push a compromise bill on the Townsend plan through Congress but the measure failed.

In 1938 Mr. Crosby was not the Democratic nominee. The congressional post was won by Lew Rodgers, of Erie, who held it until Carroll D. Kearns, of Farrell, was elected to the first of three terms.

Mr. Crosby purchased a 325-acre dairy farm in Frederick County, Md., after leaving the House of Representatives.

Funeral services will be private. Burial will be in a private cemetery at Arlington, Va.

Mr. Shreve, mentioned above, succeeded Arthur L. Bates, of Meadville.

ACTIVE IN CIVIC AFFAIRS

Mr. Crosby was a member of both Linesville and Meadville school boards when resident of those communities; was president of Meadville Chamber of Commerce in 1922, 1923, and 1924. He was a member when resident in Meadville of the First Presbyterian Church, of Beta Theta Pi, and the Iroquois Club.

Mrs. Crosby, the former Sara Isabelle Fetterman, of Simons, Ohio, died in 1943.

Surviving are five daughters: Mrs. R. A. Donaldson, of Meadville; Mrs. J. G. Campbell, of Butler; Jean Crosby, Bethesda, Md.; Mrs. Crosby McEvoy, Arlington, Va., and Mrs. R. R. Remus, Skokie, Ill.; and four sons: Theodore F., Fairfax, Va.; Charles N., Jr., and Ronald V., who lived at home with their father; and Job B. Crosby, of Long Beach, Calif.

SALES TAX PROPOSALS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, my constant opposition to the sales tax in all its forms is well known.

For years I have fought against this outrageous levy upon the people and I expect to follow this course just as long as I am in Congress.

Now I understand the latest proposal on the taxation subject calls for a Federal sales tax.

Of course, they will probably want to put a tax on bread as soon as Congress approves of this principle, if it ever does.

Sales taxes, in every State they were ever levied sooner or later reached the necessities of life and the man in the street is the victim.

Any tax which hits the vital goods we have to buy, the food we eat, the clothes we wear, and the medicines we must have, resembles a tax which peoples behind the iron curtain have to pay to their Soviet masters.

I am against the sales tax whether it be Federal, State, or local. There is no justice in it.

Some States which formerly saddled themselves with it, are now throwing off its yoke. They are being ruined with it.

Last week Mr. Fred Stein, the distinguished editor of the Binghamton Press, foremost newspaper in the Gannett group, supplied words describing the sales tax better than I can in an editorial on this matter. I am therefore inserting his editorial in the RECORD today, part of which I quote herewith:

Opposition to sales taxes always have been great, because they are regressive. They fall hardest on those least able to pay. * * *

The consumer in the price he pays gets nicked for more than the Government gets in taxes. * * *

A sales tax collected at consumers' or retail level is difficult to administer, because of the thousands of establishments whose collection of the tax must be policed.

MOCK THUNDER FROM THE SENATE

Mr. WOOD of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, we shall soon be celebrating the birthday of the Father of his Country. I am comparatively a newcomer in Washington. I am able to see the Washington Monument in relief against the rosy glow of the morning sunrise from the window of my apartment. The beautiful dome of this Capitol, whose cornerstone he laid, and within whose walls should be forever ensouled the spirit of freedom, looms vividly against the dawning light of a new day.

I wonder what that august personage would think, if he were able to view what we have done with his beloved country; and doubtless he is. The burden of his prophetic Farewell Message, delivered in tears, was that we should avoid foreign entanglements. Have we? He foresaw all the evils we have already encountered and those which are still immanent in our departure from his advice.

May the aura of that mighty soul, still brooding over this marvelous country he loved, protect us from that foul abortion, conceived in the twisted and psychopathic brain of Alger Hiss, the United Nations.

We are no more his child if we persist in remaining within the United Nations. We have denied his paternity, sold our illustrious birthright for a mess of pottage, and have become the slaves of a congerie of spies and traitors, and fugitives from a New Deal psychology.

May God, in his gracious bounty, decree that we may once again assert our freedom won so dearly, desert the impossible alliance of God's free people with the decadent and time-serving United Nations. We may never hope to raise them to our standard. They will drag us down to their's.

Let us determine that, as for us, we shall remain the militant captains of our destiny, under God, in a revived spirit of America for Americans, so that we may be able to view these monuments of Washington's greatness without covering our eyes because we have basely renounced all for which he wrought.

I want to commend to my colleague and the American people the following editorial which appeared in the Washington Times-Herald of Friday, January 26, 1951:

MOCK THUNDER FROM THE SENATE

Both Houses of Congress have now adopted resolutions telling UN to declare Communist China an aggressor. In addition, the Senate has told UN not to admit Red China to membership.

The motive which led to the adoption of these resolves is obvious. The Members know that the people are out of patience with the administration for sending more than 7,000 of their sons to death in the futile Korean War, and for arranging to get into a much more costly and no less futile war in Europe. The voters expected the new Congress to do something to rescue the country from these calamities but the Congress hasn't shown the wit and courage to do what the people want.

Far from it, this Congress has been promising the people exactly what they don't want and don't need, such as an extension of the draft and a huge increase in taxes.

BITTER LETTERS

It is no wonder, then, that the letters from home to the Congressmen have become increasingly bitter. The Members decided they must do something that would look like vigorous action in the hope of cooling off their constituents. Hence these resolutions telling UN to denounce the Chinese.

There is, of course, no doubt that the Chinese are aggressors and that the UN should have denounced them as such long ago. The point to be borne in mind, however, is that the resolutions accomplish nothing even if the advice is followed.

Our problems are how to end the Korean War and, more particularly, how to avoid a similar misfortune to an overmatched American Army in Europe. Declaring China the aggressor won't help on either point.

The only meaning that the resolution can have is to advise UN to declare war on Communist China. If that's what Congress wants it can declare the war itself. If that is what it doesn't want, it should not have passed the resolutions.

RECORD OF FAILURES

Surely, with the long record of the failure of the other nations in UN to join us in the Korean War, there can be no expectation that a declaration by UN that Red China is the aggressor will lead England, France, and the rest to send any troops to fight the Chinese. After declaring North Korea the aggressor, our so-called allies didn't do enough about it to count. They fear Red China much more than they fear Red Korea as they have shown by recognizing Communist China and inviting her representatives to join in UN deliberations.

The Senate's resolutions were directed to UN, which need not heed them and if it does will not follow through in good faith. At the same time the Senate refused to act upon Senator WHERRY'S resolution which was directed to the President who would have disregarded the Senate's counsel at his peril.

SENATOR WHERRY'S RESOLUTION

Senator WHERRY'S resolution had the further advantage of offering some hope of sparing the country a repetition of the Korean tragedy in Europe, for it advised the President not to send American foot soldiers to Europe under the North Atlantic Pact until he had been authorized to do so by Congress.

This sound proposal was sidetracked on the theory that under the Constitution, the President, as Commander in Chief, has the sole right to direct the movement of American troops. If that argument was worth anything, it should have operated to prevent the Senate from offering advice or instructions to UN, for the Constitution entrusts the conduct of diplomatic negotiations to the President.

CHALLENGE TO REPUBLICANS

The Senate's right to tell UN what to do about China is a good deal more dubious than its right to tell the President what not to do with your son in the United States Army.

The behavior of this Congress has done harm, and, we fear, irreparable harm, to the Republican Party. The voters are now very nearly persuaded that the Republican Party offers no real alternative to the Democrats. Both appear to support the Truman policy of rushing this country into futile wars and ruining it with preparations for war on a scale which a sound diplomacy would not require.

MR. HOOVER'S SPEECH

Mr. Hoover's speech electrified the country. Here was sound policy because it was safe policy, because it would not squander American lives, because it was honorable, and because it was within our means. Congress, and particularly the bipartisan Republicans in it, have largely undone Mr. Hoover's good work.

WARNING TO REPUBLICAN PARTY

If the Republican Party can't learn and learn quickly to serve the people, the day will come soon when there isn't going to be any more Republican Party. As matters stand today, vast numbers of Americans—in our judgment a majority of them—have no party to speak for them on the great issue of the day. That situation cannot endure.

SHIPMENT OF GOODS TO RUSSIA

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, in the Detroit Times of January 5 was an article by Fulton Lewis, Jr., which was shocking. I have tried to ascertain its validity and to the best of my knowledge the information is true. In this very month of January England has shipped to Russia $10,000,000 of natural rubber. According to Mr. Lewis' article this natural rubber was shipped on the British steamer Stanreal from London headed for Odessa, Russia. The Russians are stock piling natural rubber for war purposes. On December 28 the National Production Administration ordered a freeze on natural rubber to be bought or distributed in the United States. In other words, our natural rubber is being used to build up war materials to be sent to England, and England at the same time is sending natural rubber to Russia. Americans are disgusted and ashamed of our so-called allies who continue to grease the wheels of the war machine of Russia at our expense.

I beg the Armed Services Committee and our Committee on Foreign Affairs to investigate these charges. Certainly no loyal American can vote 1 cent more for the British, either for military or economic aid, until this practice of dealing with the enemy stops.

PRICE CONTROL

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, the control mountain has been in labor and has brought forth a mess. God save the American Republic.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. CRAWFORD asked and was given permission to address the House for 20 minutes on Thursday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

PARITY FOR FARMERS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I assume almost every Member of Congress is receiving letters protesting against the provision in the National Defense Price Control Act that we put in there in behalf of agriculture, in other words, protesting against the theory that the farmer is entitled to a wage somewhat comparable to that of the man who is on the payroll of private industry.

I have no apology as a Member of Congress to make for the fact that we do accept the philosophy that people who work on farms are entitled to a living wage the same as those who work in industry. That provision was in the price-control law. Every Member of Congress who was a Member at that time should have known it was in there, and if he voted for that law, he simply comes up here and kicks about the very thing he voted for himself. Incidentally, I voted against that law, but I am in favor of allowing the farm people a living wage the same as that in industry.

KOREA

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a news article from the London Daily Mirror.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, as I grow older it is much easier for me to keep my temper, but last week I almost, in the vernacular, "blew my top" when I read in the London Daily Mirror, for January 6, 1951, a news story which would indicate that in Korea our troops had been engaged in shadow boxing, meeting no real opposition, and of withdrawing though no threat exists. That is not what my mail from Korea shows; that is not what the men in Walter Reed say; and I know you do not suffer 50,000 casualties at a Boy Scout jamboree.

I have asked the Department of Defense to give me a full and complete report on this story to determine whether the facts therein stated are as alleged or whether they are false. If England had a bigger stack of chips in the pot, I would not mind it so much, but their stake is comparatively small, and I resent the insinuations and charges in the article which follows:

FAIRY TALES FROM KOREA—WORLD IS NOT GETTING THE TRUTH

(By David Walker)

"For the love of Mike," said men of both British brigades in Korea, as I was leaving Seoul, "tell people at home the real truth about this mucky business."

Well, I'm sorry, but I can't. I can't tell the whole truth for the simple reason that there's a war on—and one of the rules is that you mustn't give comfort to the enemy.

But there are one or two things that ought to be known here at home. You ought to know, apart from any military mistakes, that the picture of actual events in Korea, and especially the fighting, or lack of it, has been dreadfully distorted.

I HAVE BEEN FLABBERGASTED

This is not the fault of British correspondents in Korea, nor indeed of the newspapers at home, but of Alice-in-Wonderland information handed out at a high level—either from Tokyo or from Eighth Army headquarters. Here are some instances.

Britain's Twenty-Ninth Independent Brigade is furious with the papers for their account of what happened around the Communist capital of Pyongyang, where we guarded the retreat of allied forces. I don't blame them.

Here, in London, I have been flabbergasted to read how the brigade was "thrown into action," how "mortar shells fell into the streets," how the brigade "was virtually cut off by large Chinese forces" and how the 52-ton Centurion tanks blazed away with their 20-pounders.

WE DIDN'T FIRE A GUN

I happened to be there with the Twenty-ninth Brigade at the time and the truth is that we were involved in no action, no mortar shells fell in the city, we were not cut off at any time, and the Centurions did not fire one gun in anger.

In fact, up to New Year's Eve, there was not a man in the Twenty-ninth Brigade who had seen a Chinese—although we had retreated more than 200 miles under orders from the high command.

Another example: One day when the Twenty-seventh Brigade (Middlesex, Argylls, Australians) were holding an area about 25 miles north of Pyongyang, I ask Corps for information about them.

I was told: "We have just put in an air-strike on a village ahead of them, killing 500 of the enemy. On their right they are in contact with an estimated 2,000 North Koreans or Chinese."

The Middlesex Regiment confirmed the air-strike. They had at once put a patrol into the bombed village and counted the dead—six civilians.

The Australians confirmed the contact with the enemy—which they estimated at company strength—say 250 to 300 at the outside.

Another example: Eighth Army headquarters in Seoul told us one morning how the Fifth Air Force had successfully attacked an enemy formation in "black and grey uniforms," killing some hundreds of them. On the map this was right in the Twenty-ninth Brigade area at that time.

An officer of the Ulster Rifles told me: "We watched the bombing and it was highly effective. But the victims were all students, in their black and grey clothes, refugees from a northern university, mostly aged about 16 or 17. There was no enemy within miles."

And so it has gone on. The Air Force communiqués have become a total farce. We were given hand-outs stating that "314 enemy were killed." In another instance it was 91. In another it was 50 "in a tunnel."

But a modern 10-year-old boy in short trousers knows that whether it be low-flying jets or high-flying B-29's, no air force can possibly know exactly how many people it has killed.

Today we are retreating again, a large, mechanized, modern, and fully equipped Army—retiring before little men on foot. And the only estimate of their numbers that we have is that given by Tokyo.

MacArthur was criminally wrong in his estimate of a token Chinese force when we started our Christmas advance that was to end on the Yalu River. This token force has suddenly grown to fantastic proportions.

What can we believe?

Are we trying to save face for an evacuation of Korea? Are we trying to fool the enemy—or the public? It it ignorance or dishonesty?

Not only the men of the Middlesex or the Gloucesters, the Argylls or the Australians, but the fighting GI, the Frenchman, the Turk, and the Greek, have a right to be treated better than this. And so have the public.

Our own brigades asked me to tell you the truth. This is only a part of it.

All that the British troops want, in the meantime, is a little less hysteria and a little more realism in the information handed out by the supreme commander's lackeys.

In fact they want the truth. They have nothing to be ashamed of.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT BILL

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I notice the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has requested permission to file a report before midnight tonight. I should like, therefore, to ask the majority leader if he can tell us when the reciprocal-trade bill is coming before the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Assuming a rule is reported out today or tomorrow, which is expected, the reciprocal-trade bill will come up Wednesday. My understanding is that there is an agreement for 1 day of general debate. Is that correct, may I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

Mr. REED of New York. That is correct. The next day will be devoted to consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] told me the same thing. There will be 1 day of general debate, on Wednesday, and on Thursday the bill will be considered under the 5-minute rule.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PRICE AND WAGE CONTROLS

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, the President has repeatedly told the people that conditions are so serious we must mobilize all our resources to build up our national defense for the protection of our country and to aid other peace-loving nations.

In the Eighty-first Congress he called for much greater powers to aid in carrying out such a program. Billions in additional funds were voted then, and the President has requested a $71,000,000,000 budget from the Eighty-second Congress. He has said:

> We must all work in harmony, we must tighten our belts and sacrifice, and we must be taxed until it hurts.

If the President means what he has said and expects the people to cooperate with confidence, it is absolutely necessary that he see to it that the organizations set up to control and allocate manpower, to administer and enforce price control and to control other agencies, are directed to select employees for their ability to fulfill the positions without any regard to politics from the highest positions to the lowest.

Mr. Speaker, in these critical times no power-hungry political organization should be permitted to control any such appointments and turn these emergency Government agencies brought about for the defense of our country into debauched inefficient political machines.

Mr. Speaker, it is disturbing to the American people to note in the press a few days ago an article indicating that the Democratic National committeeman, Mr. Boyle, was about to set up a political committee to screen all employees employed in price control and some other agencies receiving a salary of over $4,000 a year, to make certain that none but Democrats would be employed.

It is further disturbing to note that Vice Admiral John H. Hoover, chief of the new price-control program, a man of exceptional ability and experience in this field, resigned from the job stating in substance, that "he did not believe the distribution of such Federal jobs affecting all of our people should be handed out by a political organization."

It would be reassuring to the people, to the Congress, and in the interest of greater efficiency in government, saving billions of dollars in the future, if the President would issue a directive at once strong enough to stop this vicious and pernicious policy, which unless stopped will continue to degenerate, will continue to expand, the effect of which will be working against the very purpose of mobilization and national defense.

Even more disturbing is a headline in the Sunday Star newspaper which reads, "Tobin and Wilson aides struggle over manpower setup control."

The news article indicates that the struggle is between Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson and Secretary of Labor Tobin. The issue seems to be whether the Labor Department or the Office of Defense Mobilization shall coordinate in manpower policies of the military, defense production, and essential civilian programs.

The story indicates the President may have to make the decision. Secretary Tobin evidently is trying to grab this power and it is indicated that he has taken his case to the President.

Mr. Speaker, it appears that Director Charles E. Wilson who is supported by his chief assistant, General Clay, both feel that the manpower problem should be handled under the direction of Mr. Wilson.

It is reported that Secretary Tobin and Anna Rosenberg, as is to be expected, feel that Secretary of Labor Tobin should have such control. This has a distinct political taint.

Gen. Lucius D. Clay, who rendered great service during World War II in this particular field, and who showed his great ability as military governor over Germany, who directed the airlift to Berlin winning the cold war, is leading the argument in favor of the Office of Defense Mobilization Director Wilson.

When the President selected Mr. Wilson to this most important job in America, second only to the office of the President, in this emergency, in the order creating the Office of Defense Mobilization the President gave Mr. Wilson authority over manpower as well as policy control on all other phases of the giant mobilization program, including defense production and economic stabilization.

Mr. Wilson was said to feel he must have such control to do an effective job.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Wilson in whom the people of the Nation have confidence, if he feels he should have control of manpower, that the President will back him and see that he gets it.

The record of Secretary of Labor Tobin has nothing in it so far that would justify the confidence of the American people or the Congress to a point anywhere near approaching his selection for this job as Director of the Office of Defense over Mobilization, Charles E. Wilson.

Let us keep demoralizing, wasteful political scheming out of national defense. The gamble now is too great. We cannot afford such a useless destructive luxury.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER], a few moments ago in his speech, called attention to one of the great crimes of our times which is the way Britain and other Western European nations, who are supposed to be our allies, are carrying on a trade in war goods with the enemy, Russia, China, and their allies.

The gentleman from Michigan in his speech called attention to a recent shipment from England to Russia of a shipload of rubber, valued at $10,000,000.

I would like to add that in 1949, Britain, France, and Belgium sold Russia and her satellites more than $200,000,000 of such war goods as iron, steel, copper, lead, zinc, tin, rubber, automobile trucks, machine tools, ball bearings, and barbwire. This trade still continues.

Where did Russia get the money to pay for these purchases of war goods which she purchased from our allies? Why, some of that money she got from the United States.

In the first 10 months of 1950, January through October, the United States purchased $36,257,431 in goods—mostly luxuries like furs and canned crab—from Russia according to figures I obtained from the United States Department of Commerce. During those same 10 morths we sold Russia only $563,396 of American goods.

In other words, by this unholy trade with the enemy we have been supplying Russia with more than $3,500,000 of cash a month which Russia has used to buy war goods in England, France, Belgium, and other Western European nations.

We ought to insist that our western European allies stop their unholy trading in war supplies with the enemy. We cannot do that effectively, however, until we stop trading with the enemy ourselves, for we cannot very well demand that our European allies stop trading with the enemy when we ourselves are trading with that enemy.

I am hopeful that the Secretary of the Treasury's order of last week closing American ports to the slave-labor-produced canned crab of Russia is the beginning of a turning point in our foreign policy under which we have permitted Americans to trade with the enemy and thereby encouraged our Western European allies to carry on trade with these enemies.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES AMONG THE STATES

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was on objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to exclude aliens in counting the whole number of persons in each State for apportionment of Representatives among the several States. In the interest of equal representation and fairness to our citizens this is a matter which should receive the prompt attention of the Congress.

Article I, section 2, of the Constitution provides that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, excluding Indians, three-fifths of all other persons. The term "other persons" refers to slaves who, of course, were not citizens, and the question of counting slaves was thoroughly discussed in the Constitutional Convention and in the Continental Congress. The problem of aliens was almost negligible and not considered at that time.

Today, the question of slaves does not exist, whereas, the matter of aliens has grown out of all proportions.

The Constitution further provides that the number of Representatives shall not exceed 1 for every 30,000. Let us consider for a moment the result of apportioning Representatives at the rate of 1 for every 30,000 throughout the United States if aliens are to be included in that number. Upon the reapportionment made after the 1940 census a number of States lost Representatives in Congress and other States having alien populations were given additional Representatives because of the large increase in alien population of some States. At that time there were about 5,000,000 aliens who had never become naturalized American citizens in the United States. The taking of 17 or 18 Representatives from States with few aliens and giving them to those States with many aliens was manifestly unfair to the great bulk of patriotic American citizens.

Under the present apportionment, the 435 Members of the House represent more than 300,000 persons each. A State with 600,000 aliens is entitled to two additional Representatives. The last three apportionments resulted in taking twenty-odd Congressmen from 21 rural States and giving them chiefly to a few large cities. Obviously, each Representative in those rural States now has more citizen-constituents to represent than the Representatives in the urban States. As a result, there exists a great disparity in the number of persons represented by each Member throughout the United States in rural and urban districts.

Since the problem of the unnaturalized alien inhabitants of the United States, which did not exist at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, has grown so acute, it is time that this phase of the Constitution be brought into conformity with modern conditions. On what basis can we justify the exclusion of Indians from whom we procured this great land and at the same time include unnaturalized aliens who do not care enough about this haven they have found to dignify it by accepting responsibilities of citizenship?

I was surprised to learn that the State of New York for more than a century has had a constitutional provision excluding aliens from a count of the State population for representation in the legislature. That forthright attitude which has not been challenged in that State reflects an intelligent understanding of the philosophy of representative government which should be carried over into the Federal Government to do away with the present inequities.

I urge the Members to support this joint resolution with the view of submitting it to the States at the earliest moment.

SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, on last Thursday consent was granted me to address the House tomorrow. The calendar shows me as having been granted permission to address the House today. I ask unanimous consent that that be canceled and that I may be allowed to address the House on tomorrow, as I originally requested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS MEMORIAL ARBOR

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a measure in the House that provides for a Christopher Columbus Memorial Arbor in the District of Columbia in honor of the gallant Americans who during World War II gave their lives on Italian soil for the cause of freedom. It is fitting that the memorial should bear the name of the great Italian discoverer whose courage and determination made possible the birth of a new world and new and greater freedoms.

The memorial will consist of 52 trees and 52 bronze plaques each inscribed with the name of one of the 48 States, the District of Columbia, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. All the trees, landscaping, and plaques are to be donated by private citizens without any cost to the United States Government through the Citizens Committee for a Christopher Columbus Memorial Arbor. It is my understanding that the trees may be made available as a gift from the Italian Government as an expression of the friendship happily existing between the two nations. The memorial is to be established on a suitable site in the Federal park service in the District of Columbia.

This laudable project is sponsored by the Citizens Committee for a Christopher Columbus Memorial Arbor composed of a group of American citizens of Italian descent. Mr. Anthony Ruffalo is national chairman of the committee, and the honorary chairman is the Honorable Vincent R. Impellitteri, mayor of New York City. The Honorable Thomas D'Alessandro, mayor of Baltimore, and other distinguished citizens are sponsors of the project. The governors of a number of the States have given their unqualified endorsement to the movement.

I am proud to have even a small part in establishing the Christopher Columbus Memorial Arbor as a living tribute to the illustrious explorer and to the members of the Armed Forces of the United States who made the supreme sacrifice in Italy in World War II. I am sure this project will meet with the approval of the people of our country, and I urge my colleagues' support of this legislation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOYKIN (at the request of Mr. BATTLE) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. DEANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include editorials.

Mr. EVINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in four instances, in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. BUFFETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter, notwithstanding that in one instance the article exceeds the limit and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $205.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include an editorial in each.

Mr. HESELTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. ALLEN of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. PHILLIPS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds the limit and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $220.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 30 minutes.

OUR FOREIGN POLICY HAS FAILED

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, for more than 100 years our Government built a reservoir of good will; we had friends everywhere. Yet at this critical hour we seem to stand alone. In Europe and in Asia our motives are questioned and there is a complete lack of confidence.

If we will take the time to review the history of the past 20 years of our foreign policies under the New Deal administrations, the reason for the suspicion of our motives will be obvious. The moral basis for a sound foreign policy has given way to expediency; it has been the practice to temporize with principle; a double-standard of conduct has prevailed, it was one standard in Asia and another in Europe. So people everywhere have lost confidence in a leadership which has failed to be consistent. How can this administration expect unity now? Our own people are demanding a change.

Where has our policy failed? Let me review some events that have led to the present debacle. At Cairo in 1943 we promised China that all of the territory seized by Japan would be returned. This included Manchuria, Formosa, the Sakhalin and Kurile Islands. At Tehran, in 1944, we double-crossed China by making a secret deal with Stalin about Manchuria and the islands I have mentioned. Not until the end of the war did China learn of this double-deal. No oriental will trust us today, for we not only put over a sneak deal with the Soviets but in 1946 Truman and Marshall placed an embargo on military assistance to the Nationalist Government which led to its downfall. This is the period when the State Department was following the Lattimore policy of letting the dust settle on China; this is the time when we were being told that the Chinese Communists were not Soviet controlled; they were merely "agrarian reformers." China fell and with it 400,000,000 friends. Never again will they trust us.

It was at Yalta, too, Mr. Speaker, that we gave Stalin a blank check to dominate Europe as he saw fit. We agreed to the occupation of Poland by Russia upon the flimsy promise that the Polish people would be afforded a plebiscite to determine its form of government. No free elections have ever been held and the liberty-loving Polish people are today enslaved by the Communists with our help. Here we lost the friendship of the Poles.

It was at Yalta that we double-crossed Mihailovich, that great Yugoslavian patriot, who fought off the Germans for 3 years. We embraced Tito, the Communist, and sent Mihailovich to the gallows. Today no more vicious tryant rules his people than Tito, but he is now "our boy." Do you think we have any friends in Yugoslavia? Have we helped the cause of freedom there?

It was at Yalta and confirmed by Truman at Potsdam that we agreed to the occupation of Germany and permitted Stalin to ring the city of Berlin with Russian troops so that there was no way for our troops to get in or out of the city. This incident was the most stupid blunder, next to Korea, that our diplomats and soldiers have ever made. Both Eisenhower and Marshall were there.

Our foreign policy was fumbled again when we insisted upon unconditional surrender of Germany and Japan. It was Morgenthau who decided that Germany should henceforth be a cow pasture. Then a kangaroo court was established at Nurenberg. Should we not bow our heads when we recall that travesty on justice? We have joined in a precedent that can subject our civil and military men to the same kind of treatment. God help MacArthur if the Chinese Communists or the Russians ever capture him. Already he is branded as a war criminal, as is President Truman.

Is it not a paradox, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding our shameful treatment of the Germans that we are at this moment begging them to join us now in a life-and-death struggle against Stalin. Ironically, it was Hitler who predicted that we would be in this fix if we succeeded in defeating the German armies. I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Morgenthau head a delegation seeking support of the Germans to our cause. Friends? We do not have many in Germany. Maybe the State Department planned it that way.

And while I am speaking of friends, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering where our friends are who have been associated with us in the United Nations. A simple resolution is pending before that organization condemning the Chinese Reds as aggressors, nothing more, and suddenly we seem to be standing alone. This is the organization that was to bring peace to the world. Its basic concept was collective security, an organization that would prevent aggressor nations from breaching the peace. In this field it has a near-zero rating. Its appointed commissions have met with contempt in Yugoslavia and Korea and the Middle East. Yet on June 26, 1950, the United Nations asked that we send American boys to fight and die in Korea and they are still fighting and dying there. What nerve they have to ask our sons to die when they refuse to approve the most innocuous kind of action—a resolution of condemnation only.

Mr. Speaker, these fair-weather friends have left us; the principle of collective security has failed. The American people are incensed and they are insisting that we sever our relationship with the United Nations.

In the heart of New York City on the banks of the Hudson River a 40-story building has been erected to house the United Nations. We advanced the money to build it. Now even before occupation, it is destined to remind the American people of their folly in thinking that their friends believed in collective security when commercial and colonial interests got in the way.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress should refuse to appropriate one more dollar in support of the UN except one, a nominal appropriation for the purchase of a "For Sale" sign to be nailed on the building. Billions and billions of dollars have been spent by Democratic administrations to buy friends but we have nothing to show for it today. Have we been suckers or bleary-eyed idealists?

Mr. Speaker, the UN organization is close to us and the American people can easily see as one writer has well said that it consists of two hostile camps, one held together by the American dollar, the other the fear of the Soviet Army. It is obvious that neither law, morality, nor ideology is a cementing influence. It seems reasonable to assume that if the American dollar is withdrawn the West will break up and its members will be seen entering new alinements dictated by expediency. Is it true that the high moral purpose written into the Charter of the UN is but a fairy tale as has been charged? As we see the UN today there is every reason to believe that this Organization is incapable of giving the world peace. Many people will deny that this is true and they will continue to have abiding faith in it. The answer may come in the next few days.

Yet those who have been leading us through all these tragic events are again about to take us into another global war and they will find excuses for getting us into one. We are already in with both feet in Korea. This, however, is a private, unauthorized war, as yet. In view of successive failures there is no will or enthusiasm for national unity. I repeat again, there can be no unity behind policies that have failed.

It is not pleasant to talk about our mistakes, Mr. Speaker, but it does serve the purpose of putting us on guard against the same kind of mistakes in the future. We cannot again accept policies that will lead to another global war. Another such war will destroy every vestige of liberty and freedom in this country. It must not happen on the pretext that we are trying to stop communism. Now is the time to stop, look, and listen.

Mr. Speaker, as we look around and try to find friends in a world that seems to be against us I would like to suggest that there is a vital area in this world where people are anxious to be our friends. They do not ask for American dollars. Mr. Speaker, this may sound rather strange but actually all they ask is our sympathetic interest and support in a cause that was the same as our own in 1776. I refer to the countries of the Near East comprising 200,000,000 people, who now demand that years of colonialism come to an end and that they have the absolute right to control their own affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the State Department and our Military Establishment are fully aware of the importance of this Near East area to our own security. Here are 200,000,000 people who want to be our friends and it will cost us no dollars. Here are great natural resources of oil—60 percent of the world's oil reserves—together with rich deposits of phosphate, magnesium, and potash.

I have heard military men testify that this area is of great strategic importance to the United States in our effort to arrest the spread of communism. It is centrally located where Europe, Asia, and Africa meet and for centuries it has been the meeting place between the east and the west. Since the Bolsheviks took over the Russian Government in 1917, they have been trying to get a foothold in this part of the world. In this mechanical age if they are to operate their planes and tanks they need large oil reserves. They are not very far from this 60-percent deposit in the Near East and there is little doubt that they have plans to move in by force, if it is necessary. Latest reports are to the effect that great unrest prevails because of an Arab refugee problem, social conditions, and uncertainty in the political situation.

Mr. Speaker, when attention is called to these conditions the State Department is ready with the excuse that it is our policy to refrain from participation or interference in the internal affairs of another nation and I think this is sound policy, but we did not hesitate to do so in the Philippines and Cuba. It is well known that we exercised great influence in Indonesia, India, and other places where we thought the peace of the world was involved. In the Near East, communism can very easily propagandize the discontented elements into seeking an overthrow of present governments. Colonialism in this area should cease and with it would come stability and a perfect barrier to the spread of communism.

I did not realize it, Mr. Speaker, but British troops are stationed in Iraq and Jordan, against the will of the people. They have also occupied important port cities in Egypt since 1882, notwithstanding lofty declarations of intentions in two world wars and the present charter of the United Nations. The Suez Canal is occupied by the British as is the Sudan, the latter by military force.

Mr. Speaker, American soldiers who were stationed in North Africa in the last war can tell us about colonialism in Algeria, Tunisia, and Morocco. Here 30,000,000 people are suppressed by the French and denied the right of self-determination, a right which we guaranteed in the last war. Have we forgotten that promise? Are we immune to the plea of human beings who insist that they be granted their inalienable rights, as we do?

I have already alluded to the campaign by the Soviet to gain control of the Near East. At this moment they are appealing to the discontented people who are easy victims of their lying, but we must admit a certain vulnerability. Russia is actively exploiting its economic and political weakness. Especially gullible are the Palestinian refugees. Propaganda barrages are laid down every day. The ultimate Soviet aim is to spread communism, seek an outlet to the warm waters of the Mediterranean and chiefly to gain control of the rich oil fields that contain 60 percent of the world's supply. We are on notice, Mr. Speaker, of just what our enemy is doing in this vital area and we cannot sit idly by. The British and French must be aware of this situation and our Government should be in consultation with them in an effort to solve the problem. The United States must assume leadership and initiate a realistic policy in our own selfish interest.

Mr. Speaker, a program of self-interest in the Near East does not call for men or money. As we consider the drift of our foreign policy since 1945, we know that it has been geared principally to the spending of dollars and the giving of our material resources. It has been a wasteful policy and with precious little to show for this sacrifice. We cannot say that our chief concern is Asia or Western Europe. I submit that the Near East is just as important. We must direct our efforts toward the further prevention of the spread of communism in this area that stretches east from the Atlantic to India. Here is a great reservoir of 200,000,000 people who want our friendship and invite our leadership and at no cost in money, material, or men. We cannot afford to wait; time is running out. If President Truman and the State Department are really serious and sincere in their statements to stop the spread of communism, they can do it here at no cost to the American taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, what kind of America is ahead for us? The people are asking that question—mothers and fathers, young men and women who are in colleges and universities, others who are in business and industries. The present situation is terrifying.

We look back to the days before Pearl Harbor. Remember peacetime conscription, the stepping up of the industrial machine? The cry was "We must prepare for peace." That is the slogan today. Then came Pearl Harbor and 5 years of bloody war finished off with the atom bomb. I agree with one writer who said just a few days ago that war is here again. Korea is just the prelude to the global contest that will surely follow. The tinder box has been prepared; the match is lit.

During war, Mr. Speaker, normal life is suspended; hope, aspirations, dreams give way to the demand for material survival. Social power abdicates in favor of state power, and the identity of the individual is lost.

War does not go on forever, Mr. Speaker, and when it is over, what will then be the American way of life? That is the question the true patriot will keep asking, ever over the din of war. He will propound it day in and day out, not in the expectation that it will be answered but with the prayerful hope that its reiteration will keep alive the concept of human dignity, the very basis of the idea of freedom.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. VURSELL. I notice the gentleman calls attention to the importance of the oil fields in Iraq and Iran. Also, we have had called to our attention the importance of keeping the Ruhr out of the hands of the Moscow-Kremlin crowd. Does it not occur to the gentleman that we cannot fight ground wars, all types of wars, all over the world, but that we probably should specialize on air power and, having built up our air power, might it not be well to serve notice on the Kremlin that the next move they make we shall declare war on them and, not through land armies, but through air power, try to devastate those things that make war possible, the great industries, the industrial heart of Russia? I should like to have the gentleman's thought on that.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I agree with the gentleman that we cannot match Russia's armies on the ground. The free world just does not have enough men to do that at the present time. That is the reason I am so much concerned about this 60 percent of oil reserves which are in the Near East, which are actually in the hands of Russia today, if they ever start to move. So far as we are concerned, I think this next war will be an air war or a naval war and we must have oil if we are to sustain those two branches of the military.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I commend the gentleman for his very thoughtful and very clear exposition of the fallacies and mistakes which have led us to where we are today. Does not the gentleman think it might be well if we could persuade, because I realize we cannot force, the United Nations to move out of the United States and to move into a neutral country where their deliberations could be carried on in a more suitable atmosphere? We know the world today is divided into two camps, one led by the United States and one by the Soviet Union. It seems to me if the United Nations is to perform a useful service, it should be away in a neutral country, such as Switzerland perhaps, where it would be out of the fight which is going on here internally; because after all we realize there is turmoil in our own country at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I am willing to subscribe to the statement made by the gentlewoman. I think it is a very important observation, because we know today the United Nations organization is at the mercy of a big-city press. It is at the mercy of politicians who want to use it for their own selfish purposes. I think if the United Nations organization would move out of New York and move out of Lake Success, or wherever they are established, and return to the old League of Nations Building, there they could operate in a better atmosphere.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. And that fine building on the Hudson River could be made into a hospital or used for some other humanitarian purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I agree with the gentlewoman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a comment along that same line?

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Just a few days ago, and after the gentleman spoke, or I think the same day—I know it was the same day—a suggestion was made here on the floor that we might better get out of the United Nations. Then a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House suggested to me that what the gentleman suggests is all wrong, because inasmuch as there were some 4,000 or 4,500 individuals in this organization in New York, and since many of them were spies, and some of them who represented this country were traitors, or might be so classed, we should keep them here where we could control them. To me that seems to be the silliest proposition, and the most absurd suggestion that could be made, because if they are traitors, what do we want them around here for? Why not kick them out and let them go? They are no good to us. They just get us into trouble. They cannot back us up after they have gotten us into the situation which is making so much trouble for us in this war. What do you think of that? Have you any thought, or do you care to express a thought about whether or not we should stay in the United Nations?

I have noticed that while the gentleman is making a very constructive statement, as he did before, on several occasions the other members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, after the gentleman really gets started, go out. They will not listen to you here. Do they listen to you at all in committee?

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Not much. But that is all right with me because I have to live with my conscience and that's what counts.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I know that it would be. Maybe they do not want to be converted.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. SADLAK. I thoroughly enjoyed the gentleman's remarks because I know that he puts in a great deal of time and effort, is very conscientious, thorough and he is a scholar of the House.

On yesterday I had the opportunity to see a movie in a local moving picture house entitled, "Why Korea?" It appears to me that it is somewhat an answer to what the gentleman has been saying this afternoon. To me it appears as a defense and justification of the reason why we have gone into Korea. I had interpreted the film as an unlabeled propaganda picture for the administration. I would like to suggest to the gentleman, if he can find time among his labors, that he should see that picture and then give the House the benefit of his reaction to "Why Korea?"

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Where is it playing?

Mr. SADLAK. At the Palace Theater.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. VURSELL. Would the gentleman like to comment on the fact that the 31 patriotic organizations of women, representing 3,000,000 people, in their resolution narrowly escaped demanding that we get out of the United Nations completely, which is an indication that the American people would welcome their moving from New York to a more neutral zone, as suggested by the lady from New York [Mrs. ST. GEORGE], rather than to furnish the Soviets a sounding board for their nefarious propaganda over here. I think that is rather important.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I think it is important, also, but I think it is also evident that the American people are giving this matter very serious consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, these are the most serious days that have faced our Nation since its beginnings. To gird our defenses, to mobilize our potential while developing our resources is the monumental task facing everyone of us. We can expect that this crisis besetting the world will touch all of our lives.

The responsibilities placed upon the Congress to safeguard our Republic have imposed grave burdens on the membership of the Congress. Many problems will have to be resolved in order that maximum utilization of men and materials may be had. About 4 months ago the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments assigned its Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations—of which I have the honor to be the chairman—studies and surveys which I should like to bring to your attention at this time.

The Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations gave its attention to the following Federal programs: (a) disposals of surplus property; (b) the Federal cataloging program; (c) the medical activities cataloging, and (d) utilization of warehousing. Before discussing these various programs and the work of the subcommittee in connection with them, perhaps it would be well to outline the methods employed by the subcommittee in gathering its data. Through the cooperation of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and the Comptroller General of the United States, key personnel was made available to work with our subcommittee staff for assistance in the evaluation of the information developed. In addition, the Defense Department, the General Services Administration, and other agencies concerned, have been most helpful in aiding the subcommittee.

During the many meetings and hearings conducted by the subcommittee it became very apparent that with the present increased emphasis on defense activity our inquiry would be most productive if directed to those quarters. The subcommittee determined that studies and field surveys in military posts in the Southeast, New England, Midwest- and west-coast areas would be centered in the heaviest defense concentrations, thus providing a representative cross-section. As the Eighty-second Congress embarks on its legislative duties I can now report that the first segment of our field staff surveys have been completed. Our investigators detailed from the General Accounting Office, have spent a minimum of 10 days at the Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, N. C.; Camp Lejeune, N. C.; Robins Air Force Base, Macon, Ga.; Atlanta General Depot, United States Army, Atlanta, Ga.; Pope Air Force Base and Fort Bragg, N. C. There they analyzed operations of the programs I have outlined. It is contemplated that our subcommittee will study and discuss these reports and follow that up with field visits. In this manner perspective emphasis and considered inquiry can be brought to these projects of such interest to the Congress. It will lay the groundwork for a significant report demonstrating the degree of conformity between policy and operational levels.

SURPLUS PROPERTY DISPOSALS

I know the membership of the House is very aware of problems involved in the Federal surplus property disposal programs.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

In the period following World War II, a vast amount of war-generated surplus of the Federal Government was on hand. Many items of use to the Federal Government had been produced at the cost of denial to the civilian consumption. With the cessation of hostilities great pressure was brought to bear upon the Government and the Congress to release this property, no longer of use to the Government, in order that it might be employed by private industry and individuals.

In the transition from wartime to civilian economy, a period for retooling was necessary. When to this the need to maintain maximum employment during this juncture was presented, the case for surplus-property disposal is made abundantly clear. Such demands from all sides together with the factor of a rapid national demobilization, brought about the huge disposals of war surplus by the War Assets Administration. Gradually the war-generated surplus was, in this fashion, disposed of by the Federal Government. Under the circumstances existing at the time these disposals were generally valid, since they conserved maintenance and warehousing expense, while also making available to private industry much material not available then in the civilian economy. Although by and large, this program administered under great difficulties, was carried out with direction and dispatch, there were brought to light some instances of matters prejudicial to the interests of the Federal Government. It is the intention of our subcommittee that in regard to these matters every appropriate inquiry should be had. Taking a lesson from the past, it is our further hope also to be able to recommend to the Congress remedial steps—steps which will establish more efficient and economical administration of disposal programs arising inevitably out of the present defense effort, while effectively forestalling repetition of any incidents inimical to Federal interests. The surplus disposals on the advent of the Korean war were geared at the policy level toward disposition of obsolete, salvage, and scrap material. This is the normal generation accruing from governmental operations and is quite to be expected. However, at the field level the subcommittee has found some deviations from standards set for determination of what is obsolete, salvage, or scrap. In justice to the Defense Department, and other agencies concerned, it must be stated that after June 25, 1950, a screening order was instituted which pruned material and equipment which could now be usefully employed by the Government in the strengthening of our defense, based on the change in circumstances. Field observations have indicated to the subcommittee membership that a thorough examination of the surplus donations to educational and health institutions should be in order, as well as some of the activities of the State educational agencies for the receipt of Federal surplus property. It is the intention of the subcommittee to examine this problem and make suitable recommendations to the Congress.

More attention must be given surplus property in the future than has been in the past.

More attention must be given to the program of surplus property that will accrue and will be gathered together as the result of a great national defense program that is now necessarily being brought into effect and being enlarged, which is causing and will cause in the future sacrifices from the civilian population of America.

To say that the program has not miscarried at all would be incorrect. There are many instances where the program has come close to being a question for the Department of Justice to investigate. I refer to these fly-by-night veterans' schools—schools that have made a business of receiving and selling war surplus property. State organizations have been set up thinking this thing would go on forever, thinking that property usable by State institutions would be declared surplus by the Federal Government and passed down to the States.

When I first observed this I was greatly surprised and shocked that our States in the financial condition that all are would be looking to the Federal Government for something when the Federal Government needs aid from the States if it ever needed it since the organization and creation of our great Government. We have agencies in the Federal Government that are procuring property, we have agencies in the Federal Government that are declaring surplus and disposing of property. One agency wants to keep its high personnel rolling and going along and naturally it procures all it can procure. The other agency, on the other hand, has got to keep its personnel working disposing of property, giving it away, and, naturally, they are grabbing everything they can to give away and dispose of. It is one end working against the other.

There must be more economy practiced by the leaders of our national defense, and, of course, the Congress wants to give them every dollar that is necessary, but they can practice economy, and there will be, should be, and must be economy practiced by the civilian agencies of our Government. It is high time that every Member of this Congress look into that phase of our national expenditures, because millions and millions of dollars can be saved by such a course.

Next we come to the Federal cataloging program that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has given so much time to.

FEDERAL CATALOGING PROGRAM

Another program of vital interest to the Federal Government has engaged the attention of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments for some time. This is the Federal cataloging program. This project is of keystone importance for the real economies it can effect in procurement and subsequent disposal phases. Despite apparent misinformation, there is an agency for Federal cataloging. This organization is known as the Munitions Board Cataloging Agency. Very often in press comment and public discussions, the yeoman task assigned this body is not adequately emphasized. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments placed on the statute books Public Law 152—the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949. This legislation calls for closest coordination of civilian and military effort, to the end that the Munitions Board Cataloging Agency continue its titanic task.

The Munitions Board Cataloging Agency early in 1947 undertook this landmark program to produce a single Federal catalog for items used by the Government. Briefly, this would mean that an item would bear the same identification mark, designation and name in procurement by all governmental agencies. Recently on this floor the gentleman from Indiana, Congressman RALPH HARVEY, a distinguished former member of our subcommittee, brought out the fact that one single item procured by the Federal Government was known by over a thousand different designations or names with resultant confusion in stocking this commodity.

Mr. Speaker, in my time around the Capitol and as a Member of Congress, I have never known of a more conscientious man than the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARVEY]. I have never had the pleasure of serving with a gentleman whom I enjoyed being with any more. He is a splendid Member of this House, and I regret exceedingly that it was his desire to change and leave the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, because the splendid service he has rendered to that committee will be greatly missed.

When to this is added the uncertainty of identification and value when declared surplus, the magnitude of the problem is laid bare. Of the 2,500,000 items in use by the Government and eligible for cataloging, this agency has completed approximately 1,150,000 items. In a comparatively short time the rewards of this far-reaching project will be available to the entire Government with tremendous savings. One further thought should be borne in mind: fullest utilization of this cataloging will call for constant implementing and deletion of items as Government needs and requirements alter through the years.

The Munitions Board cataloging agency has not performed its work in the dark; a most valuable report has been filed with the Congress, and I recommend its earnest consideration by the membership for a thoroughgoing understanding of cataloging efforts.

In view of studies of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and the additional appropriations made available during the fiscal year, the Munitions Board cataloging agency may have the single Federal catalog available before the close of 1951. The war crisis we are passing through will have a great impact on the goals in this task and the membership should support and maintain this cataloging program on its merits; its self-evident possibilities are manifold. In this respect also our subcommittee was enabled to visit the naval center at Mechanicsburg for an evaluation of several phases of this cataloging program. They were impressed with the need and urgency for such a single Federal catalog. They affirmed the present approach as well-founded and capably executed. In our projected field surveys it will be the plan of the subcommittee to bring home to the operations in the field the need that exists for this cataloging and the interest displayed by the Congress, and also to stress that Federal Government activities should be utilized in these quarters so that joint procurement, cross-servicing, and optimum coordination can be had between the Defense Department and other agencies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are several other special orders.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I have the next special order, I think of 10 minutes. Would it be in order for me to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina 5 minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be all right.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield him 5 minutes, then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for five additional minutes.

There was no objection.

MEDICAL CATALOGING PHASE

Mr. BONNER. I have mentioned in the beginning of my discussion here today that we are making an excursion into the medical phase of the cataloging program. I should like to take a moment to explain the purpose of this inquiry. The Federal cataloging program is being undertaken in segments. The portion dealing with cataloging of medical supplies has been realized. There are approximately 6,000 medical items included in this endeavor. It was the thinking of the committee members that it would be well in the consideration of the entire Federal cataloging program to focus attention on this now vitalized segment. In this way they would have a projected view of the possibilities inherent, in addition to the opportunities presented for fullest utilization. Appreciation by the agencies of the significance attached by the Congress to this vast undertaking could also be had. Many avenues of inquiry are available now to our Members based on our investigative surveys, and it is our intention to fully explore them during the present session.

For instance, medical supplies are procured jointly for the armed services, yet when delivered, are stored at the various service supply locations. The possibility of centralization of distribution as well as procurement should be given close analysis. The cross-servicing or exchanging of materials among the armed services or the executive agencies in a given area should also receive every encouragement.

WAREHOUSING

The field surveys, investigative data, and studies of the subcommittee early disclosed that warehousing was very directly related to the foregoing areas of interest. During World War II appropriate and adequate storage space was a serious problem. Our present situation has again revealed a need for a study in this most important function. The conserving of our equipment and matériel through proper storage takes its place alongside the elements of procurement and utilization. The declarations of surplus property, the retention of property excess to the needs of the Government, the stocking of repetitious inventories all have a bearing on the utilization of warehousing. It is in this guise that the subcommittee will determine the degree of use to which warehousing is being assigned in the activities under study.

I have sought to bring to your attention these very important and challenging projects of the Federal Government. Their direction, approach, and utilization can compensate in economy and efficiency, and can be translated into a reduction of expenditures now during a time when we must analyze well our needs and requirements. During the Eighty-first Congress another subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD, of California, is chairman, made a number of interesting studies in these very fields. Its hearings have afforded the committee and the House membership an intimacy of knowledge with these projects. With the joint interest displayed by our subcommittees and the approbation of the full committee under Chairman WILLIAM L. DAWSON, the membership of the House can be assured of a close supervision of this entire program.

Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to serve under many committee chairmen since becoming a Member of Congress, and I was privileged to know many committee chairmen prior to that time. May I say that I have never seen a Member of this House more conscientious in his duties, more desirous of keeping harmony in his committee, and more interested in the personnel of his committee, than the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the Honorable WILLIAM L. DAWSON. He has made a splendid chairman.

He has made a splendid chairman. In just desert, I want to say a word in respect to the ranking minority member of the committee, who has displayed a most cooperative spirit. Oh, yes, some of us joke and laugh about our good friend from Michigan sometimes. I think of him like a fellow down in my home country told me about his dog. "Why," he said, "his bark is worse than his bite."

I get to rowing with my good friend from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] and after it is all over, why he is just as good a fellow as anybody in the world, and he will say, "Why, go ahead."

So it has been a pleasure to serve on this committee under the leadership of the chairman, and the assistant leadership of the ranking minority member. I hope he will stay in the Congress a long time, to give us his able cooperation in this and other things that will come before the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONNER. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I expected you to say something of that kind, and that is why I wanted you to have the 5 minutes so that you would have time to say it. I would like to say something about that dog business.

Mr. BONNER. I was very disappointed when my time ran out, for fear that I would not have the time to say what you are so justly entitled to have said about you.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You just keep right on going. I have another 5 minutes, which you can have.

But here is what I want to suggest to you. I recall very distinctly one time speaking at a political meeting, when some fellow back in the crowd said, "Don't you know you are nothing but a yellow dog?"

And the chairman of that meeting got up and said, "Well, even so, he is our yellow dog and don't you start kicking him around."

So, as long as the people of my district elect me to represent them, why, it is all right.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, in addition to mentioning the delightful gentleman from Michigan, who has been so generous in letting me have some of his time, I want to place another name in this RECORD, the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Rich, who served on my subcommittee. There was never a more conscientious man in this House, and there was never a man whom I have served with who fought more seriously and fairly and squarely or impartially about the matters under consideration than Mr. Rich. I regret very much that he has left the Congress.

Our subcommittee while directing its attention to the scrutiny of the agencies concerned is rather primarily pointing its way to the encouragement, based on merits, of these worthwhile projects so as to acquaint the House membership with the work being done as well as to bring to light any need for beneficial legislation which may be developed as a result of the subcommittee's studies. The membership of our subcommittee and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is to be complimented on the keen interest and industry displayed, and the worthwhile contributions made during the course of the surveys.

It is a pleasure to assure the House membership that the reports which our committee will bring to them on these problems will prove of inestimable aid to the deliberations of the Congress.

CONSUMERS' DOLLARS PURCHASE POLITICAL SUPPORT

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, everyone who thinks knows that when dollars outnumber commodities, prices go up.

My first factory job was $3 for six 10-hour days. After being granted a bachelor of laws degree at Northwestern University, taking a shorthand and typewriting course, my first job in a law office was at $6 for a 9-hour-6-day week.

Tough? Not at all. Beef steak, 10 cents a pound; eggs 6 cents a dozen. Other prices comparatively the same. That meant a dollar gave me 16.1 dozen eggs. Today I pay 75 cents for one dozen. Then I got 10 pounds of meat for a dollar. Today a dollar will not buy a pound of round steak. Why? Because now there is less meat, fewer eggs, more dollars. Then there was more of each than there were dollars. It was just that simple.

More recently, say since 1933, the Federal Government has been pumping dollars into circulation at a rapid rate. Production has not kept pace. The cows—beef factory—and the eggs—egg plant—have lost out in competition with the New Deal dollar factory. Many of the dollars the administration has been spending were collected from you by taxation. You know about that. You will know more about still higher taxes soon.

Other dollars, and you did not know too much about that, were borrowed. As interest on those borrowed dollars falls due, you will learn about that.

Having spent so many dollars that prices have gone so high few of us can meet them, the administration is now forced to attempt to stabilize prices by controls.

The administration has finally been forced to admit that if prices are to be stabilized, wages must be controlled. But, even though it has long been aware of that basic truth, Mr. Truman and his political advisers have been giving the go sign to the labor leaders who are his political supporters to increase wages. So it was that months ago Philip Murray's steel workers received a wage increase, steel industry received a price hike thus adding to the price of the knife you would use to cut your steak, if you had a steak. Reuther's UAW-CIO got a wage increase, the motor industry was a little slow—caught a stabilization order. Practically all wage earners who belong to big, politically powerful unions, within the last few months have had their wage increase. All obtained while the Administration looked the other way. But prices went so high that the wage earners, white collar workers and those living on the proceeds of their investments, who received no increase, began to find it impossible to buy the things they must have if they are to eat, have a roof over their heads, sufficient clothing, and a little coal in the bin.

Now comes what is called the price and wage control order—after wages have been hiked. The sensible, honest course would have been to have controlled the price of things, the compensation for services, at some prior normal period. Or still better—but that never occurred to the New-Fair Dealers—quit wasteful, needless spending.

But that would not have bought votes nor the labor leaders support. They wanted higher wages for the services they sold, lower prices for the things they bought—an almost universal desire of all of us. Same idea as the Brannan plan which Mr. Truman is still plugging. High prices for the farmer—low prices for the consumer.

But the Truman political machine, to purchase the labor vote, encouraged high wages, now has slapped price control on a few items, a limited synthetic price control on wages—after the horse has left the barn. That is the way it is. That is why we have price control now, not earlier. The consumer, as he makes a purchase, will help pay for Mr. Truman's vote-buying, will be paying the recent increase in wages which have been passed along to him in everything he buys. It is a slick maneuver if Mr. Truman can get away with it.

And soon will come that old ration book—the black market and a few hundred thousand snoopers on the Federal pay roll. But do not kick—you have Mr. Truman, the New Deal, and world war III. How much can you take?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

CONDITIONS AT LACKLAND AIR FORCE BASE

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time because in the last few days there have been a number of reports in magazines and newspapers as to conditions existing among the recruits at Lackland Air Force Base. There have been some statements issued by Members of the other body with reference to it, and the statement has been made that an investigation will be held by the Senate Committee on Armed Services. I think the matter is one in which the true facts should be known and known immediately, because of the effect these stories are having on the morale of the men in the camp as well as those who are scheduled to go there and the parents of those boys. I am sure you have all read the stories of the prevalence of pneumonia, even suicides and things of that sort, at Lackland Air Force Base. The Lackland Air Force Base happens to be in my district. I have been acquainted with its functions from its very beginning, and have been in day-to-day contact. Yesterday I had a number of conversations with officers and officials of the Air Force, and I had a long telephone conversation with the commanding general at Lackland. I do not say that the situation existing there is ideal. Certainly it is not.

Here is the truthful situation as it now exists. The Lackland Air Force Base has barracks for 28,000 men. At one time, during December and January, because of the great influx of recruits into the Air Force, they got up to 74,000 men at one time in that base. In a period of 11 days they received in that base 56,000 recruits. Here I say there is something definitely wrong. Someone made a serious blunder. Whether it was in the headquarters of the Army Air Force or the headquarters of the air training command, someone should have been coordinating the program so that the men did not come there in larger increments than they could take care of.

This is the only indoctrination center that the Air Force has. What we need now is to have the facts known so that the morale of our people will be righted.

Mr. Eugene Zuckert, Assistant Secretary of the Air Force, was scheduled to arrive at Lackland last night. He has asked some outstanding civilians to meet him there. They are entirely outside the Air Force. They will go over the situation and find the true facts. The Senate committee has sent investigators there. They were scheduled to arrive last night. Those of you who have served in the military service know there are certain criteria by which you can judge the efficiency and morale of any station. Here are the facts about suicides and deaths at Lackland Field. In the past 28 months there have been two deaths. Almost unbelievable. These are young, hardy men. One of those deaths was from cancer and one was the result of an injury sustained in an automobile accident.

The story has been put out that some 70 recruits per day are going AWOL. The AWOL rate at Lackland is zero. They have none. It is true that many of them are living in tents. It is something that we do not want but it is something that has happened.

Here is what has been done. Sampson Naval Base at Geneva, N. Y., has been activated by the Air Force. It will accommodate about the identical number that Lackland will accommodate. In other words, twenty-eight to thirty thousand men can be housed in barracks at Sampson. That will be opened in the spring, I think. It is in the district represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. TABER. My understanding is that they begin with the first thousand on the 1st of February, and gradually build up.

Mr. KILDAY. That will take a big load off of Lackland and will be a great relief to the situation.

In addition to whatever their primary mission may be, whether they are basic flight training or what not, stations of the Air Training Command are taking an increment of these recruits from Lackland as quickly as they can be processed through Lackland, and taken to these other bases. My whole purpose in bringing it up here today is that perhaps the press will carry it and the mothers and fathers and relatives of these boys will understand that the situation is not as bad as it has been painted.

The sickness rate at Lackland is running far below the service-wide sickness rate.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I am very happy to have this statement from the gentleman from Texas. It so happens that there were enlisted from my district the largest number whoever entered the Air Force at one time from any one community—350, according to the Rochester, N. Y., Squadron. Those boys are all down there. They have heard these rumors, and I am greatly delighted to have this assurance from the gentleman.

Mr. KILDAY. I can assure the gentleman that I have this information from Maj. Gen. Charles W. Lawrence, who is in command, and who I have known for a long time. He is the type of officer and gentleman that you and I like to see in the service. He is, of course, a strict disciplinarian dealing with recruits, but he is certainly not a martinet. I have had a number of telephone conversations with outstanding citizens in my community, and they assure me that my information is correct.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further just on that point?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. In the matter of sickness has the gentleman any figures on pneumonia?

Mr. KILDAY. There is practically none. I am talking off the cuff now, but I think my memory is correct. Throughout the service the sickness rate runs about 23 per thousand; the rate at Lackland is about 13 per thousand.

There have been no suicides, nothing of the kind has taken place there.

There have been but two deaths in 28 months.

This is a temporary situation. These men will be dispersed.

I hope what I have said will be reassuring to people who have boys at that base.

I can in all sincerity assure them that while the situation is not ideal and not what we want, conditions are steadily being improved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

DEFENSE AIR FACILITIES

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Department of National Defense is at present considering the building or enlargement of air facilities and other military construction within certain areas of our Nation. I have already heard of several instances where announcements have been made to a number of Congressmen that millions of dollars will be spent on such facilities in their districts in the immediate future. This action is being taken only a few years after the tremendous expansion of such facilities during the Second World War. The question arises in my mind as to whether or not proper attention has been given to the use of facilities which we already have and enlarging if necessary, those where the work can be done with least cost. I know the answer the military will give. But in the hope that more than a cursory examination will be made and an offhand report from the Military Establishment that such has been done accepted, I repeat here my experience in the last war. Perhaps it will cause a closer study by the Military Establishment and the committees of the Congress before huge amounts are spent.

During the last war I was a member of the subcommittee handling naval appropriations in the House of Representatives. After the war had gone on for a number of years and when the Army was curtailing some of its training program, the Navy Department came before our subcommittee requesting hundreds of millions of dollars for the construction of facilities, much of it for new airfields and aviation facilities — pages 1146 through 1148 of the hearings, fiscal 1945.

As a member of that committee I asked why they were not able to use the fields abandoned by the Army. Admiral McCain, Chief of the Bureau of Naval Aeronautics, stated that the Army had abandoned no fields. I told him that I knew of one field in my area, not in my district but in north Mississippi, that the Army had abandoned. I then asked him if they had any committee or if there was any liaison between the Army and Navy on the use of facilities, and he stated that they had such a committee throughout the war. I asked him why he did not know of this field, and he answered he did not know. I insisted that Admiral McCain talk to the Army again and after the lunch hour of the same day Admiral McCain came back to the committee with an official statement from the Army that up to that moment they had not abandoned any airfields. This, he thought, would settle the issue and he would get his money. Knowing that the Army had certainly moved out from the airfield in my section, upon receiving this notice from the War Department that they had abandoned no fields I immediately called the then Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson, on the telephone and asked if they had not abandoned some air facilities. He stated that the Army certainly had a number of vacant airfields. I demanded then that the sums be held up and that Army witnesses be brought before our committee on naval appropriations. As a result, Under Secretary of War Lovett, a fine public servant who faced the facts, came before our committee. Mind you now, the Navy was then requesting in the name of national defense hundreds of millions of dollars for new construction. When Mr. Lovett came before our committee he stated that this committee on interchange of facilities had not functioned and the type of liaison which they had was for the Navy to send a liaison officer over to discuss the possibility of a specific field and that a certain number of fields under what is called Army Cognizance had been utilized by the Navy. He further testified as follows:

More recently in the month of March, I assume as a result of these hearings, a formal letter was written to the Air Force dated March 18, 1944.

This was the letter to which the Army replied they had abandoned no fields.

In connection with this request from our Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations to the Navy to secure from the Army a statement as to what Army airfields had been abandoned, Mr. Lovett testified that—

The official Army statement that they had abandoned no fields used the word "abandoned" in a technical sense, and the statement which Admiral McCain had presented to our committee, addressed to the Navy from the Army, advising that they had abandoned no fields, while technically correct, did not mean that the Army had not vacated quite a large number of fields, since from the Army viewpoint as long as the Army had caretakers at a large number of fields the fields were not technically abandoned.

Is not that ridiculous?

Mr. Lovett then testified:

Then a second meeting of this group on the 20th of March 1944 made it clear in the light of a communication from Mr. WHITTEN that there was involved a question of Air Force facilities which might be used by the Navy if they met their particular requirements and if the Army would release them for full use.

Continuing, Mr. Lovett said:

The following day, March 21, on the receipt of Mr. WHITTEN's inquiry which put us on notice as to the basic problem as well as the difficulty caused the Navy by the necessary strings we had hoped to keep on these fields until they got out of the planning stage, we arranged a meeting among those respective officers and rather quickly by telephone to the commands and other Army units that had a prior right of user under our regulations to clear a large proportion of these fields. Therefore, on the 23d of March, these meetings having been held virtually daily, we provided the Navy with a list of fields in three categories. In the first category—that is, those facilities which can be made available unconditionally—the total is 46. In the second category—that is, those facilities for which joint use can be arranged promptly—the total is eight. In the third category we would put fields on which the right of reentry must be retained; at present the total is one. I then asked the following question: "And you and your department will be glad at any time to meet with the Navy in regard to any facilities which they may need and work out with them whether or not you possibly can make them available?"

Mr. Lovett's reply was:

Yes, sir; provided we are dealing with surplus fields and not with one of our active units.

Mr. Lovett as Assistant Secretary of War stated that at that time when the Navy was within an inch of securing hundreds of millions of dollars for new facilities, the only knowledge the Army Department had as to what the Navy needed in such facilities was contained in my letter to the Army in which I stated the Navy was requesting the sum of $225,000,000 for such construction—aviation alone. Mr. Lovett stated that there was a full coordination of military effort between the War Department and the Navy Department through the Joint Chiefs of Staff as far as fighting the war was concerned. But he stated that though the committee had been set up since the beginning of the war, the first meeting, the first coordination and interchange of facilities dated from my inquiry of March 18, 1944. All of this is contained in testimony appearing in the records of the hearings before the Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations, pages 1146 through 1148.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of this information our Committee on Appropriations withheld practically all the funds for naval expansion of air facilities and directed the Navy Department to use instead, and they did use, many of these Army facilities. When the Navy Department came before our Subcommittee on Appropriations in 1945 for the next year's appropriations, fiscal 1946, Secretary of Defense Forrestal stated that our action the year before had done a great deal of good. Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Gates, testified that as a result of our action this joint committee on facilities met weekly for many months until the liaison became so firmly established that it was agreed biweekly meetings would serve the purpose. Admiral Ben Moreell, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks testified that as a result of this committee action the Navy had used 134 facilities which had been transferred to it by the Army instead of building new ones, and that the value of these facilities was $250,000,000. This information is contained in the hearings for fiscal year 1946, pages 17 through 22. Later an additional $100,000,000 in such facilities were used.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that for me to repeat this matter now might seem to be for the purpose of pointing out how my individual efforts contributed toward bringing about savings, but my purpose in reciting these facts to the House at this itme is because here is a concrete example of where except for personal knowledge of an abandoned, which the Army called vacated, airfield in my area the Navy would have spent $350,000,000 which were saved. In our efforts to save that money it developed that the top military people in wartime had a committee on joint use of facilities which had not met for nearly 3 years of the war, and it developed that the Department of the Army was so technical that they would sign a statement for the Navy's use in getting money for new facilities that the Army had abandoned no fields because they had caretakers in charge of such field, indicating none were available for Navy use, when it was clearly apparent that we were seeking available fields which the Army called vacated.

Subsequent personal investigations which I made disclosed that there would have been further savings if the Army had been willing to release air facilities near the ocean, but because of better climate, and living quarters, the Army would only release those airfields in the interior which did not always meet the needs of the Navy or so the Navy said.

Now you may say this is all corrected by the unification of our services. That is not true. You will note from Secretary Lovett's testimony that "he arranged a meeting rather quickly by telephone to the commands and other Army units that had a prior right of user under our regulations."

Each command had its facilities and just as the Army and Navy were slow to find out what they could turn over to the other, because they might want it some day, my investigation disclosed, that within the Army each command and each unit was just as slow to release anything it had to another command or to another branch of the service. That condition exists today, not only between the Army and Navy but within the Army itself.

Mr. Speaker, certainly at this time when our Nation owes $270,000,000,000—when we are only a few years from the time that these hundreds of military facilities were constructed in our country, Mr. Symington, General Marshall, and all others in charge should see that a most thorough and exhaustive study is made of what we have before those in the Military Establishment should be announcing to Members of Congress that they are about to spend millions of dollars in the Congressman's district building military facilities. We are all for national defense, but today we find that the military too frequently does not give due weight to the impact on our financial structure of the huge amounts which they would spend, in some cases at least, without due regard to whether we can meet our military needs without such expenditures. We are fighting a war for survival but we must see to it that we do not destroy our country at home while our troops fight abroad.

I am no longer a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations which handles national-defense items, having moved on to the chairmanship of another subcommittee, but I hope that we will profit by what happened before. I hope that attention will be given to these statements and that proper action will be taken by all to prevent a reoccurrence of this situation. In 1944 I happened to hit upon this case of faulty planning. I wonder how many similar situations we were not able to find out about. How many are happening right now? Up to the present I have heard only that the Department of Defense is reactivating fields, enlarging them at several times the cost for which other fields they have could be reactivated. There should be set up a board through which all new construction should be cleared, after full study of the facilities available regardless of which branch or unit of the service might have them in hand. In fact the National Security Resources Board should make a full study of this matter and, in addition, though I know the committee will do the best it can, we should have appointed a special committee of the House of Representatives with an adequate staff to ride herd on this situation.

We must reduce domestic spending but if we are going to save real money you have to do it largely on the items where the money is spent. Though it isn't popular to say so, all of us who have dealt with the matter know that the National Defense Department is the most extravagant of all not only in spending money but in the use of civilian manpower; but you cannot afford to cut national defense without concrete proof. We should therefore have a regular staff to keep close check for all such proof. It is my opinion, based on experience, that this way we could save billions and not hurt national defense a bit.

I will not burden you with repeating in detail the circumstances of the Elk Hills Standard Oil contract with the Navy which our committee caused to be broken up, saving untold hundreds of millions, which is somewhat similar to the foregoing experience. These facts were reported to the House in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 89, part 11, page A3244, and part 12, page A5376.

Mr. Speaker, our Committee on Appropriations starts hearings right away and since I do not know when I will have the opportunity to address the House again, I would like to discuss a somewhat related matter now.

General Bradley recently testified in support of the Defense Department's bill to lower the minimum draft age from 19 to 18 and to increase the term of service from 21 to 27 months. General Bradley states that the War Department's bill is required in order to mobilize all manpower for the present emergency and for establishing a long-range military training program. I am not convinced that this action is necessary. It is tragic in this peace-loving Nation to have to call all American youth into military service, and if that be necessary they should be mature enough to have mature judgment. It is my opinion that the average boy is not mature enough to be called into active combat or overseas duty at the age General Bradley would use them. With a proper use of manpower, in my judgment, such action will not be necessary.

We are not mobilizing to that extent on the home front. Today with this emergency facing us, with the terrible war going on in Korea now, and with our military leaders advocating the drafting of all youth, we find that this Government continues the established regular workweek of only 40 hours which means 8 hours a day for 5 days a week. I know Members of Congress and their official staffs work throughout the week but today all our work on the week end must be within the office, for we cannot get anything out of the departments, with few exceptions, from about 3:30 on Friday afternoon until about 10:30 on Monday morning.

The same situation exists back home at the local offices. Today when our farmers are being called on to produce to the limit notwithstanding manpower and other shortages, agricultural offices are closed on Saturday making it necessary for the farmer to take off from his urgent work during the week to transact his business. The same is true of other Government offices. If this be an emergency is not all this ridiculous? By the 40-hour week we require more employees to do what fewer could do with a 44-hour week. If General Marshall, Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, and General Bradley sincerely wish to mobilize all manpower why do they not recommend a longer workweek, not only for Government employees but for industry as well, at straight pay—not double pay or pay and a half as though to do more than usual in these tragic times would be done by patriotic American citizens only if they received overtime pay.

If the executive department and the Congress and the military leaders really believe that we must mobilize all manpower, and certainly I believe we should mobilize civilian manpower, the first thing that should be done is to extend the normal work week from 40 to 44 hours without overtime pay and even longer if manpower continues short. The responsibility for the 40-hour week at this time must rest with the Government because the Government employees that I know, in the present emergency, when the youth of this land is being called into military service, would be more than willing to work an additional 4 hours a week. This would do much to alleviate our manpower shortage and I hope that if the Government's workweek were enlarged to that extent that it would serve as an example to industry and industrial workers.

It is a sad state of affairs to be insisting on drafting all youth at a time when the Government says that 8 hours a day, 5 days a week is all the work that is expected of civilians. If the powers that be really want to mobilize all manpower let them call on all to work; and so long as the youth of this land is in military service through the compulsion of the draft let us have a 4-hour increase in the workweek. If times are not serious enough for that it is hard to believe they are serious enough to be talking about taking all young men into the military service. If a 44-hour week is not sufficient I truly believe that the American people should extend that time to the point of meeting our manpower need. Certainly those on the home front should do this much and more to back those who carry on the fight under the terrible conditions which exist in Korea.

The Civil Service Commission ought to be working toward this end. Instead of doing something about the 40-hour week they plan to bring 300,000 new people to Washington, taking them away from work back home where they are needed. Instead of recommending an extension of the work week, the Civil Service Commission is spending its time recommending repeal of the rider which I placed on the deficiency appropriation bill last year which attempts to maintain the regular grade levels and to provide for a better use of manpower. I repeat that rider here, Public Law 843, chapter 1052:

A bill making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes

(a) In making appointments in the Government service the Civil Service Commission shall make full use of its authority to make temporary appointments in order to prevent increases in the number of permanent personnel and no employee in the Federal Civil Service promoted, transferred or appointed to a position of higher grade shall be eligible, in the event of separation from the service through reduction in force, to reinstatement at a grade above the grade held by such employee on September 1, 1950; and all reinstatements, transfers or promotions to positions in the Federal civil service shall be temporary and for positions subject to the Classification Act of 1949 shall be made with the condition and notice to the individual reinstated, transferred or promoted that the classification grade of the position is subject to post audit and correction by the appropriate departmental or agency personnel office or the Civil Service Commission;

(b) The names of all persons to be terminated under reductions in force in the departments and agencies of the Government shall be certified as eligible for appointment to positions in agency programs determined by the President to be related directly to national defense, if qualified, at not to exceed the grade and salary last held in the terminating agency or department; and

(c) The Department of Defense is authorized to call on other departments or agencies for such additional personnel as it may require within the limits of its funds.

The Civil Service Commission has made little effort to fully utilize this rider. So far as providing expert manpower to the national defense agencies, this would have been done much more effectively if the Civil Service Commission had not waited months to announce the reemployment rights in their old department for those who transfer to defense work. Even now the Commission has only guaranteed a similar job and not the same one. Such action can only be taken as a half-hearted effort on the part of the Commission to make expert manpower available to the defense agencies.

Regular departments, in my judgment, will take substantial cuts in money and personnel this year. When that happens the provision of subsection (b) will not only help those terminated but the defense agencies as well. However, the provision is certainly working so far as helping to hold steady the permanent grade level in the Federal service and in preventing an increase in the total number of permanent employees of the Government. Contrary to various newspaper reports this provision does not prohibit permanent appointments to vacancies.

During the last war no such provision was in the law, and all national defense agencies gave grades averaging much higher than the average grades existing in the regular departments. Since they were "national defense" they had no trouble getting appropriations. Clerks at $2,000 many times jumped five or six grades or to $8,000 and $9,000 per year. These ratings became permanent and from a study by our committee staff of two regular departments of our Government made since the war, their average grade level for employees is two grades above what it was before the war. If the same situation exists throughout the Government this extravagant upgrading during the last war is costing us at least a billion dollars a year now. That is over and above salary raises voted by the Congress.

According to that the provision or rider which I attached to the appropriation bill will save us a half billion dollars a year.

But the Civil Service Commission would repeal this so-called Whitten rider. They say they must have leeway to meet manpower needs. The rider provides sufficient leeway, but does attempt to hold steady the average permanent grade levels. I say to the Commission, when manpower is short, upgrading will not make it more plentiful. There is only one thing to do and that is for the available manpower to work longer. Our Civil Service Commission is strangely silent on that. Continued silence on their part is to invite more riders, perhaps not the best way to legislate, but certainly an effective way when action is sorely needed.

Federal workers have an interest on my side of this issue, whether they realize it or not. It is not all workers who got this upgrading during the last war, nor would all get it in the absence of this provision now. It is those who jump to other agencies and in the absence of this provision could come back with the higher grade to roll someone who worked many years longer for a lesser grade.

If we continue many more years to spend more than we take in, retirement for Federal workers and others will mean little, as will insurance, and Government bonds may well buy only about 25 cents worth of commodities for each dollar invested. You may say that could not happen here. Already a great deal has happened here, all pointing in that direction.

It is time for all to help maintain financial integrity at home if our system is to be saved. We must work longer if the job is to be done.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. We have in New Mexico very few airfields, one in Clovis and one at Hobbs. They are now making inspections of the air facilities and air bases down there for the purpose of reactivating some of them. My question is: Are they reporting the findings of those inspections to the gentleman's committee?

Mr. WHITTEN. I will have to say this: I am no longer a member of this subcommittee. I point this out as having happened and is borne out by the records and the admissions of the Army itself as evidence of the fact that we should have some special committee, regardless of how good a job this other committee tried to do, to ride herd on the situation. They should have an adequate staff. The problem is so big that unless you do that you will waste hundreds of millions and possibly billions of dollars in the long run.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I am sorry the gentleman is not on the committee now.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I think the last point brought out is important, that you have to watch the expenditures in the Military Establishment. Each and every one of us wants to give the Military Establishment every dime they need, but at the same time our responsibility to the people of the Nation is to see that there is no waste. The gentleman certainly has done a good job for the Nation by urging the establishment of such a watchdog committee.

Mr. WHITTEN. I thank the gentleman. As I say, I am no longer a member of the subcommittee on appropriations that handles national defense items, but I do hope we will profit by what has happened before.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think the gentleman has pointed out to the House one of the reasons why the cost of government has risen so high in the last 10 years. As the gentleman knows, I had the privilege of serving as chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service during the Eighty-first Congress, whose duty it was to make a survey of personnel utilization in the executive agencies. We made an extensive study in four agencies: The Federal Security Agency, the Interior Department, the Department of the Treasury, and the General Services Administration. Among other things we found—and this is in line with what the gentleman is saying—that in the personnel sections of those agencies, for instance, the salaries of personnel workers had increased between 1940 and 1950 by 164 percent. The Congress by legislation had increased the salaries by 51 percent, which means that the difference between 51 percent and 164 percent was made up by general ungrading of the employees during the war.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman did a very splendid job in handling that investigation, and I hope that committee will be continued.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ALBERT] is recognized for 10 minutes.

FARM INCOME

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said recently about the farmer's share of the profits from the increased cost of living. Bureau of Agricultural Economics calculations reveal, however, that the net income from agriculture to people living on the farms of this country dropped from a 1948 peak of more than $19,000,000,000 to approximately $14,500,000,000 in 1950. This drop is partially attributable to the rise in production costs and to the lower volume of farm marketings, but principally to the fact that the price paid to farmers for food products decreased by more than 10 percent from 1948 to 1950. This decrease in farmers' prices becomes all the more striking when we consider the fact that during the same period average consumer prices decreased by only 7 percent.

While more than 18 percent of our people live on the farms of this country, our farmers received only about 7 percent of the national income in 1950. In 1947 the farmers at the peak of their period of prosperity received about 10 percent of the national income. Not only has the average income of the farmer never been equal to the average income of people living in urban communities, but in the past 2 years we have seen a drop of 30 percent in farm income. This has come at a time when there has been no corresponding drop in the income of our nonfarm population.

When it is said, therefore, that farmers have benefited from increased prices during the last 6 months, only a part of the story has been told. While the farmer's share of the consumer dollar used for the purchase of food increased from 46 cents in June 1950 to an estimated 50 cents in December 1950, the farmer's portion is still below the 54 cents he received in 1945 when price controls were in effect.

The charge that farmers are responsible for the major share of price increases is unfair for many reasons. Certainly the farmer received no part of the income which resulted from inventory mark-ups during the period preceding the 1950 harvest. Certainly, also, he has had no part in price increases which have followed the sale of his 1950 crop.

In many of the basic commodities raised on the farms of this country, the farmer's share of the consumer's dollar is ridiculously small. For instance, the wheat farmer receives less than 2½ cents for the wheat which goes into a 15-cent loaf of bread. In October the farmer got 22 cents for the farmer's share of a work shirt which retailed at $1.54. His share of a $3.18 pair of overalls was 54 cents. He receives an average of only 15.6 percent of the consumer dollar on all cotton articles.

The price of citrus fruits to the grower is lower today than it has been for a number of years. In one month during the third quarter of the last year from October 1950 to November 1950, the price paid to farmers for oranges dropped from 20.1 cents to 14.7 cents per dozen. This 27-percent drop in the farmer's price took place when there was no appreciable change in the price to the housewife.

To say that we are not living in a dangerously inflationary period would be ridiculous. But to contend that this inflation can be laid at the farmer's door or that the price of food has increased out of proportion to price increases of other articles used by the American family would be equally absurd. During the past 6 months, there has been a 5-percent increase in the cost of food and a corresponding average increase in the cost of living generally. The cost of clothing has increased 6 percent. The cost of electricity has increased about 3½ percent, and the cost of home furnishings has increased about 10½ percent.

During the last two quarters of the calendar year 1950, corporate profits of this country were in excess of a rate of $24,000,000,000 per year after taxes, as compared to a rate of $17,000,000,000 per year during the same period in 1949. While corporate profits have increased at a rate of 41 percent, there has been a decrease of about 8 percent in net farm income during this same period. Farm income in 1950 was less than it was in 1948 and yet income from dividends and personal interest increased from a rate of $16,100,000,000 in 1948 to an all-time high of $19,300,000,000 in November 1950.

It would seem to me to be unfair to compare the cost of food today with the cost at any other period unless we also compare the income of the consuming public and the quantity and quality of food now being consumed. The average housewife has more money to spend for food and is buying better food than ever before in the history of our country. During the prewar years from 1935 to 1939, 23 percent of the disposable income of our people was spent for food. Today the same quantity and form of food can be purchased for 19 percent of the disposable income of the American people. At the bottom of the depression the people of this country were spending 27 percent of their disposable income for food. Today the housewife who spends the same amount of her income for food is receiving far more food and far better food for her family than the average consumer received in 1933.

The point I am trying to make is that our present inflationary situation cannot be justly charged to the farmers of this country. The fact that his share of the consumer's dollar was 4 cents more in December than it was in June last year should not make him the goat of any proposal to roll back prices. It cannot properly be used as an argument in favor of pegging farm prices below the parity level. The farmer is entitled to catch up before he is checked. In June 1950 prices received by farmers were still about 13 percent below the average for 1948 and in December 1950 the farmer's share was about equal to the 1948 average.

The farmer has never considered that he should have any unfair advantage over anybody else in our economy. He is entitled to an even break. His position cannot be properly appraised by simply comparing his share of the consumer dollar in June 1950 to his share in January 1951. The important consideration is whether he is receiving his fair share of the total disposable net income of the people of our country.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALBERT. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. That is the heart of the story that most of these columnists omit or quibble about when dealing with this particular matter.

Mr. ALBERT. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. They do not say, for example, that in 1927 at the time of the top peak in agricultural prices that only 25 percent of the average workingman's income went for food whereas, as the gentleman stated, in 1935 to 1939 it costs 2 percent more.

Mr. ALBERT. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for 1 hour.

THE CONSOLIDATED APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress are in receipt of a circular letter from the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] referring to a letter received by him from Senator BYRD.

The letter contains so many astonishing statements that I am including it as a part of my remarks with comments upon these statements seriatim.

The gentleman from California has been unalterably opposed to the consolidated bill from the beginning and has lost no opportunity to criticize it. But if it is so impractical why does not his own State legislature, of which he was a member, abandon it and return to the old practice of separate bills? Not only California but practically every State in the Union adheres to the consolidated bill. In fact, the principal countries of the world, including England and France, use the consolidated bill. But the gentleman from California opposes it. Every metropolitan newspaper in the United States which has expressed itself editorially on the subject, including all four Washington papers, warmly endorses the consolidated bill. But the gentleman from California says they are all wrong.

Here is his letter:

MY DEAR SENATOR BYRD: This is in reply to your letter dated January 22, which I received in Tuesday morning's mail. My regard for you personally, and my feeling that you have done an effective job in making the people of the country tax-conscious, particularly as taxes are related to unnecessary employment in government, make me feel that I should do more than acknowledge the letter without comment.

Based on years of budget-making experience, in private industry, in the California State Legislature, and here I was doubtful, when the package budget was first proposed, if it would work. I so wrote Mr. CANNON, about a year and a half ago, when he asked for comments on the consolidated budget idea. What might be successfully applied to the accounting and the budget-making procedures of a corporation, is not always equally successful in government.

You state in your letter, as one of the assets of the consolidated budget, that it shows the people, in a single figure, what the budget total will be for any fiscal year. Senator FERGUSON, in a letter somewhat similar to yours, also made a comment along the same lines, and so did another member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, in a telephone conversation. This is exactly what the package budget does not do, and never can do under Government conditions. Witness the fact that the House sent you last year the big appropriation bill, to which the attention of the people was directed, but we also sent you the urgent deficiency bill; the deficiency appropriation bill of 1950; a bill for appropriations for the District of Columbia; and two 1951 supplemental bills. We are about to take up still another supplemental bill for 1951, and it would be little short of a miracle if we did not have at least one other supplemental or deficiency bill in the current fiscal year. Thus the total figure will be the addition of these seven or more bills.

The people are deceived into thinking that they have a figure, in the consolidated bill, representing the cost of Government for a year, when in effect they do not have it, and never could have it. As war conditions increase, we are less likely to have anything like a single figure.

The package budget gives the most accurate figure that can be compiled on total annual expenditure. The urgent deficiency bill and the deficiency appropriation bill of 1950 to which the gentleman refers were a part of the budget for the previous year. As we stated at the time, the consolidated bill was undertaken, the new system would have to run 1 year in order to clear such deficiencies inherited from previous budgets. Contrary to the statement, the total Federal expenditure for the District of Columbia is included in the consolidated bill and the separate bill for the District of Columbia appropriates the District of Columbia revenues and has no relation to the Federal budget.

The other bills to which he refers were the result of war developments which cannot be foreseen in any peacetime budget and which would not interfere with the operation of the consolidated bill in normal years. As a matter of fact during a war period, defense appropriations must always be handled separately from the regular budget and that is exactly what is contemplated for this year. There are to be two consolidated bills, one dealing with nondefense items and the other with defense items.

I was in favor of the idea in the Reorganization Act of trying to set up, in advance of budget making, a figure for a possible budget maximum based on the probable income of the Nation, but I was not too surprised when this idea also proved to be a failure.

Fixing of a total advance figure under the Reorganization Act was impractical from the start, but the objective of the Reorganization Act is achieved in the consolidated budget where the total figure is the aggregate of all chapters of the omnibus bill. The gentleman from California supported a plan which was doomed to failure. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and I told the House at the time it was adopted that it would fail, and it did fail. Now the gentleman from California comes in and opposes a plan to secure the same result that will work, as demonstrated by the fact that it has accomplished the very object desired.

There is no substitute for ordinary hard work in a subcommittee room. During the Eightieth Congress the House and the Senate together were able to keep the expenditures of the Government inside its income. We did not have a consolidated budget at the time, and we did not need it.

When the Congress convened in January 1947, the budget received from the President was not only in balance but it was in balance for the first time since it went into the red in 1931. The Treasury was in the black for two fiscal years, 1947 and 1948. Appropriations for 1947 were made by the Seventy-ninth Congress. Appropriations for 1948 were made by the Eightieth Congress and while that year was also in the black, the full result of the fiscal program cannot be measured until 1949, for which the Eightieth Congress also made appropriations, and in which year the reduced tax program first became effective, and then only partially. Deficit in 1949 was $1,800,000,000. Budget expenditures for 1950, first year for which appropriations were made by the Eighty-first Congress were only $100,000,000 more than for 1949, although it was necessary to include $2,000,000,000 for the cost of new legislation passed by the Eighty-first Congress, and the deficit resulting from full effect of the new tax program was $3,100,000,000.

In no Congress has the budget been processed more carefully and more in detail than in the last session. Heretofore each Member and every member of the staff, had served on from two to four subcommittees and necessarily had to divide time and attention between two to four different bills. Under the consolidated budget members have had the undivided service of the staff assistants and necessarily have done a much better task than heretofore. This is shown by the fact that there were less amendments offered, or agreed to, this last year than ever before.

We had adequate clerical and statistical and investigating help, and we took the budget items apart, almost dollar by dollar, separated the lean from the fat and arrived at a reasonable figure for the final estimate. The subcommittee on which I serve, Independent Offices, took $1,400,000,000 from that one subcommittee appropriation, and I suggest that no one was hurt, and that few people felt the cut directly.

In the Eighty-first Congress, the chairman of the House committee discharged all of our staff except one minority analyst. Not only have we been without help of that kind, but the number of members on each subcommittee was reduced from seven to five, which threw an almost impossible load on most subcommittees.

This has been repeatedly answered in debate on the floor of the House, notably on December 21, 1943. Any matters pertaining to the staff are beside the question as they can have no relation whatever to consolidated bill procedure. By this extraneous discussion the gentleman endeavors to divert attention from the advantages accruing from the consolidated bill.

The gentleman complains of lack of time to make a proper study of the budget. Of course, he will recall that in the Eightieth Congress he served as a member of both the Subcommittee on the Department of Agriculture, the Subcommittee on Independent Offices, whereas in the Eighty-first Congress, under the new plan, he was a member of only the Independent Offices Subcommittee and could devote full time and attention to the work of that subcommittee. In other words he and all other members of the committee had twice as much time for their bills as they had under the old system, and of course bills were given much better study and consideration.

I have suggested to one of my senatorial friends that the same amount of effort now being spent to support the error we made in adopting the consolidated budget, if given to an effort to provide both majority and the minority members of the House and Senate subcommittees with adequate staffing, would result in material savings to the taxpayers.

It is discouraging, as you know from experience, for a member of a Subcommittee on Appropriations to sit on one side of a table, with little help if he is on the majority side, and less help if he is on the minority, and face a battery of spending experts from an agency or department, who have been working for months on the expenditures of the agency, and to be expected to meet this expert competition with little time and no help.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Here again the gentleman seeks to avoid the issue by discussing an irrelevant subject in no way connected with consolidated bill procedure. As a matter of fact we have the most efficient system of investigation that has ever been used, and members of the committee were repeatedly urged in the last session to request information on any item about which they had any question. No request from the gentleman from California or any other Member for any investigation or information or other staff assistance has been denied and reports on all requests by FBI operators are now on file in writing in the archives of the subcommittees which requested them.

I have always understood that one hallmark of leadership was the willingness to recognize and acknowledge a mistake, and try to correct it. A year's experience has shown the consolidated budget to be a device for spenders, not for savers.

The gentleman refuses to accept his own maxim. Every national business organization including the Tax Foundation, the State chambers of commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and others are on record as emphatically approving the consolidated bill because it effects economy. No national business organization disapproves of the consolidated bill procedure. That is a sweeping statement but it is literally true. The gentleman from California is out of step with the best business thought of the Nation.

The gentleman makes the statement that it is a device for spenders and repeatedly asserts that it does not effect savings but at no point does he furnish any substantiating data to support his own bold assertion which still stands as a wholly naked statement unadorned by any factual proof.

The best thing we could do for the taxpayers of the country would be to correct this as quickly as possible, and instead to provide our committees with sufficient staff and whatever else may be necessary, to work intelligently and thoroughly upon appropriation requests.

The question of the staff has been repeatedly and exhaustively debated on the floor of the House. No staff on the Hill is more effective or efficient. It has met every need adequately at a minimum of expense.

Your letter and other comments have made a point of the fact that the Congress was enabled, in the consolidated bill, to instruct the President to cut the final total an amount approximating $550,000,000. I am troubled by that statement. We fought the Revolution with this as one of the principles involved. When our forefathers set up the Government, they not only insisted on keeping the control of the purse in the hands of Congress, as opposed to the President's but they even insisted on keeping it in the House of Representatives as opposed to the Senate, because the lower House was closely in touch with the people. I think this was wisdom, and not accident. Can you think of any greater political influence that we could put in the hands of a President, no matter what his party might be, than to give him the final control over budget items? I suggest to you that the way the cuts were made in the current budget supports my contention. I for one am not willing to surrender the responsibility of the legislative branch given us under our form of government. Wasn't it a Virginian, Senator, who once said that it is better to stick to principles than to be led aside by expediency?

The gentleman voted for the very thing which he decries. On any item he could very easily have offered a motion to cut specific appropriations. Instead of that he preferred to wait and vote for a motion to instruct the President which he now says he deplores. The gentleman should be consistent. The gentleman could have and should have offered any amendment curtailing appropriations on which he wished to retrench or economize. It was not the consolidated bill. It was lack of a desire to economize.

Amendments instructing the President to cut totals could be offered to separate bills just as easily as they could be offered to consolidated bills. The Senate adopted such an amendment to the military appropriation bill in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress. So there is no point whatever in that contention.

You state in your letter of the 22d, that "the reductions * * * ultimately totaled about $2,000,000,000, the greatest ever made." I suspect that this must have been a typing error, as the reductions were not that great, nor were they the greatest ever made. Without referring to my notes for the preceding year, my recollection is that the true reduction was something under $1,000,000,000. In addition to that the Railroad Retirement Board reported to us that the retirement fund had a surplus of approximately $136,000,000, so instead of taking back that amount of money in a rescission bill, we simply deducted it from the amount asked, for fiscal 1951. That can hardly be considered a cut in the budget. Again without checking my figures, my recollection is that the cuts in requested contract authorizations would run to something under a half billion dollars, and whether or not that is a true deduction is debatable. Even if we call it a deduction, to reach a two billion figure, it is necessary to include the reductions the President was instructed to make, and if you will run hastily over that list, you will find that quite a few of those were not what we may honestly class as deductions.

The President cut the Railroad Retirement Board another $19,827,800, which I suggest is meaningless, as the amount expended from that fund depends entirely upon the demands upon it and we are obligated under the law to meet those demands.

The gentleman meets himself coming back. He deplores the fact that the Congress failed to rescind one hundred and thirty-six million from the railroad retirement account and berates the President for taking $19,800,000 from that fund on the ground that the action is meaningless. The gentleman berates the method used to effect a rescission of $136,000,000 from the railroad retirement fund and questions its inclusion as a cut in the budget. The facts are that the railroad retirement appropriation is included in budget totals just as other items are, and a reduction against it, whether in the form of a rescission of prior appropriations or a direct cut against the current figure, is as much a reduction in appropriations as any other cut. The cut referred to represented an excessive amount appropriated in the previous year. The procedure used to recapture that excess was identical with that followed in previous years, including the Eightieth Congress.

The amount of $19,800,000 taken out by the President was an identical proposition except that it related to a different fiscal year.

The fact remains that under the consolidated bill we reduced the budget estimates more than $2,225,000,000, the largest reduction ever made by a Congress of the same political faith as the administration, in the history of the Nation. Furthermore, we also prevented the appropriation of vast sums above the budget estimates, so that the national debt is today somewhere between three and four billion dollars less than it would have otherwise been, and all of that reduction in nondefense expenditures.

That is not a true budget cut. He cut the loan fund of the REA $85,500,000, which is pretty much the same class of cut. There are other cuts of the same kind, and as I glance hastily over the memorandum showing the Presidential cuts, I am impressed with the fact that most of them could have been made much better and much more intelligently by the proper subcommittees in the Congress. Finally, I suggest that you take the list of the President's cuts in one hand, and the copy of the newly arrived budget in the other, and then see how many of the items he cut on our percentage instructions were not simply transferred to the new budget, so that in effect we neither saved any money nor saved ourselves any work. It will be just a little bit harder to dig them out of the present budget, particularly if we are to be required again to work without adequate help. In other words, a saving which should have been made by a congressional committee was passed over to the President, in opposition to constitutional intent, and he in turn passed it over presumably to the Bureau of the Budget. Many of the cuts, taken in response to our instructions, will reappear in the 1952 budget.

The actual reduction of the budget was $2,298,000,000, as shown by the official compilation based on the conference report.

Josh Billings said "It is better not to know so much than to know so much that ain't so." That adage fits the gentleman's statement like a glove. The general reduction was effectively and fairly applied. One of the reductions imposed, to which the gentleman refers specifically, is the reduction in Rural Electrification Administration. If what he says about the application of the reduction were true, then one would suppose that the Rural Electrification Administration appropriation would be $85,000,000 higher for 1952 than it was in 1951, whereas the startling fact is that the President proposed for 1952, $221,000,000 less than the final 1951 figures after taking into account the reduction of $85,500,000.

I do not see how you can say that the bill was handled expeditiously. We started hearings in my subcommittee, which has about 33 agencies of Government, the second week in January. There was constant pressure on the committee to hurry the budget, in order to make some kind of a record for getting the consolidated bill to the floor. This is not good budget making. The consolidated bill was reported on March 21. It had been put through the full Appropriations Committee in so short a time that an average of less than 10 minutes was given to each one of the sections. I do not see how this can possibly help the taxpayers.

No limitation of any kind was placed on the consideration of any section. No section was concluded until everyone had been given an opportunity to offer any amendment which he chose to propose. Not until the Members had been asked if there were further amendments or further debate—and there was no response—did we pass on to the next section.

In the preliminary schedules one entire week was allotted to consideration of the subcommittee reports in the full committee. But the bill had been so carefully processed and so thoroughly considered that few amendments were offered. Everyone had every opportunity to offer amendments or to extend debate as long as he wished. If the gentleman thought further amendment or further debate would help the taxpayers, why did he not take advantage of the opportunity offered at the time?

Actually, fewer Members of Congress, including members of the Appropriations Committee on both sides of the Capitol, knew the appropriation details than in any preceding Congress in my experience.

On the contrary, Members had a better opportunity to study the hearings, and to understand the bill, than ever before, for the reason that the transcripts were published periodically by installments, as hearings progressed, instead of being held until the bill was finished and the hearings finally published in one ponderous volume as heretofore.

The bill was on the floor for about 6 weeks, and we had great difficulty in keeping up the interest of the Members of the House, in order that we might make those savings which we would have been able to make, had the sections of the consolidated bill come to us as individual bills.

The bill was pending in the House about 6 weeks but was under consideration only a part of that time as other business which should not have interfered was permitted to intervene and the Easter recess took a part of the time. Had the bill been considered promptly when reported, as under the rules we had a right to expect, the bill would have passed the House and would have gone to the Senate before the Easter holidays. The decisive consideration is that the bill was reported to the House on March 21, the earliest date in the history of the Appropriations Committee, and it was passed and sent to the Senate on May 10, the earliest date on which all annual appropriations have been sent to the Senate. That is conclusive.

The bill passed the House on May 10 and was reported in the Senate on July 10. It passed your House on August 4 and was sent to conference on August 8 and it did not get out of conference until August 28 and was signed by the President on September 6. Certainly this is the longest time in my personal experience, and I doubt if, in your much longer experience, you have ever known a bill to drag more, nor the details to be less well known by the Members. For the first time in our history it was necessary for the Congress to pass three continuing resolutions, one covering the entire budget, in order to keep the departments and agencies operating. This meant that the agencies and departments were in the second quarter of the fiscal year before they knew the amounts which Congress had finally appropriated for them. Several agencies (known personally to me) were required to make adjustments for the remaining two and a half quarters, which they should have spread, for greater efficiency, over four quarters.

Again, if the committee had had cooperation on the floor the bill would have been approved with time to spare. The filibusters on the floor were so notorious as to occasion reference in debate.

One of the things which came out of this delay was the necessity, on the part of the Senate, of starting hearings before the bill had been reported by the House. The Senate subcommittees held hearings upon a bill which had not yet reached your House, and were compelled to consider in detail many items on which hearings were found to have been unnecessary when the bill arrived on your side of the Capitol. A more intelligent and satisfactory way of making a budget is to follow the procedure of having the individual bills go through the House and come properly to the Senate for the necessary hearings on the actual details of the bills, as in preceding years.

One of the notable advantages of the consolidated bill is that it permits simultaneous consideration by the committees, both of the House and of the Senate. For the first time the House Committee transmitted to the Senate printed transcriptions from time to time as the hearings proceeded. As a result Senate hearings on many sections of the bill were completed by the time the bill was messaged over. Under the old system the Senate could not begin hearings until after the bill had passed the House and had been messaged over. There is no reason why the Senate hearings should not be held within a few days after the House has completed a subject and transmitted the printed hearing instead of waiting until the entire bill has been heard and the proceedings printed in one volume.

It seems to me an unanswerable argument against the consolidated budget is the fact that under that system only one motion to recommit is permissible, while under the separated budget 8 or 9 or 10 motions to recommit are in order, and I say again that the consolidated budget is a device for the spenders, and not for the savers.

The gentleman ignores the fact that as many items of the bill may be included in the motion to recommit as may be desired. But more convincing is the fact that he has not availed himself of even the one motion to recommit when the bill was under consideration. For example, on May 10, 1950, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] offered a pro forma motion to recommit and could have included the minority economy program, had there been one, if he so desired. Further, he did not even demand a vote on it. Whether there is 1 motion to recommit or 20 motions to recommit, what advantage is there if not used?

Another thing which impressed me about the consolidated budget was that separate budgets, with greater knowledge on the part of the members of the subcommittees, made it possible for us to direct the light of publicity to items which, in the package job, can be covered up. I still say that the most powerful agent we have toward economy is the light of publicity.

Again the theory does not comport with the facts. Under the consolidated bill, releases were made to the press and to the public periodically from the beginning of the hearings to the close. Under the old system, with executive hearings, neither the press nor the public had access to information on any proceedings of the committee until the entire bill had been disposed of.

I point again to the budget work in the Eightieth Congress, in which you had a part, and of which you should be proud. That Congress saved approximately $7,000,000,000. Cutting out some of the same type of savings to which I objected in reports on the current budget, we might properly call the figure $6,500,000,000. However, that is three times the amount of the saving under the current budget, even including doubtful items. In addition to the $6,500,000,000, we had several billions in rescissions, and the total reduction in the budget estimates, plus rescissions, for that Congress reached approximately $9,000,000,000. I emphasize again that we did not have a consolidated budget in the Eightieth Congress, but we did, by hard and intelligent work and efficient help, keep the expenses inside the income. We are in error in thinking that a consolidated budget per se can do the same thing. It would be very damaging to the taxpayers if we permit the fallacious idea to continue that the consolidated budget is beneficial to them. I think also, in passing, that the "performance budget" has a tendency to hide items under major subjects which could be more easily identified and reduced if they were kept separate. I think it would be pretty hard, for example, for you to prevail in an effort to cut the unnecessary personnel costs of government, in which you are interested, if that detail were to be included in a popular war item like the construction of battleships or the construction of submarines or the construction of planes. In other words, every time we give the spenders a chance to confuse the issue or to hide costs we are giving our spending opponents an advantage.

The claim that $7,000,000,000 was saved in the Eightieth Congress is without substantiation. As far as rescissions are concerned, in a previous Congress we had rescissioned over $64,000,000,000. Such huge decreases naturally follow a drop from the war budget to a peacetime budget.

So far as the performance budget is concerned, that is a matter which is adaptable to neither an individual bill nor an omnibus bill and has no part in this discussion. In other words, here is a notable example of an attempt to confuse the issue. Trafficking in the question of the performance budget could be for no other purpose than to further confuse the issue.

I think there is a psychological objection to the consolidated budget, even if it is a minor one. I felt, and I think other members of all subcommittees felt unconsciously, that it was difficult for us to make what we would call final and well-determined cuts in budget items, until we knew what the policy of the so-called super-duper committee was going to be, and what kind of cuts that committee intended to make.

There were certain agencies before our subcommittee which could well have stood additional cuts, and there were others where we knew, between the Budget Bureau and our own subcommittee, they had taken all the cuts they could well stand. If the super-duper committee were to make an across-the-board cut, in addition to those the subcommittee had already made, damage would be done to some agencies, while additional cuts might have been well justified in others. The central committee finally referred our budget back to our subcommittee with the suggestion that we should go over it again and make further cuts; a general suggestion. Our chairman properly sent back word that we would be glad to do this if we could have some idea of what general cut the central committee had in mind, and what all other subcommittees were doing. We heard nothing further on the subject. There is no telling how many million dollars the consolidated budget has cost the taxpayers of the United States. I think this fact should be made known to them.

The super-duper committee named by the gentleman evidently refers to the central committee. The central committee at no time made an across-the-board cut. As a matter of fact it made no cuts of any kind. It was understood at all times that no one was authorized to cut a chapter but the subcommittee which reported it and the only action ever taken by the central committee was to recommend reductions which could be approved or rejected by the subcommittee writing the bill.

The gentleman makes the surprising statement that there were some agencies where "additional cuts might have been well justified." And still his subcommittee did not make such cuts at a time when we were running billions of dollars in the red. If the gentleman will furnish the list of these items, we will be pleased to help him in the effort to secure rescissions of these funds unless they have already been wasted because of the gentleman's delinquency in not eliminating such unnecessary expenditures. It was not the consolidated budget which "cost the taxpayers of the United States" "many millions of dollars." It was the failure of the gentleman and his subcommittee to make the necessary cuts and savings that "cost the taxpayers of the United States" these "many million dollars."

I think the idea of a coordinating committee may have some merit. It can take the separate bills and keep a running calculation of the probable total for the entire budget, without necessarily having a consolidated budget. The taxpayers can have a total figure at any time by adding up the separate totals just as easily, and more accurately, than by undertaking another package job.

It is always useless to lock the barn after the horse is stolen. The taxpayers, represented by the Tax Foundation, are for the consolidated bill. They have watched it operate.

I could cite other disadvantages of the consolidated budget, but I am afraid I have already exhausted not only the time which you have to read such a letter, but your willingness to listen patiently to my comments. I was fearful, on the basis of professional experience, when the consolidated budget was first proposed; I have seen, in the experience of the eighty-first session, that it will not work and that it is a budget benefiting only the spenders and to the disadvantage of the savers and the taxpayers. I hope that we are courageous enough, in the eighty-second session, to admit that it did not work and that we should return to separate budgets, and that we should give ourselves again, in both House and Senate, adequate statistical and analytical help, to do a thorough and worthwhile budget job.

The gentleman cannot cite other disadvantages. He has included every possible criticism, however inapplicable—none of which are of sufficient weight to have any bearing on the advantages and disadvantages of the consolidated bill. In order to stretch his letter he has been under the necessity of discussing extraneous matters most of the time. If he has "other" disadvantages we would be glad to have him cite them.

I have a feeling that practically every Republican member of the House committee feels as I have indicated in this letter, and that a majority of the Democratic members feel the same way, to the extent that I believe, if this matter comes to a vote next Monday, we will not have a consolidated budget for fiscal 1952. I might suggest, in passing, that such a majority of opinion on the part of the House committee should indicate something to the members of the Senate committee, and that perhaps before we have any more attempts to build up pressure from outside, in order to force it upon us for another year, we should get together, Senate and House, and determine whether there are any commendable features of the consolidated budget which are not presently apparent to those of us who worked most closely with it.

So far as pressure from outside is concerned, much of the antagonism to the consolidated bill has come from outside the committee. Every predatory lobbyist, every pressure group seeking to get its hands into the United States Treasury, every bureaucrat seeking to extend his empire downtown, is opposed to the consolidated bill; and if a plebiscite could be taken, every taxpayer in the United States favors a consolidated bill under which all expenditures can be grouped together and presented at one time in connection and in comparison with our total national revenues.

I think it has already struck you that some of the tax associations which are, perhaps thoughtlessly, supporting the idea of a consolidated budget, are inconsistent. In other recommendations to us they have urged separate votes upon various items, so that a record may be made, and savings encouraged. The consolidated budget is antagonistic to such votes, and is an aid to the spenders who desire, by covering up spending items, to make it difficult for this knowledge to reach the folks at home.

The gentleman would have us believe that in the consolidated budget it is not possible to take a vote on an individual item, whereas the reverse is true. There is exactly the same opportunity to take a vote on an individual item under the consolidated bill as was available under separate bills. The spenders want to cover up by hiding behind a dozen smaller bills which do not attract as much attention as one complete bill.

I think you realize that the efforts to continue this consolidated budget have already delayed the organization of the House committee several weeks and will presumably delay final action on the budget by an equivalent time.

With kindest personal regards and assurances of my appreciation for what you have already done in educating the people to Government spending, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JOHN PHILLIPS,
Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the one weakness of our form of government is that Members of Congress are political beneficiaries of Federal largess distributed in their districts and their States. The more money we can vote out of the Treasury and into our respective bailiwicks, the more votes we may expect at the next election. The appalling increase in the cost of the Federal Government in the last few years is evidence of the imminent danger in which the Government finds itself with expenditures exceeding revenues both in peacetime and in war. We can lose by bankruptcy, as well as by invasion.

The consolidated bill offers the only effective means yet devised to remedy this serious situation. It would be a tragedy to give up the only method which has so far resulted in actual economy and go back to the separate bills under which we have piled up the menacing deficit which overhangs the Nation and which is our greatest handicap in maintaining national defense in these perilous times. We are now spending every year for interest on the public debt alone, six times the amount spent for the entire national budget under Speaker Reed. When the newspapers clamored that Congress had for the first time appropriated $1,000,000,000 Speaker Reed replied that this was a billion-dollar country. But is it a ninety-four billion country when we are going deeper in debt every year and the dollar loses purchasing power every day? As late as 1917 the total actual expenditures by the Federal Government in this century had never exceeded $760,000,000 in any one fiscal year. We are now being asked to appropriate at the rate of approximately $94,000,000,000 for 1952. We must adopt every method that promises to hold down this insidious spending psychology that is draining the life blood of the Nation. We must retain the only effective method adopted up to this time—the consolidated budget.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATTERSON (at the request of Mr. SADLAK) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in five instances.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. GORDON (at the request of Mr. PRICE), for 4 days, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 30, 1951, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

123. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to authorize the transfer of certain military prisoners and confinement facilities to the control and management of the Attorney General"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

124. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to authorize advances for clothing and equipment to cadets at the Military Academy and to midshipmen at the Naval Academy, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

125. A letter from the Chairman, District of Columbia Armory Board, transmitting the Third Annual Report of the District of Columbia Armory Board, pursuant to section 10, Public Law 605, approved June 4, 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

126. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a report showing the special assistants employed during the period from July 1 to December 31, 1950, with compensation payable from the allotment contained in section 202, General Provisions, Department of Justice, pursuant to the Department of Justice Appropriation Act approved September 6, 1950; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

127. A letter from the Deputy Attorney General, transmitting recommendations for the enactment of legislation entitled "A bill making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers"; to the Committee on House Administration.

128. A letter from the Deputy Attorney General, transmitting recommendations for the enactment of the annexed proposed bill entitled "A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, chapter 79, to add a new section, 1623, to extend the law relating to perjury to the willful giving of contradictory statements under oath"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

129. A letter from the Deputy Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to provide for the adjustment of royalties and like charges for the use of inventions for the benefit of or by the United States, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

130. A letter from the Deputy Attorney General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to amend subsection (c) of section 19 of the Immigration Act of 1917 and subsection (a) of section 338 of the Nationality Act of 1940"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

131. A letter from the Deputy Attorney General, transmitting recommendations for the enactment of legislation to amend section 334 (c) of the Nationality Act of 1940 (8 U. S. C. 734 (c)) and requesting reintroduction of bills similar to Senate bill 932 and House bill 1951, introduced in the Eighty-first Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

132. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to amend title 18 of the United States Code, entitled 'Crimes and Criminal Procedure,' to provide basic authority for certain activities of the United States Secret Service, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

133. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of legislation passed by the fifteenth legislative assembly, pursuant to section 16 of the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands of the United States, approved June 22, 1936; to the Committee on Public Lands.

134. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to authorize the sale of post route and rural delivery maps, opinions of the Solicitor, and transcripts of hearings before trial examiners, at rates to be determined by the Postmaster General"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

135. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to rescind certain details required by law to be included in the Annual Report of the Board of Trustees of the Postal Savings System"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

136. A letter from the president, Capital Transit Co., transmitting a report covering the operations of Capital Transit Co., for the calendar year 1950, with balance sheet as of December 31, 1950; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

137. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated November 10, 1950, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Fair Plain gut and tributaries, island of St. Croix, V. I., authorized by the Flood Control Act, approved on August 18, 1941; to the Committee on Public Works.

138. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated November 10, 1950, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a review of reports on Sacramento River and tributaries, California, with a view to additional improvement of Butte Creek and Cherokee Canal, including consideration of the advisability of reconstructing the Old Debris Dam below the now inoperative Cherokee Mine. This investigation was requested by resolutions of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, and the Committee on Flood Control, House of Representatives, adopted on January 24, 1939, and December 18, 1945, respectively; to the Committee on Public Works.

139. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a proposed supplemental appropriation for the fiscal year 1952 in the amount of $3,125,000 for the Civil Service Commission (H. Doc. No. 49); to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. DOUGHTON: Committee on Ways and Means. H. R. 1612. A bill to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 14). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 103. Resolution for consideration of H. R. 1612, a bill to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 15). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LYLE: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 33. Resolution creating a select committee to conduct a study and investigation of the problems of small business; with amendment (Rept. No. 16). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 74. Resolution to continue the authority of the Select Committee to investigate the use of chemicals in food products; without amendment (Rept. No. 17). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MADDEN: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 78. Resolution authorizing the Committee on Ways and Means to conduct studies and investigations of matters within its jurisdiction, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 18). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DELANEY: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 93. Resolution creating a select committee to investigate the alleged abuses in the education and training and loan guaranty programs for World War II veterans; without amendment (Rept. No. 19). Referred to the House Calendar.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30, 1951

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great God of all our days and years, by whose mercies we are spared and by whose power we are sustained, we thank Thee for this day so significant in the life of our highly esteemed and dearly beloved Speaker whom we delight to honor and upon whom we are bestowing the diadem of our heartfelt praise and affection for his many years of outstanding service and achievement.

We believe in no man's infallibility of wisdom and judgment but we rejoice with one another as we contemplate the glorious privilege of walking and working with one of our fellow citizens whose integrity of character, lofty idealism, devotion to duty, and humility of spirit inspire us with confidence and courage as we also seek to serve our God, our country, and all mankind.

Grant that his own heart may be filled with joy and peace as he continues to accept the challenge of tasks which demand the consecration of his noblest manhood. We pray that at the close of each day he may receive the benediction which Thou dost give unto the faithful.

In the midst of our rejoicing we would pause to pay tribute to the Christian life and character of one of our associates whose spirit Thou hast called from among us to dwell with Thee in heavenly blessedness. Grant unto the members of his bereaved family the consolation of Thy grace.

To Thy name we ascribe all the praise for the joys which cheer us and the trials which teach us to put our trust in Thee. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

THE LATE JOHN B. SULLIVAN

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce the death of our colleague and friend, JOHN SULLIVAN.

Last evening in his apartment, working after dinner as was his custom on his official correspondence—while he was in the act of designating a young man of his constituency to the United States Military Academy at West Point, suddenly, without premonition, his tired brain ceased to function. He was rushed to the naval hospital at Bethesda where he died a few minutes after his arrival.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that he died as he would have wished to die—in the harness—on the job—serving his people and his country.

It is perhaps an explanation of his unexpected and untimely death, in the prime of life, at the height of his power, the zenith of his accomplishments, that he had always worked tirelessly, indefatigably; that he did not spare himself; that he threw himself wholeheartedly and unreservedly, with all of his extraordinary powers, into every task committed to him—in the promotion of every enterprise entrusted to his care. He gave of himself and his resources so prodigally that in the noonday of life, the sun has gone down, ere it is yet night.

His death deprives his State and the Nation of the services of a man who has long been intimately associated and always earnestly active in the political, the commercial, the social, and the fraternal life of St. Louis and Washington.

In addition to every phase of national legislation, and the field of the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in particular, of which he was an outstanding member, he was deeply interested in and he had achieved notable progress toward congressional recognition of the development of the Jefferson Memorial on the river front at St. Louis. Although the war had interfered, he had already secured assurances which bid fair to lead ultimately to the adoption of that great development.

He was wholeheartedly concerned and vigilantly cooperative in the alleviation of the slum districts which are indigenous to every city, and to which St. Louis is no exception. And he never failed at any opportunity to work here on the floor and in the committees and in local and national civic organizations and associations in the development of those blighted areas, especially in his efforts to make available appropriate housing at low cost for the workers of his city.

He was, of course, interested in the war and its effect upon his city and his constituency. His heart was always with those young men who would be called upon at a time in life when they had so much to live for, and his decline in health coincided with the opening of that unhappy struggle. He cooperated and coordinated in every way to meet the needs of the Nation and at the same time preserve as nearly as possible an adjustable status for those men who were approaching the required grades of military service.

JOHN SULLIVAN was one of the most lovable of men. He was a friend, he was a companion, a counselor who will be sadly missed by those privileged to be intimately associated with him. A man of capacity and ability, a successful lawyer, a member of the bar associations of his city, his State, and the Nation, he was a successful businessman, an ornament to his community, an asset to his country.

In that historic conversation which has come down to us from Holy Writ, in the conference between Job and his three intimate friends, they raised the supreme question, "If a man die would he live again?" JOHN SULLIVAN had no doubt, no misgivings, about the answer to that question. He was a man of deep faith. He was a faithful and a devout communicant of his church. He was a member of the Catholic Lawyers Guild, the Holy Name Society, the Layman's Retreat League, and never failed when called upon for any religious duty.

Our hearts go out to his devoted wife. She was his constant companion at home and in business. He told me on one occasion that he never made a political campaign or went out into his district on any business connected with his congressional duties, but that she accompanied him; that he considered his success in politics and in business as largely fostered and supplemented by her intelligent and devoted service.

Mr. Speaker, Missouri has lost a noble son, the Nation a wise and able legislator, and here on the floor we have lost a loyal comrade and a valued friend.

Peace to his ashes.

Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution (H. Res. 104) and ask for the present consideration of all but the last paragraph.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN B. SULLIVAN, a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN].

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am shocked and grieved over the death of my close personal friend, JOHN B. SULLIVAN. I join with my colleagues in mourning his passing. We shall miss him very much.

St. Louis has lost a real friend. Missouri has lost a true son. The Nation has lost a leader who placed service to his country above everything else.

It has been written that no greater love hath a man than to lay down his life for another. JOHN SULLIVAN had that love and that devotion to the people of his district. I met JOHN SULLIVAN when he came to Washington over 10 years ago. He was one of the most conscientious men I have ever known. Through the years, thousands have gone to him with their problems and his help was always generously given, sometimes at the expense of his own health. His legislative service here was marked with meticulous attention to details and fine points. Even his attendance record has no marks of absence and I have on many occasions seen him disregard the advice of physicians by hurrying over to the floor to answer a relatively unimportant quorum call.

Last fall, JOHN SULLIVAN suffered a severe illness but despite this his great devotion to his work led him on. JOHN SULLIVAN's life was dedicated to his country and it is with heavy hearts we must accept the fact that his services are needed in a higher legislative assembly than ours.

It has also been written, Mr. Speaker, that behind the success of every great man is a woman. JOHN SULLIVAN was no exception to this rule. To his good wife, Lee, I give my deepest and heartfelt sympathy. May God sustain her and the members of his family in this, their greatest hour of sorrow.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. CHURCH].

Mrs. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in simple but telling tribute to the great gentleman from Missouri who has passed on that long trail taken before by other colleagues who, as Members of the House, have literally given their lives in the service of this country. The friendliness of the gentleman from Missouri was outstanding. He was the first person to cross the aisle and clasp my hand when I was seated on January 3. He has in all instances aided his wife in her greatest and in her least efforts; and as former president of the Congressional Club, I would offer her the deep appreciation of the club for all her husband did, and our most profound sympathy. For her comfort I would have her know my faith and my conviction that not even death can take from her the love and strength that has been poured into her life. I would have her carry perpetual pride from the knowledge that he left in the full vigor of his strength, at the height of his service, surrounded by the affection of his colleagues, and bearing with him the favor, affection, and respect which a grateful country gives to those who have served her well.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sad heart that I come here today to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to my friend and your friend, JOHN SULLIVAN.

It had been my pleasure to know JOHN SULLIVAN over a long period of years, many years before I came to this House. I knew him in his service in the city of St. Louis. I knew of the untiring efforts that he had put forth for that city and for the people he represented in that city.

As a representative from his district in St. Louis he was truly devoted to his people in his efforts to carry forward legislation which would benefit those whom he was representing.

I was impressed with the fact that JOHN SULLIVAN was extremely proud of his attendance in the House of Representatives. As my colleague [Mr. KARSTEN] has said, he had a record during the Eighty-first Congress of having never missed a roll call. He was proud of that record. I know that JOHN SULLIVAN was devoted and loyal—loyal not only to his friends, but he was a loyal party man. In our Missouri delegation he felt that we should all stand together at all times, regardless. I appreciate that in a man, and I appreciated it in JOHN SULLIVAN. I appreciated the fact that he felt the helpfulness that was afforded him by his wife, who was with him at all times, in the home, in the office, and in his business. I join in extending my heartfelt sympathy to her in her extreme loss, because in the death of JOHN SULLIVAN we have lost not only one of the outstanding citizens of his district, an able representative from the State of Missouri, a man of great ability here in this House, but a husband and friend whose memory will long be cherished by those who knew him.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply shocked last night when the radio reported the shocking news of the sudden death of our colleague from Missouri, Hon. JOHN B. SULLIVAN.

We had not met until the start of the Eighty-first Congress, but I had known of his distinguished service in this House in two previous terms. Like so many of those here, he represented a city district made up of various types of citizenry, men and women of divergent interests, of different political and social philosophies. In the Eleventh District of St. Louis there are many Catholics, many Jews, many Protestants. Perhaps a third or more of the population is colored. In its confines is a great industrial area. There may be found the ultra rich and the ultra poor—men of wealth and distinction; and lowly men, unknown and unsung.

It is not an easy task to represent such a district. The mail is voluminous. The departmental work is stupendous. The pressure groups are well organized. It is a tribute to our deceased colleague that he was elected four times of the six that he ran for Congress. In the last election, even though the political tide was against his party, he won by a majority of more than 26,000 votes.

In the Eighty-first Congress, JOHN SULLIVAN cast his vote on every issue that came before the House. He missed no roll calls. He was a faithful attendant at meetings of his committee. He answered his mail promptly and advised his constituents honestly of his stand on the issues.

Early in this Congress, JOHN SULLIVAN expressed to me a concern about his health. He had lost much weight. The usual sparkle was missing from his eyes, and his countenance bore a worried and pained expression. He told me that he expected to go to the Naval Hospital for a physical examination. Then he added: "I am just waiting and trying to figure out a time when I can go and not miss any business of the House." That was so characteristic of John. Duty, he placed first. His own well-being was secondary.

JOHN B. SULLIVAN was a party man, because he believed in the principles of that party; but he was not partisan in a mean way. He conceded to every man the right to believe according to the best dictates of his own conscience. He was strong in his religious faith, but again he respected the opinions and religious beliefs of others. He was kindly and soft-spoken, never prone to criticize or find fault. He was sympathetic and understanding. His heart went out to the underprivileged. He supported labor because he believed that the hand that feeds and clothes the world is the hand of toil. Although he lived in a great city, he was cognizant of the hopes and aspirations and the needs of our farm people. On major farm legislation, he voted with those of us from the rural areas.

If he made mistakes, they were of the mind and not the heart. Truly a man has passed from our midst. We shall miss his quiet and friendly counsel. The downtrodden and unfortunate of his district have lost a champion. His wife has lost a loving, true, and devoted husband. We have all lost a friend.

In a funeral oration of long ago, it was stated: "The evil that men do lives after them. The good is oft interred with their bones." Of course, we know that Anthony was trying to establish a case against Brutus, and perhaps even then there was little truth in those words. Certainly in this enlightened age, we know that such is not true. We do know that the good deeds of our departed colleague will live long after him.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in these expressions of sympathy and tribute to our late colleague, JOHN B. SULLIVAN, of Missouri.

I knew him very well. He was a distinguished attorney in St. Louis for many years. He devoted many years of his life to the administration of affairs in the city of St. Louis as associate city counselor and also as secretary to the mayor of St. Louis. From there he went on to represent that great city here in the Halls of Congress and he performed splendidly.

St. Louis has lost a great friend, Missouri has lost a distinguished son, and the Nation has lost a very able public servant. .

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, one by one the Members of the House of Representatives pass on. Last night when I heard over the newscast that the House of Representatives had lost another Member, my good friend and colleague, JOHN SULLIVAN, I was very much shocked and grieved.

In the two short years I knew JOHN SULLIVAN I always found him very considerate, a fine American, a real family man and a very religious individual. I join with my colleagues in extending to his very lovable wife my sincere regrets at his passing.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CARNAHAN].

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, when one first hears of the death of a friend, the information comes always as a shock. I learned of the sudden passing of our beloved colleague, JOHN SULLIVAN, when his death was announced on the radio this morning at 7 o'clock.

Congressman SULLIVAN, or John, as his many friends called him, was one of the friendly and helpful Members I met when I first came to Congress. John had served one term previous to that time. His willingness and readiness to share his experience with a new Member was a bright spot in my beginning days here on the Hill.

John was an excellent example for a new Member. He quietly assumed the responsibilities of membership in the United States House of Representatives. The careful attention, effort, and thought which he gave to all matters coming before the House during his years of service has produced a record of which any Member could well be proud.

JOHN B. SULLIVAN was sincere, capable, and industrious. A long and enviable record of perfect attendance is one of many evidences of this fact. During his more than 6 years in the House he has missed very few roll calls. He answered every roll call of the Eighty-first Congress, thus being one of the few Members with a perfect attendance record.

In his untimely passing, the House has lost a valuable Member. The Nation has lost a loyal citizen. His home State has lost a capable public servant. His family has lost a devoted brother, son, and husband. I extend my deepest sympathy to the family in their bereavement and irreparable loss.

To me, his going leaves a deep sense of personal loss for I have lost an appreciated friend.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, it was with a terrible shock that I learned at the breakfast table this morning of the passing of my good friend, JOHN SULLIVAN. We were long acquainted and intimately associated in our committee work. JOHN SULLIVAN was first wholeheartedly devoted to his duties, he was a loyal friend and loyal to principles, which is, of course, still more important. JOHN SULLIVAN was the kind of man who illustrated the great truth expressed by Edwin Markham in his poem which reads as follows:

There is a destiny that makes us brothers,
None goes his way alone.
All that we send into the life of others
Comes back into our own.

I am sure, therefore, that the thought that went from JOHN SULLIVAN to his brothers throughout the earth will be more than repaid in full measure to John, his delightful wife, and those close to him. JOHN SULLIVAN was one who thought very much of his friends and was concerned about their welfare. One of the last things he did in his life before he went home last fall was to warn me and urge me to be careful of my own health, about which he was worried. He was the one that should have been worrying about himself. JOHN SULLIVAN was a man among men, as I say, a truly loyal friend. I extend my most sincere sympathy to his devoted wife and to his friends and relatives.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ARMSTRONG].

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to add my words of tribute to our late friend and Congressman, JOHN SULLIVAN. While I did not know him as intimately as did my colleagues on the other side of the aisle or my colleague, Mr. CURTIS, of St. Louis, I did have many contacts with him when I, as a member of the General Assembly of Missouri, met frequently with him, with the mayor, the city officials and leading citizens of St. Louis, as they appeared on behalf of the interests of their city. I knew him then and have known him since as an able, conscientious public servant. As has so ably been said by the dean of the Missouri delegation, Mr. CANNON, his friends knew him as a lovable man. His city and the State of Missouri have lost a capable official and a good friend. He will be missed, and we mourn his loss.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MOULDER].

Mr. MOULDER. Mr. Speaker, the sudden and unexpected death of JOHN SULLIVAN was a shock and great loss to his host of friends and the State of Missouri. He served his congressional district, State, and Nation capably, honorably and with great distinction. He was devoted to the problems of the men and women who worked hard for a living. In Congress he was in the forefront at all times to represent and defend the interests of the people. He was a kind and devoted husband and although words cannot ease the grief now suffered by Mrs. Sullivan, I join with my colleagues and his many loyal friends in extending to her our deepest sympathy and understanding of her great loss and bereavement, and our sympathy is extended with deepest sincerity. JOHN SULLIVAN will forever remain in our temple of memories as an exemplary example of character and true friendship.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING].

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, JOHN SULLIVAN'S death was to me a very deep personal shock. My colleagues have well described his deeds. It seems to me well to think briefly of the reason for his deeds. JOHN SULLIVAN was a man of deep and strong spiritual belief; a man whose every act and every thought was governed by his faith. JOHN SULLIVAN was a humble, kindly, Christian gentleman; a man whose loss I feel deeply and very personally, because he was more to me as a help and as a guide in my first year in this Congress than any person living. I have come to know his wife, Lee Sullivan, and respect her for the same reasons I respect him. To her I give my deepest sympathy.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS].

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, in our work here, particularly in these difficult and trying days, there is nothing more satisfying to any of us than the spirit of friendship and fraternity which prevails among the Members of this body on both sides of the aisle. While we are harassed and worried, the consideration of all our colleagues gives us courage, makes us steadfast, and gives us a will to carry on.

I know of no man in this body who more beautifully typified that feeling toward all of his colleagues than did my friend, JOHN SULLIVAN. JOHN SULLIVAN was gentle. He was considerate. He was lovable. Yet he was aggressive and forthright in behalf of his friends, in behalf of his constituency, and in love of his country.

I came to the House on the same day JOHN SULLIVAN came here. I went out with him, and I came back with him. I shall miss him tremendously. The Nation has lost a great citizen, and his wife has lost a loving husband and a fine gentleman. May God bless and keep him.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IRVING].

Mr. IRVING. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for one who has lost a good friend to control those tender emotions that well up and overflow from the sympathetic heart when death has caused real friends to be separated if even only temporarily. It is hard for me, Mr. Speaker, under such circumstances to find the right words to express eloquently enough the grief that is being felt by myself along with the thousands of Congressman JOHN SULLIVAN'S friends who are now mourning his sudden and untimely passing. Surely it can only bring to us a fuller knowledge and a deeper appreciation and understanding of the meaning of service. Yes, his life of unselfish service to his fellowmen should inspire those of us in this great body, the United States House of Representatives, to rededicate our lives to worthy causes that he gave so much of his life to, so that men, women, and children here in our own wonderful country might enjoy through our efforts, a freer, finer, and a happier way of life, as well as helping to bring about a more tolerable life for those elsewhere in this troubled world who have not been so fortunate as our citizenry. He would have us carry on his efforts to alleviate their sufferings and miseries, helping them to gain their freedom from the curses of ignorance, slavery, and domination by godless dictators. Yes, Mr. Speaker, all this he gave of his physical strength, beyond the safety limits, never once heeding a stop sign, thereby taxing his heart, mind, and soul with the critical and terrifying problems of the war years and those that have followed. His efforts to help save those still partially free peoples whose lives have not yet been captured by the unconscionable creatures who would push them over the brink in the abyss of everlasting hopelessness, will be recorded and remembered long, long after we, like our friend, have made our worldly demise.

Mr. Speaker, JOHN SULLIVAN was a man of sterling character and unquestionable ability, whose great faith in his Maker and his Lord never let him swerve away from his high ideals nor waver from his noble purposes. Nor could he, Mr. Speaker, be frightened away from these ideals and purposes by those who might attack him maliciously because of their interest only in special privileges or personal power. He truly was a great representative of all the people. The Christian ideals were born a long time ago, but JOHN SULLIVAN had been quietly practicing them, restating them in modern language and, as I have said previously, he was daily translating them into action in a modern world. We cannot here today too loudly praise this strong and good man for his untiring efforts to bring justice to all, actually making of it a reality wherever possible. Does not such a life reaffirm the dignity of human life along with the positive insistence that no longer shall human life be debased by foreign despots with ideologies contrary to the basic freedoms that our forefathers established and that have always been protected by our fighting men? He believed, as you and I, that no further encroachment upon the liberties of any free people anywhere can be tolerated without further endangering our own way of life. These freedoms and liberties are more necessary to us than the food we eat and more precious than life itself. And that, Mr. Speaker, is how I believe JOHN SULLIVAN felt and lived. True, perhaps, that no statue of him may be raised as was at Bolivar, Mo., in 1948 in the memory and honor of Simon Bolivar, the great South American liberator. Nevertheless, millions of people should be grateful to him for the good and useful work he has performed in their behalf in the greatest legislative body in the world. And in closing, Mr. Speaker, may I extend to his fine and lovely wife, who we know was his true companion and helpmate in all of his work and deliberations, the deepest sympathy in this hour of need for spiritual comfort. To their relatives a kindly word of sympathy as well. In a humble way I have tried to make an expression of my mental appraisal of a man's life that has been truly noble and deserves all of the praise and tributes that have been given here today by his many friends and colleagues. Not only was JOHN SULLIVAN kind in every act and helpful in so many ways to the new Members of Congress, but this same pattern of life was followed so graciously by his wife in the consideration of the many new and unusual problems that face the wives of the new Members when they are transplanted from their old homes to new ones here in the Nation's Capital, far from their families, relatives, and neighbors. So it is with deep feeling, Mr. Speaker, that I speak so intimately and personally of the lives of these friends. One has departed for a better life. The other has been left to carry on with the great courage that I know she possesses.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST].

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, it was with a most profound feeling of sorrow and grief that I learned early this morning of the death of JOHN SULLIVAN. He was one of my very dear friends. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS] referred a moment ago to those bonds of fellowship and friendship which unite us in the House of Representatives. I think those bonds are particularly strong among Members who serve together on a committee of the House. For several years it has been my pleasure to sit very close to JOHN SULLIVAN on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. During that period I learned to know a great many things about him, most of which have been said already by Members of the House from his own State and other States.

Mr. Speaker, no mound of earth can still the voice of JOHN SULLIVAN. I will continue to hear it and to feel the compulsion of his presence on that committee as we deliberate and consider legislation. He was extremely loyal to the work of his committee, as he was to the House of Representatives. It has already been made a matter of record that he had not missed a roll call during the Eighty-first Congress. He was on time always for a hearing of the committee, and whether the committee was in full session considering a bill reported by his own subcommittee, or some other subcommittee, he gave very, very close attention and a great deal of help. Sometimes it is the very small things about a person which endear us to that individual. A year or two ago JOHN SULLIVAN heard me remark in a conversation one day that in my boyhood I tried to have all of my friends and family call me Jim, and from that time on he never addressed me by any other name than Jim. It was something he wanted to do that he thought a friend would appreciate, and he did it from day to day, never failing.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the Members here in expressing our very sincere sympathy to his wife who was such a helpful companion in all the work that he did. Words are rather weak and futile on an occasion of this sort. In such an hour I like to think of the comfort of those words from one of our great hymns:

Abide with me, fast falls the eventide,
The darkness deepens, Lord with me abide.
When other helpers fail and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, Lord, abide with me.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, like all of my colleagues, I was deeply touched when I heard last night of the death of our dear beloved colleague, JOHN SULLIVAN. Quiet and unassuming, a man of tolerance and understanding, his dignity and strength of character impressed him upon all of us. He was an outstanding Member of the House. Not so much by words, but through actions and deeds our late friend, JOHN SULLIVAN, has made his contributions in this body to the best interests of our country, and has left his imprint on the legislative pages of our history. Reference has been made to his deep faith. He exemplified that faith every moment of his life. He was an inspiration to all of us who knew him and who knew of the deep faith of which he was possessed and who knew his fine understanding of his fellow men.

Reference has been made to the few roll calls that he missed, and that he did not miss any roll calls in the Eighty-first Congress. I am satisfied that, while I am not the Great Judge, I have a feeling of confidence that by the noble life he led, when he answers to the final roll call he will be judged "right." The journey through life is only a means to an end, to eternal life in the hereafter with God Himself. If ever a man has taken the journey of life in a manner that he, in the minds of his fellow men will be judged right, in my opinion it is JOHN SULLIVAN.

To his wife who has been an inspiration to him during his life I extend my profound sympathy. To my colleagues from Missouri, the Missouri delegation which has sustained this loss, I also extend my sympathy, and to the people of the district that JOHN SULLIVAN so ably represented. I have lost a personal friend whose memory will always remain with me.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, with the sudden and untimely passing of JOHN SULLIVAN, we are reminded again of the uncertainty of life. We know not the day or the hour.

I, like you, was shocked to learn that our beloved friend, JOHN SULLIVAN, had suddenly passed away last night. I, too, came to the Congress at the same time with JOHN SULLIVAN, the Seventy-seventh Congress, following the election in 1940. We had a very close relationship. We became warm, personal friends. During the latter part of that Congress JOHN SULLIVAN became a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. However, he did not return for the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST], and myself went on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, where we have served ever since. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SULLIVAN] came back to the Congress in the Seventy-ninth Congress. His heart, his interest, and his work were in that great committee, and he again asked that he be permitted to come back on the committee with us. He did return to the committee. During the remainder of the time he served in the Congress he has been an active, forceful member of our committee. Consequently, I had occasion to observe his work and to know something about his loyalty to his work. I have observed his loyalty to the people he represented in his own district. JOHN SULLIVAN had very definite views. He did not hesitate to express himself or let it be known that he felt it deeply and keenly. I have seen him in committee work, subcommittee as well as full committee activities, express his own mind which you will observe from the record he made in Congress was consistent at all times. The members of our committee admired and respected him for it.

I have been on trips on work of the committee with JOHN SULLIVAN and have had occasion to know something about him personally. There is no man with whom I have had the occasion of being associated that I learned to admire and respect more than JOHN SULLIVAN. He was friendly, he was considerate, he respected the views of other men; he showed himself to be not only a very able Representative in the Congress, not only to be loyal to those things in which he believed, but also to be a real American. I was glad mention was made of his appreciation for spiritual values. Not once, but on numerous occasions when we have been together I have observed that at the appropriate time he would arise, and go to mass. He never hesitated or failed to express by his own actions just how much he did appreciate the spiritual side of life.

I join with my colleagues in extending our deepest sympathy to the people of his district, to the fine delegation in Congress from the State of Missouri; and, above all, to his lovely and devoted wife, in their bereavement.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may be permitted to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, JOHN SULLIVAN was a good and great soul.

He was a man of great ability, unsurpassed courage, and unquestioned patriotism.

To his loved ones I extend my deepest sympathy.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of sorrow that I have learned of the passing away of our dear friend and colleague, JOHN B. SULLIVAN, of Missouri.

It has been a pleasure and a privilege to be associated with him in the work of this House and particularly in the work of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The association with him in the work of this great committee gave abundant opportunity to know the sterling qualities that he possessed. He was a man of strong character. He had the courage of his convictions. He was forceful in the presentation of his viewpoints. Aside from his ability, which was always outstanding, he possessed a lovable disposition. He was always kind and considerate toward everyone. Never have I heard him speak harshly nor unkindly. He had respect for the sincerity of those having differing opinions from his own. He claimed the respect of all who knew him because of his own sincerity. He has truly been conscientious in all that he has said and done. He has been faithful in the performance of all his duties as a Member of Congress. His passing from our midst brings a feeling that the country and the congressional district that he has so faithfully served has each suffered a great loss. His memory will linger long and pleasantly with all who knew him.

I trust that the high regard in which he was held by a host of friends will be a source of satisfaction and strength to the loved ones who mourn his passing and that the knowledge of the faith he possessed will sustain them in their hour of bereavement.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, there are some people who, because of the winsomeness of their personality and the strength of their character, win immediate admittance to one's confidence and inner circle of associates. Such a person was our late colleague and friend the Honorable JOHN BERCHMANS SULLIVAN.

I had the opportunity of knowing him only 2 years, but, yet in this short time, I came to look for him on the floor of the House each morning as I always look for those with whom I have become well acquainted and in whom I have reposed great admiration and respect. Maybe it was because of his apparent ill health that I invariably singled him out as among the first to find out how he was feeling on that particular day. In any event, I felt personally privileged in being able to wish him well on each daily meeting with him. I appreciated his friendly interest in me and his willingness always to take at least a brief part of his day to let me know that he recognized my presence.

The world—and, for that matter, the Congress too—has all too few persons with the kindly, human personality of our late colleague. I am advised by those who knew him better than I that his ability in his chosen profession and his services as a public official are as outstanding as was his charming personality itself. These attributes, together with his nobleness of character, his sincerity of purpose, and his acknowledgment of the lordship of his Master, made him one of our finest and best citizens and legislators.

As we miss all good friends, so shall I, together with his host of other friends, miss him. To his loved ones, I extend my most sincere sympathy in this time of their bereavement.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues from Missouri in their expressions of sorrow and in their tribute to a fine friend whose presence we will miss. As one of the four Congressmen from the St. Louis area it was my pleasure to work closely with JOHN SULLIVAN during the Seventy-ninth Congress, again in the Eighty-first Congress and along with other colleagues from his home city I was looking forward to carrying on the same association through the present Congress.

I have known JOHN SULLIVAN for many years. I first became acquainted with him when he came to Washington as a Member of Congress in 1940. I was a secretary on Capitol Hill at that time, but JOHN SULLIVAN was as considerate of me in that capacity as he would have been had I then enjoyed the status of a Member. It was his nature to be friendly and helpful to everyone.

Later on I became closely associated with him in work. Being from adjoining cities we had many of the same problems. He was always a source of help in any emergency and I valued his willingness and his ability to step in and provide the solution for many problems.

JOHN SULLIVAN was a deeply religious man. He had abundant faith in his country and in his fellow man. He was earnest and sincere in everything he undertook. His district has lost a good and faithful servant.

I join every Member of this House in extending most sincere condolences to his wife, who has been so helpful to him in his career.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I have known JOHN SULLIVAN for more than 2 years and served on the same committee with him. I like to think that I was with him on two of the happiest occasions of his life. One was when our committee was sent to Europe. We visited Dublin and the President of Ireland, John A. Costello, and the Prime Minister Sean MacBride entertained our committee at a banquet. They agreed that only those members with Irish names such as Sullivan, Linehan, O'Hara, and McGuire could deliver any speeches. I wish I could have a recording of JOHN SULLIVAN's talk. The title of it was "How Proud I Am To Return to Where I Have Never Been." He really was happy to be in the land of his ancestors.

The other occasion at which John was in the very empyrean was in Rome when we met Pope Pius XII and we all received the papal blessing. John was a Catholic gentleman. Nothing finer had ever happened to him. I remember when the Pope asked John where he came from and in a resonant voice John said, "St. Louis" and the Pope said, "Oh, you come from the President's home State."

Then too, I recall going to St. Louis with the committee and John arranged a reception for us. John surely was proud to represent St. Louis, and we found that the feeling was mutual. The people of St. Louis loved JOHN SULLIVAN.

Others have told of John's excellent record in Congress. Most important of all, John lived a good life.

I shall always cherish his memory.

May his soul rest in peace.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, we members of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee are very sad to learn of the untimely passing of our beloved colleague, Hon. JOHN SULLIVAN.

One of the ways Members really get to know each other well is through the work they do on committees. Mr. SULLIVAN was a great favorite among the members of our committee. He was deeply appreciated by each of us, because of his fairness, his thoroughness, and the valuable contributions he made to each of the subjects we considered during the time he was on our committee. No one could question his motives. No one could ever doubt his sincerity.

John often mentioned to me the fact that a number of his relatives had worked on railroads. He was a true friend to the workingman. The welfare of those who toil he kept in mind at all times. Indeed, the district JOHN SULLIVAN represented was very fortunate to be represented by him. He was true to the people he represented. His district and his great city of St. Louis as well as Missouri will miss his competency and his untiring and successful efforts.

As one enters the State capitol in North Carolina, as I recall, he sees the words "To be rather than to seem." I know of no man these words are more applicable to than to John. He was modest, gentle, and genuine. He was completely without pretense. He acted no borrowed parts.

We all extend to his wife, to whom he was truly devoted, to the rest of his family and friends our deepest sympathy in his passing.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, in the untimely and unexpected passing last night of our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. SULLIVAN, I have sustained a real personal loss. JOHN B. SULLIVAN and I have been close friends since the convening of the Seventy-ninth Congress. He was an able, patriotic gentleman, always a credit to his constituency, to the State of Missouri, and to the people of this Nation. I have always found him kindly, tolerant, and intensely devoted to his duties as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and of this House of Representatives. To his devoted wife and loved ones, I express my deepest sympathy upon their loss.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, all of us have been deeply shocked and saddened by the sudden death this last evening of our colleague, JOHN B. SULLIVAN.

My service in the House commenced with him in the Seventy-seventh Congress, and it was my privilege to have served with him on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

It is in committee work that the true worth and value of a Member is often best evaluated. Such experience, and the association which one has in the investigation trips of the committee, affords one the opportunity to know something of the spiritual and mental makeup of our colleagues. In the case of JOHN SULLIVAN, it gave me the opportunity of visiting in his home city of St. Louis, where I learned the affection, esteem, and respect in which he was held.

A year ago last September we were also together on an extensive investigation trip to Europe, involving phases of our committee work. I recall that on our trip we stopped in Dublin, Ireland, and I remember the pleasure of our colleague in being in Dublin and of the speech he made at the dinner given in honor of the committee by officials of that country. His remarks were expressive of an American of Irish descent when he said: "I have returned to whence I have never been."

JOHN SULLIVAN had an excellent legal education. He had many years of active practice, and his training and experience were of great benefit to his constituents and to his colleagues, both in committee and in the House.

He was active, as a World War I veteran, in the American Legion, as well as in the civic, fraternal, and political life of his community.

He was also a devout Roman Catholic and an active member of various lay organizations of his church. He practiced the principles of his religion in his everyday life, and no one could help but be impressed by his conduct and his speech, for his actions were that of a distinguished Christian gentleman.

My sympathies go to his charming and devoted wife, and to the members of his family. To them, and to his colleagues who have served with him, I wish to say that it is a comfort to have had life made richer by knowing and having been associated with JOHN SULLIVAN.

May his soul rest in eternal peace.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, as I drove up to the Capitol this morning the flags were flying at half staff. JOHN SULLIVAN, of Missouri, although in the prime of life, had left these Halls. No more were we to enjoy his association, his kindly smile, his friendly greeting. I felt as I gazed upon those flags that here was an exemplification of the loss of a friend. Not only was there a personal loss to me but to the district and State he served, and the Nation.

I did not know JOHN SULLIVAN well during the first few years he served here. It was only last year that I was with him to any great extent. In recent months we had on many occasions discussed matters of mutual concern. I always found him to be trustworthy and sincere. He was zealous in the interest of those he served.

JOHN SULLIVAN was blessed by having a charming, gracious, and devoted helpmate. She worked tirelessly as a member of his office staff. Her fine personality was a real asset. Both JOHN SULLIVAN and Leonor Sullivan loved people. They were happiest when together in the company of friends. My heart goes out to her as she continues down life's journey without the helpful counsel and companionship of our beloved colleague.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints on the part of the House to attend the funeral the following Members: Mr. CANNON, Mr. SHORT, Mr. JONES of Missouri, Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri, Mr. CARNAHAN, Mr. BOLLING, Mr. IRVING, Mr. MAGEE, Mr. MOULDER, Mr. WELCH, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. CURTIS of Missouri.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 1951

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Reverend Leonard H. Flisher, St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Wallingford, Conn., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, who art the ruler of all mankind, we commend to Thee all who are engaged in the government of this Nation. Let us not forget that this place and power have come from Thee, and that we have a sacred trust to administer in Thy name. We humbly pray that they may be used by Thee to enact such legislation as will promote the welfare of Thy people, the relief of the oppressed, the help for the poor, the correction of social wrongs. Save us from pride and arrogance that we may see Thy purposes clearly and follow Thy will without fear. We ask this in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 342 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] to kindly take the chair at this time.

(Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts assumed the chair.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

SPEAKER SAM RAYBURN

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 108) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the felicitations of the House of Representatives are hereby cordially extended to its distinguished Speaker, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, who has served in the high office of Speaker of the House of Representatives longer than any other individual in American history.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives hereby acclaims the manner in which the Honorable SAM RAYBURN has steadfastly maintained and added new luster to the high traditions of the great office of Speaker of the House, and has consistently employed his great abilities, his rare parliamentary skill, and his fairness and integrity in the service of this House and his country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, for any man to be elected to the House of Representatives by the people of his district is in itself a great honor.

To be elevated by the Members of the House to the Speakership is an outstanding honor, which has been conferred upon only 44 men from the beginnings of this legislative body in 1789.

But to be retained and to serve in that post longer than any other person since the organization of the Congress under our Constitution is the unique and distinctive position which our Speaker attained yesterday.

Such an occasion, which makes this a significant date in the history of the House of Representatives and of our country, cannot be permitted to pass without note. I know that the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, the gentleman from Texas, from an innate sense of modesty and his usual dislike for personal glorification, would rather let it pass unobserved. But this is one matter on which the Chair must be overruled by the unanimous desire of the Members.

For he has achieved a record unsurpassed—one to be set down in the annals of our Nation, for the knowledge of all posterity.

And this becomes all the more worthy of special recognition when we realize that the Congress of the United States stands today as one of the few remaining forums for expression of the will of a free people through their democratically elected Representatives.

Until yesterday the record of service as Speaker was held by that distinguished patriot, Henry Clay, of Kentucky, who occupied the office at intervals of the Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Eighteenth Congresses, between November 4, 1811, and March 4, 1825. The actual number of days served in the office by Speaker Clay were 3,056½.

The gentleman from Texas, whom we honor, first became Speaker on September 16, 1940, at the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, succeeding the late William B. Bankhead, and was reelected to the office in every Congress since with the exception of the Eightieth. On Monday he tied Mr. Clay's record. As we convene today, his days in office number 3,058, surpassing that record.

It is always the fond habit of historians to speak of the "giants" of an earlier day; "giants," that is, in a political sense. The names of Clay, of Thomas B. Reed of Maine, "Joe" Cannon of Illinois, Champ Clark of Missouri, Nicholas Longworth of Ohio, Martin of Massachusetts stands out among them.

Not in derogation, but in fact, do we claim that the gentleman from Texas who now joins their famous ranks exceeds them in stature of accomplishment.

The burdens of the Speakership today are heavier than ever before in history.

The House is larger in membership. The volume of its business is greater. Its sessions are longer. The pressures are more demanding.

Yet, in the face of this great responsibility, Speaker RAYBURN carries on from day to day through the years with dignity, with fairness, and a calmness under stress which is a marvel of endurance and a tribute to his spirit.

Speaker RAYBURN, in fact, seems to embody in his conduct of the office all of those qualities which Mr. Clay himself laid down as ideal in one who would properly fulfill the duties of Speaker. Those duties, he is quoted in Hinds' Precedents:

Enjoin promptitude and impartiality in deciding the various questions of order as they arise; firmness and dignity in his deportment toward the individual Members, and the best arrangement and distribution of the talent of the House, in its numerous subdivisions, for the dispatch of the public business, and the fair exhibition of every subject presented for consideration.

They especially required of him, in those moments of agitation from which no deliberative assembly is always exempted, to remain cool and unshaken amidst all the storms of debate, carefully guarding the preservation of the permanent laws and rules of the House from being sacrificed to temporary passions, prejudice or interests.

In his administration Speaker RAYBURN likewise meets the specifications laid down for occupants of this office by Representative James Daniel Richardson of Tennessee in offering a resolution of thanks to Speaker David B. Henderson of Iowa at the close of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

The position of the Speaker of the House—

he said:

is both judicial and political. It is judicial in this, that the occupant of the chair is at all times bound by and obedient to a code of rules prescribed for the government and control of the House, and in the execution of which he is but its organ and servant.

It is at the same time political. In the very nature of things, he is expected in his position to look carefully to the interest of his party, and while he is to administer the affairs of his great office in a manner to best promote the public weal, it is not expected that he will fail to use all legitimate and proper methods to build up his party and fortify it against attack.

Only two Members here today have served longer in the House than our Speaker. They are the venerable dean of this body, ADOLPH J. SABATH, of Illinois, and our other octogenarian friend, BOB DOUGHTON, of North Carolina.

Seven Speakers of the House and five Presidents of the United States have come and gone since SAM RAYBURN first took the oath of office as a Member of this House on March 4, 1913, nearly 38 years ago.

Thus the tenure of the gentleman from Texas—may it long continue—spans whole eras in our history. His role in the service of the Nation is cast against the panoramic background of great events.

His period of service encompasses the Mexican border incidents; the First World War; the so-called period of normalcy which followed it; the dark days of the depression and bonus army march on Washington; the period of recovery and reform; the crisis of Pearl Harbor, the great national defense effort it evoked; World War II and its victories abroad; the post-war era, and now the time of new international tension, and threat of a third world war from another tyrannical force arisen in the east.

It covers the term of President Woodrow Wilson, his New Freedom, his creation of the Federal Reserve System and other notable domestic contributions and America's tragic failure, too, to enter the League of Nations.

It embraces the era of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, the "business as usual" calm that prevailed before the storm of economic disaster broke upon the country.

It includes the thrilling and active days of the New Deal under President Franklin D. Roosevelt and latter phases devoted to vital problems of war. It now includes the masterful leadership of President Harry S. Truman.

Few men are accorded the privilege of partaking in the actual making of history over such a substantial and eventful portion of a nation's life. Speaker RAYBURN has played—and is today playing—a significant and influential part in the affairs of our modern times.

Through it all, SAM RAYBURN has served his country faithfully and well with that reticence, honesty, and straightforward dealing which are the stamp of his character. He seeks no publicity, he avoids social glamor, shuns personal vainglory. He indulges in no long speeches. He speaks infrequently, but when he does, what he says is important and eloquent. His accomplishments in statecraft are in the field of action and not of words.

With all of the prestige of his position in the high councils of the Nation, SAM RAYBURN is unchanged, except in the growth of his wisdom and experience, from the young man sent to Washington by the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Texas. He continues to serve their interests—even as he serves the national interest—as he now begins his twentieth term.

Without affectation, completely devoid of pomp, he reflects the simplicity and directness of both his upbringing in a large family of godly pioneering stock and of the soil from which they sprang. SAM RAYBURN as a boy labored in the fields of Texas and it is to his farm that he loves to return at every opportunity this busy life offers.

I know of no finer tribute that can be paid the Speaker today than to repeat the words uttered by a fellow Texan on the occasion of a testimonial to Mr. RAYBURN last year when the Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN said:

The greatness of this man is in his plain dignity, the restraint with which he exercises power, the respect he holds for an opponent's views, the humility with which he carries his responsibilities, and in his deep and abiding faith in our democratic processes and in the collective wisdom of the Congress as the direct representatives of the people.

I believe it was Alexander Hamilton who said:

"The amelioration of the condition of mankind and the increase of human happiness ought to be the leading objects of every political institution, and the aim of every individual according to the measure of his power, in the situation he occupies."

SAM RAYBURN has always acted toward those noble ends.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] kindly take the chair?

(Mr. HALLECK assumed the chair.)

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to our distinguished colleague, our outstanding former Speaker and now minority leader, my dear friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to join with the majority leader in paying our sincere respects to a distinguished leader who has long been in the public service and who has served his State and country with great fidelity.

While we, of course, occasionally differ with some of his views, there is one common ground of unity for all Members of the House, Republicans and Democrats alike. We all honor and respect him.

The House of Representatives is unquestionably the most powerful legislative body in all the world, and to be elected Speaker of this great legislative body is a tribute, as our majority leader has well said, which comes to very few men in the history of our country, 44, to be exact. To be able to hold the position of Speaker for over 8 years, a longer period than any other individual in the history of our country, is indeed a rare honor. We do well to pause for a few moments in commemoration of this historic event to express our appreciation to the man who has attained this high honor. The man who previously held the record was Henry Clay, one of the outstanding statesmen of our history, a man so brilliant and so widely known that when he came to the Congress he was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives during his first term. He was a great Speaker and a great American.

Now we have a new long-term Speaker. The record that has stood for years is gone. A man for whom I have genuine respect and whose friendship through the years I have cherished, SAM RAYBURN, of Texas, has placed his name on the top of the roll of Speakers. We honor him and pay just tribute. He is broad enough, tolerant enough, and American enough to know that we all cannot be expected to agree with him on all these great questions that are debated in these historic Halls. We all have our opinions; we express them and debate the issues of our times. We offer amendments to legislation, and out of the legislative process in this great representative body comes the final decision. That is the American way of doing business. It is the American way which has appealed to people all over the world, and it is the way in which liberty has been maintained in America. It is a way which must be preserved if we are to remain a free people. We can pay our respects and express our devotion to a man, and yet when the time comes for opposition we must express our own convictions. We must fight for what we believe is best for the general welfare of our country. We cannot have, we must not have, a one-party system.

Today partisanship fades; we join with our good friends on the other side of the aisle in tribute to a great leader and a good Speaker. I am sure that in commemorating this day, which may well be known as Speaker RAYBURN's day, now that the record of service in the Speaker's chair has been broken, it will cause no one too much concern if, say, 2 years from now, we usher in a new era—an era in which we will bring new conditions, new marks to shoot at.

I might say that yesterday when they were paying just honors to our beloved Speaker at the White House, I was at a little bit of a loss to understand my presence. I had a little guilty feeling that these exercises might have been held 2 years ago if it had not been for me. But these little conflicts, these little differences and upsets are what make America the greatest country in all the world. While Democrats and Republicans and independents may fight for their own viewpoints, which are so precious to the people of our country, we can pay respect and do honor to a great American and a great legislator. SAM RAYBURN is serving our country to the best of his fine ability in a position of the highest honor with fairness and impartiality. In the final analysis that resolves the great question of whether a man is a good Speaker or a great Speaker—his ability to be fair and impartial and to interpret the rules and do justice to all, even if it be adverse, as it must be at times, to his own party and his own convictions.

In my judgment our Speaker will go down in history as a man who has not only held this post for the longest period of time but as one who has filled his position with ability and distinction. To him on this day go my heartiest personal felicitations, and I am sure the felicitations of all Republicans as well as Democrats.

(Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.)

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I came to this House 44 years ago, in the Sixtieth Congress. I have served under 10 different Speakers. When I came to this House the great Uncle Joe Cannon, who had already attained the reputation and the title "the czar of the House," was the Speaker. His powers were unlimited. He was Speaker as well as chairman of the Committee on Rules. He appointed all committees and only such men were appointed to the important legislative committees as he believed would carry out his policies and his views. The Rules Committee, unlike today, had only three members: Uncle Joe Cannon, as chairman; John Dalzell, a Republican; and John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, the Democratic member—a great statesman. I frequently made the statement on the floor of this House that Uncle Joe Cannon, for some reason or other during the days that he presided, seemed to have bad vision in his right eye. He could never see those on the right—the Democratic side of the aisle—but I can testify to the fact that his sight in both eyes was excellent in the evening. Speaker Cannon served four terms, from 1903 to 1911.

During his last term, in 1910, a great fight took place to liberate the House from the dictatorial domination of Uncle Joe. We succeeded in amending the rules of the House, taking from the Speaker the great power he had been exercising. In fact, there were 25 liberal and progressive Republicans who joined with my Democratic colleagues in insisting that the Members of the House should have a far greater voice in its deliberations; that they should have the privilege and the right to vote on important legislation reported out by its legislative committees, which privilege was formerly denied them under the czarist rule of Speaker Cannon.

It was in this revision of the rules of the House that provision was made for a committee on committees to nominate and recommend the membership of the various legislative committees to the House for its approval.

In 1911 the Democratic Party became the majority party, and that great Roman from Missouri, Champ Clark, noted as a lawyer, statesman, and a great American, and an intimate friend of mine, was chosen as our Speaker. He just escaped the Presidency when he failed of nomination in the convention of 1912. Champ Clark served four terms as Speaker.

He was succeeded by Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts, a splendid gentleman, high-minded and fair. He was typical of that staid New England stock so prominent throughout the years in our national legislative halls. He served until 1925 when he was elected to the United States Senate by the good people of Massachusetts. He was not the first Speaker, however, to be elected to the Senate.

I might say, without intending any reflection on this important body, that I hope our Speaker, if he so aspires, may some day be honored by the good citizens of his beloved Texas by being chosen as one of their Senators in the upper chamber. However, I do not want to infer that we want to lose him as our Speaker. I hope he will remain with us in this capacity for many more years.

Mr. Gillett was followed by that splendid American, Nicholas Longworth of Ohio. Nick, as he was affectionately called by his colleagues, was a colorful presiding officer, efficient, stern at times, a heavy wielder of the gavel during the more hectic hours of debate, but friendly and considerate of all. He was the son-in-law of that colorful and greatly admired President, Teddy Roosevelt. Longworth served three terms.

In 1931, in the interest of the country, the Democrats came into control of the the House again. John Nance Garner, of Texas, was chosen Speaker. He was a true son of the expansive Texas plains. Small in stature but a giant in intellect, his splendid capabilities as a leader and statesman are well known to many today. He became Vice President when the great Franklin D. Roosevelt was elected President and assumed office in 1933. Jack Garner is still with us in spirit as he enjoys his remaining years in the sanctuary of his beloved surroundings in Uvalde, Tex. Following the busy hours of the day in which he surveys the activity of his great domain, I understand he still yields to the temptation of joining with his neighbors of an evening in the great American pastime in which I know he was always so proficient.

Mr. Garner was succeeded by Henry G. Rainey, a great man from my own State of Illinois the greatest State in the Union notwithstanding the claims of Texas—the State which gave to the Nation the immortal Abraham Lincoln, Stephen A. Douglas, and many other illustrious statesmen and leaders. A great liberal, possessed of remarkable ability, Henry Rainey was a tower of strength in expediting the progressive legislative program urged and advocated by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Henry Rainey, with his shock of long, white hair, his broad-ribboned flowing black bow tie, his kindly face, and his sincere and heart-warming smile, was one of the most lovable characters it has ever been my pleasure to know. I felt honored, indeed, when he asked me to conduct his campaign for the Speakership against the powerful Texas delegation who were behind Mr. McDuffie. These characteristics, coupled with his remarkable knowledge of legislation and legislative procedures, made him one of the truly popular Speakers of all time. His tenure as Speaker was to prove all too short-lived. The grave problems confronting us during the depression years exacted its toll. He was called to his Maker on August 19, 1934, in his second year of the occupancy of the chair.

Mr. Rainey was succeeded by another outstanding Member of this House and one of the most popular Speakers of all time—my close friend Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, a great liberal and a great Democrat. Tall and stately, with an almost sad and wistful expression on his face most of the time, this rugged pioneer from the hill country of Tennessee, came to Congress in 1909, 2 years after my service commenced. He was an indefatigable worker, thorough in every great problem he tackled, laboring diligently in behalf of his constituency, while assuming more and more responsibility in cooperation with the leaders of his party. His great talent and ability was recognized by his Democratic colleagues when they selected him as their candidate for Speaker upon the death of Mr. Rainey. He, too, had given of his strength and vitality so greatly during those trying years that he was called by death on June 4, 1936.

Mr. Byrns was succeeded by the gentleman from Alabama, William Brockman Bankhead, a highly cultured, well-educated, and splendid American, one of the great intellectuals to hold that office, a man of great ability. He died on September 15, 1940. Thus, in the short span of 7 years three of our Speakers passed away, Rainey, Byrns, and Bankhead.

The present occupant of the chair, our beloved Speaker, SAM RAYBURN, assumed that office on September 16, 1940, and has held the position ever since with the exception of the 2 years of the Eightieth Congress which unfortunately brought about a Republican majority in the House. As I view it, the Republican membership could hardly have done otherwise than to elect the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] as their Speaker. He was eminently fair, understanding, and considerate of those of us on the right and a very able Speaker. I hope as I have frequently said on this floor and I repeat here today, that I hope he will continue as minority leader for many, many years.

SAM RAYBURN, our beloved Speaker, now exceeds the record of that great Democrat, Henry Clay. I shall not go into Clay's record or length of service. Historians have recorded his great service in words far more adequate than I can express. In addition to Henry Clay we have had such great Speakers as Taylor, Polk, Colfax, Blaine, and Crisp. Although I did not serve with all of those I have mentioned—I have served with only 10—I can state truthfully and honestly, having known all the 10 well—that they were all fine Americans, and very able and efficient Speakers. Unfortunately I could not agree with all of them at all times. That would be expecting too much in these critical times. However, without in any sense attempting to discount the evaluations of historians of the past or present as to the capabilities of former occupants of this distinguished post, I feel safe in saying that our present Speaker, SAM RAYBURN, in whom is embodied the wisdom, the patriotism, the statesmanship, the ability, and the lofty character of all his noted predecessors, is the greatest of them all. No more fitting tribute to the sterling character and outstanding ability of this great Texan, and the high regard in which he has been held by his colleagues throughout the years, could be paid SAM RAYBURN than the knowledge that he has been retained as their leader and Speaker for a period longer than any man in the history of Congress.

Every Member of this House recognizes the lovable traits of our distinguished colleague: his rare ability to control the flow of legislation; his patient and calm handling of the more turbulent moments of debate; the fatherly advice and the care he tenders the neophyte in our midst; the outstanding leadership he displays when crises arise; his thorough understanding of parliamentary procedures; the expeditious manner in which he renders decisions on the most intricate points of order raised in this House.

Working hand in hand with our President and the duly-constituted leadership today, he has assumed a vital place in carrying forward our complex program in international affairs, in which it has been my privilege and honor to cooperate with him, with the result that legislation necessary to its progress and development has encountered little delay in this body. A stanch advocate of cooperation with our friendly nations throughout the world, he has risen to the heights in the test of real leadership and action.

It is a further tribute to our Speaker that only yesterday the President of these United States called him to the White House for the purpose of commending him upon the attainment of this unusual record, and presenting him with a rare gavel, the instrument of his authority, fashioned from wood taken from the White House during the present remodeling program.

SAM RAYBURN, I salute you. You are deserving in full measure of all the kindly words that are spoken about you on this floor today. You stand as a symbol of the fine democracy that is ours. Those of us who have had the great pleasure of knowing you and working with you throughout the years, as well as the younger Members in point of service in this House, Republicans and Democrats alike, join in wishing you well on this memorable occasion. As our former Speaker, Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, so aptly phrased it, you retain the respect and confidence of all the Republican Members.

You have the earnest and sincere wishes of us all for many more years of loyal, able, efficient, and enjoyable service in the Congress of the United States. As I stated earlier, it is my personal hope that you will remain as our Speaker for years to come, and that I might be spared a few more years to serve with you in this Chamber.

May the good Lord continue to bless you with good health, the strength, the courage, and the desire to carry on as a leader of men in these legislative halls for the good of all mankind.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join with my colleagues here today in paying tribute to our distinguished and beloved Speaker, Mr. RAYBURN, for his outstanding, remarkable, extraordinary services as a Member of this House, and also as its presiding officer.

It has been my privilege to serve in this House with as many Speakers as any present Member save and except my dear friend, the grand young man from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who served 4 years under the Speakership of the late distinguished Speaker Cannon. I have served with nine Speakers. I cast my first vote in this House to elect that great American Champ Clark as Speaker 40 years ago the 4th of next March.

Mr. Clark was succeeded by Speaker Gillett; then came Longworth, Garner, Rainey, Byrns, Bankhead, Rayburn, Martin, and again Rayburn.

Mr. RAYBURN has served longer in the exalted position he now holds than any other man in the history of our Government. Few men in the life of the Nation have rendered a service so useful and so outstanding or have fashioned a record so brilliantly and so romantic as that of our distinguished Speaker. He rendered great service in this House before he was elected Speaker, as a member of and chairman of the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I understand also that as a businessman back in Texas he is among the most successful. Evidently he must be very popular. The first test of a man's real worth is his standing and his usefulness as a citizen. It is a great tribute to Mr. RAYBURN'S worth and to his ability that he has served as Speaker longer than any man in the history of our country. Those who have visited Texas and have seen his countless acres, his numberless herds and bleating flocks, tell me that he is one of the most successful businessmen in the Lone Star State. So, in every category of life, his standing as a citizen, as a statesman, as a parliamentarian, and as a great Speaker, his record is of the highest order. I cannot say quite so much for him as a father, but he is young, he is handsome, he is popular, and vigorous, and we still have hopes in that respect. The same is equally true of our distinguished and beloved ex-Speaker, the Honorable JOSEPH MARTIN, of Massachusetts.

In conclusion I wish to say that Speaker RAYBURN'S kindness to me, his helpfulness in my work in my humble service here has been of great assistance to me in the labors I have endeavored to perform. In my 40 years of public service here no one has rendered a service more useful, more able and outstanding than our great Speaker, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN. My earnest hope is that he may have many years yet to preside over the deliberations of this House, and that after retirement he may have many years of happiness on his farm back in Texas, and that when his life's work is done, the last chapter of the book in his life is written, the book is closed, and the curtain falls, that he will receive the welcome approbation "Come ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I find myself unable to resist this opportunity to add my brief remarks to the richly merited tributes which have been paid to our esteemed Speaker here today. May I say he is a man with whom I have developed through the years a close personal friendship, a friendship that transcends partisanship, yet a friendship which to my mind is clear proof that while as Democrats and Republicans we may disagree, and on occasion rather vigorously state our positions, we yet may be fine friends in the fellowship that is characteristic of the House of Representatives.

I agree with what our distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] said, that it is a high honor and a great responsibility to serve as a Representative of the American people in the Congress of the United States. It is a privilege that comes to comparatively few. How much greater, then, is the distinction when one attains the speakership of the House of Representatives, a position but twice removed from the highest office it is within the power of the Nation to bestow. Add to this distinction a period of service unsurpassed in the history of our Republic and you begin to measure the mettle of the man we honor here today.

If Speakers have been rare in our history, so, too, is the man who combines the qualities necessary in the character of anyone who aspires to this high office. He must be fair and just, a man of impartiality, of integrity, and with a deep sense of honor. He must be a man of honesty and courage, a man admired by his colleagues for his ability, his sound judgment, and his capacity for leadership. He must be a man who, having earned the speakership through an extended display of such qualities in the House of Representatives, yet retains the common understanding so necessary to any Representative of the people.

SAM RAYBURN is certainly such a man. He has won and held the affection and the admiration of his colleagues in this chamber and of his constituents back home in Texas. Down through the years he has demonstrated his willingness and his ability to serve the Nation in his capacity as Speaker of the House while continuing to serve the people of his district with all the energy and the devotion at his command.

The speakership is an emblem of integrity, a badge of honor, and a hallmark of strength tempered by justice.

If to serve your people and your Nation is its own reward, then certainly SAM RAYBURN is today one of the richest men in the Republic.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who represents today the district the distinguished Henry Clay represented in his time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, today the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] will have served as Speaker of the House of Representatives longer than any other man.

Henry Clay was Speaker of the House for 8 years 4 months and 11 days. Mr. Clay held this record for a century and a quarter. He resigned as Speaker to become Secretary of State, an office of equal dignity and difficulty in that day and this.

Since I have the honor to represent the district which elected Mr. Clay to the House of Representatives, I am glad to join in the tributes that will be paid to the Speaker of the House. This district is still called the old Ashland district from the name of Mr. Clay's home place which recently has been made a public shrine through the efforts of the Henry Clay Memorial Association.

The present esteemed Speaker has surpassed but in no way eclipsed the record of the great Speaker of yesterday. Certainly no Kentuckian who enjoys basking in the reflected glory of the fame of Henry Clay will begrudge the honor paid to the distinguished son of Tennessee and Representative of Texas. Mr. RAYBURN has expounded the theory of national unity as truly as did his eminent predecessor who said: "I know no South nor North nor East nor West—only my country."

The Speaker of today has honored in every way and has utilized for the best interest of the country through practical statesmanship this spot that Henry Clay immortalized.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas, vice chairman of the Texas delegation [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I realize my complete inadequacy in trying to add to any of these tributes which have been paid to our great Texan and great Speaker, Speaker RAYBURN. However, it is a real pleasure to say a few words in behalf of the Texas delegation and, of course, in behalf of myself. It was my privilege to know quite a bit about Speaker RAYBURN long before I came here. I was born in his congressional district. I attended college in one of the towns in his congressional district. Our districts join. Incidentally, I might say it has always been interesting to me that he came to the House of Representatives the year I was born.

I might add it is my privilege to serve on the same committee on which he served for 24 years. Often his name is mentioned in our committee. His policies in running our committee when he was chairman are referred to as the best of examples. I know I have heard Representative CROSSER, our present chairman, and Representative WOLVERTON, our ranking minority member, mention him frequently in terms most favorable.

Speaker RAYBURN is loved most by those who know him best. For twenty-odd years I have heard it said at times by some who might not agree with him—everybody likes him—that they were going to beat Representative RAYBURN. People who had uttered this just do not know the man. They have not seen him in action. It was my privilege back in 1932, as I recall, to hear him making a speech to his people in one of his campaigns. The people in his home area have the same confidence, if not more, in SAM that we here have—complete and full confidence it is. And when he comes to his people to give an account of his stewardship, it requires but a few minutes for any person who might be wavering from the RAYBURN bandwagon, let us say, to be right back in line. Why is that so? Because he is so honest, he is so sincere, he is so able, he is so direct in stating the facts about his work and efforts. He does not hedge; he does not evade issues. His people know he takes seriously their problems, that he never shuns work or his duty. The degree of esteem in which he is held by so many people all over Texas is the very highest. They have the completest confidence in him that people can have in a man. Indeed, he is fully trusted, for his 43 or 44 years in public office establish clearly that he is trustworthy.

I have heard Speaker RAYBURN say something that has impressed me many times. He has said if a man has common sense, he has about all the sense there is. We here know and the people of Texas know that SAM RAYBURN is endowed with the best of judgment and the highest degree of good common sense. Yes, I too, have heard him say in the last day or two that he thanks his God daily that he has confidence in people, and the great reward that he has received thereby is that people have confidence in him. One of the things that has impressed me most, as I have observed Speaker RAYBURN throughout the years is that he has been right on nearly all the big issues that have affected and confronted our country. He has been, in aviation language, on the beam at all times during his many years of public service.

One of the best tests of a truly great man in my opinion is the percentage of the time particularly on vital public issues he has been right. Tried by that standard, SAM RAYBURN certainly measures up to our greatest statesmen throughout the history of this Republic and this is one of the reasons why Texans certainly have great and unusual confidence in the man whom we are all honoring today.

Speaker RAYBURN has been referred to today as a modest man. This is true; he is incapable of acting a borrowed part. As one enters the State Capitol of North Carolina, he observes the motto, "To be rather than to seem." SAM RAYBURN has lived a life as a private citizen and a public servant that in my judgment can be accurately and appropriately described by these words.

Speaker RAYBURN is in no sense a selfish man. His life has been characterized by trying to help people by the thousands, and by the hundreds of thousands. He has helped humanity much. It has been said that what a man does for himself dies when he dies, but what a man does for others lives on after he has gone. I am aware that every Member here knows that there will be benefits people of our Nation will be deriving from now on, which are due to the efforts of our great statesman, SAM RAYBURN. Indeed, if it is true that all a man actually has is what he has given away, what he has done for others, Speaker RAYBURN, as a result of the many years of successful efforts he has put forth in behalf of others, is a rich man indeed, as the gentleman who just preceded me also ably said.

The Texas delegation and 8,000,000 Texans are justly proud that our own Texan, SAM RAYBURN, now has served longer as Speaker than any man ever served. We salute and honor him as you do and we hope and pray that his future years will be as he would have them.

I repeat what I said in the beginning of this short statement, that those who know Speaker RAYBURN best love him most. Texans know him well; they love him much. There are no 20 Members of Congress who respect, love, and appreciate Speaker RAYBURN more than the 20 Members from Texas who are his colleagues and who serve with him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, Representative SAM RAYBURN, of Texas, the Speaker, was interviewed on the radio on the occasion of his passing the record of Henry Clay as Speaker of the House of Representatives. I ask unanimous consent to insert the text of the interview in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

(Speaker SAM RAYBURN was interviewed on Capitol Cloakroom Tuesday night, January 30, 1951, by CBS correspondents Griffing Bancroft, Eric Sevareid, and Walter L. Cronkite, Jr. Following is the text of the interview:)

Mr. BANCROFT. Speaker RAYBURN, welcome to Capitol Cloakroom. And especially welcome on this occasion—for just today you passed the record of Henry Clay, who was Speaker of the House for 3,056 days, between 1811 and 1825. Today was your three thousand and fifty-seventh day in that high office which you first assumed in 1940, after having been in Congress since 1913. So that means you now have been Speaker longer than any other man in our history—and how does that feel to you?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, somebody asked me one day when I first thought I'd like to be Speaker of the House of Representatives in Washington, and I told him as long as I could remember. And since that ambition has been achieved, I'm happy on the occasion and feel grateful to the Representatives of the people that they have placed this high confidence in me. And to have an ambition satisfied and be as high as you want to go or think you would ever go is very gratifying and very satisfying.

Mr. BANCROFT. You mean you are a politician with no further ambitions. Is that correct?

Speaker RAYBURN. That is correct.

Mr. CRONKITE. Mr. Speaker, you say that you have had this ambition to be Speaker of the House as lohg as you can remember. Well, I believe you served in the Texas Legislature before you came to Washington. Did you have the ambition to come to Washington and serve as Speaker of the House here when you were first elected speaker of the Texas Legislature? I believe you were one of the youngest speakers of the Texas Legislature.

Speaker RAYBURN. Long before that, Mr. Cronkite. When I was in the cotton fields down in Texas I think I said I wanted to go to the Legislature of Texas and be the speaker of the house, and I was and still am the youngest man (or was the youngest man) who was ever speaker of the Texas Legislature. And I was elected speaker 4 days after my twenty-ninth birthday. And then when I was 30 I was elected here, and I never turned that ambition loose all the years that followed until I achieved this place.

Mr. BANCROFT. Mr. RAYBURN, President Truman has described the office of Speaker of the House as the second most powerful office in the Nation. What do you regard as the principal duties of your job as Speaker?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, a great deal depends on the power and the influence of the Speakership as to who the man is that occupies that position. The Speaker of the House is a Member of the House. The Vice President is not a Member of the Senate. The Speaker's power comes, I think, very greatly because the old days of pounding the desk and telling people where to head in, I think, have passed. My experience with the Speakership has been that you cannot lead people by trying to drive them. By persuasion and the best reason is the only way you can lead. In this way the Speaker has influence and power in the House.

The committee on committees are kind enough to ask the majority leader and the Speaker about their suggestions for memberships on the various committees. The Speaker has the power of recognition. A great deal of the business of the House of Representatives is done by unanimous consent. And the Speaker is the only one who can recognize a man for that, and then we have on every other Monday what we call recognition for suspension of the rules. That's entirely in the hands of the Speaker. So, adding all these things together, why, the Speakership, of course, is a powerful position if the occupant of it knows how to deal with people.

Mr. BANCROFT. Which we know you do.

Mr. SEVAREID. Mr. Speaker, contrary to widespread opinion, the House actually gets through its business with much more efficiency and far greater saving of time than the Senate does, at least to my observation. Is that due to rules of recent time through your tenure as Speaker? What is the main reason?

Speaker RAYBURN. No; I wouldn't think so. The House has had definite rules for many, many years. We do have more definite rules than the Senate. When a bill comes into the House, instead of someone having the right to get on the floor and speak all day, we bring in a rule that provides that the time shall be so many hours, equally divided between the majority and the minority. They yield that time, and no one can speak except in that time under general debate. Then we read the bill for amendment, and anyone can offer an amendment and speak for 5 minutes on that. In that way we save time and expedite the business, because with 435 Members, if we did like they did with 96 in the Senate, why, it would be a pretty long session every year, and it would be impossible to get any legislation through.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, Mr. Speaker, we watch you from the news galleries up above your rostrum and watch you wield a pretty heavy gavel sometimes. One thing that I've always wondered about—it looks sometimes like 9 or 10 people are on their feet all at once asking for recognition. How do you decide whom you recognize in those cases?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, there are times when one of the men is on his feet asking to be recognized to promote the legislative program. The others are on their feet just asking recognition to speak for a minute, or 5 minutes or something of that kind. It's one of those things that you have to be selective in.

Mr. BANCROFT. In other words you facilitate the legislative process by recognizing the man who is going to tend to business and speak on the legislation.

Speaker RAYBURN. That's entirely correct.

Mr. CRONKITE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a great deal of your success in pushing through the administration programs in the House is the result of some of the sessions you hold down in your office with some of the other Members of the House. In fact, it's been called—your office has been called—Rayburn's board of education.

Speaker RAYBURN. There was a room in the Capitol way back in the Longworth-Garner days—it was called the bureau of education. I have a hideaway now where I can sometimes go and read a little or dictate my mail and late in the afternoon some of the boys come by or are invited by and we have a session. And usually it's a session in regard to the legislative program, and sometimes Senators are there, and Members of the House, both Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. CRONKITE. I believe, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, that a Senator by the name of Harry S. Truman was attending a meeting of the board of education the afternoon he learned of President Roosevelt's death. Was that not so?

Speaker RAYBURN. He was on his way to my office by invitation, as he and I had been great friends the 10 or 11 years he was in the Senate and through his Vice Presidency. So that I was in that room and had a call and they said that Mr. Early was very anxious to talk to the Vice President. He came in and I told him that Mr. Early wanted him and he called him and he left immediately, because it was said that Mr. Early asked him to come to the White House immediately and as quietly as possible. A few moments after that we had the flash that President Roosevelt had passed away.

Mr. CRONKITE. Mr. Truman did not know at that time what the message Mr. Early had for him was.

Speaker RAYBURN. He did not.

Mr. SEVAREID. Mr. Speaker, you've been now in Congress I think 38 years. Do you have any generalizations or conclusions to offer about any change in that time in the general level of the ability, or however you look at it, of the House as a whole?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, of course, there's a lot of talk about people who remember one outstanding or two outstanding or three outstanding men in a 10-year period or in a 30-year period, like Clay, Webster, and Calhoun in the Senate. But as I say I came here under the Speakership of Mr. Champ Clark of Missouri. Uncle Joe Cannon's time was over. However, he came back to the House during that time. I don't indulge in this thing that the character or the ability of the House of Representatives has gone down one particle since I became a Member. I think generally speaking the intelligence in the House of Representatives is higher than I have ever known it before.

Mr. BANCROFT. How do you think it compares with back in the days of Henry Clay—let's say, when he was Speaker, with your knowledge of history?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, there were very few men then—you take the Constitutional Convention. And there were 59 men as I understand it who attended that convention. And you could name on the fingers of two hands those that were outstanding or supposed to be outstanding at that time and who are remembered in history. And that's no reflection on the man that was in committees and was doing the work. Of course, James Madison was supposed to have written more lines of the Constitution than any other man, than probably all of the men in it and kept notes on it, and he was called the father of the Constitution. He was outstanding. Of course, you had Hamilton, you had Washington, you had the great lawyer, Wilson, from Pennsylvania, Benjamin Franklin, Pinckney, and many men that I could name. But just because those men didn't happen to be in the forefront I don't think was any—well I might mention, Mason, who was another very outstanding man in that convention. But I don't think that because some did not show up in history like the ones I've named is any reflection upon the high degree of intelligence of the others.

Mr. CRONKITE. Hasn't the workload, the daily workload of the average Representative increased quite a good deal over the years?

Speaker RAYBURN. Both in committees, and in the House, and out—I can remember when—I think Mr. Harding was President of the United States—I would imagine I'd get 10 letters a day. And since that time it's grown and grown and grown. Now sometimes some Members get hundreds of letters in their office each day and that's one of the reasons why we've increased so in help in the offices. It just takes it to tend to the people's business and answer their inquiries and try to serve them.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, Mr. Speaker, from your long experience let's get back to the No. 1 question in the minds of all the people of the world today and—you have been in Congress through two World Wars starting in 1913—what do you think are the chances of a third world war?

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, I want to go back just a little. I think we made a great mistake after the Second World War in taking our Army down too fast and taking our defense plants down too fast. But I don't see enough elements in the situation right now to think that a third world war is inevitable in the near future. And I think the greatest safety or the greatest protection against that is for us, the richest Nation on earth, by far, with its great capacity for production, I think we can avoid a war if we get so strong that international desperados and dictators will fear to attack us. I think that would be the way to avoid it and I think the Congress of the United States, as geared now, is willing to do that very thing if they have the leadership to tell them what that thing is.

Mr. CRONKITE. Mr. Speaker, in that connection do you feel that the House of Representatives should have more voice, a greater voice, in our foreign policy decisions than it has now?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, I don't know many policy decisions that are made in Congress except the ratification of treaties and the confirmation of ambassadors that the House doesn't have at the present time. All legislation of a general nature that passes with reference to foreign affairs has to pass the House of Representatives, the same as it does the Senate. The House of Representatives furthermore has the right to originate appropriations. They can have a great influence on foreign affairs in that way, and then we have to originate tax legislation in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CRONKITE. Isn't it true today, Mr. Speaker, that we can hardly make any move in foreign affairs that doesn't cost money and therefore the House, as you say, has to originate that?

Speaker RAYBURN. I was thinking specifically of the Marshall plan. It's called foreign aid legislation. The legislation for that originates in the House and the appropriation is made first in the House.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, do you think Congress will approve all the money the President has asked to make us stronger?

Speaker RAYBURN. I do.

Mr. BANCROFT. You think it will.

Speaker RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, what about paying for it. What are the chances of a $16,000,000,000 tax bill?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, I think that the average American thinks that our public debt is big enough, and if it's possible that we should not increase that public debt; we should pay out of current revenues for this preparedness program we're in now. And I think the American people are just like I said about the Congress—I think the American people want to be strong and I think that they are willing to pay for it. We're the most prosperous we ever were in our history. I was thinking the other day about our national income. In 1932, it was $39,000,000,000. In 1950, it was approaching $270,000,000,000. That shows that we do have the capacity to pay if we can arrange it so that we can have taxation that will be fair to everybody and bear equally and equitably on all men in all sections.

Mr. SEVAREID. Mr. Speaker, a number of Republicans said when the new budget went up a couple of weeks ago that the President had disguised a good deal of nondefense and in their minds unnecessary expenditures under the guise of defense spending. What about that complaint?

Speaker RAYBURN. I don't think that's true at all. I think the President sent up an honest budget for 1951, just as he did in 1950.

Mr. SEVAREID. Do you think much of it can be cut—is there much water to squeeze out?

Speaker RAYBURN. It's always a hope that that can be done. And we're going to do that just as far as we can and yet keep our civilian matters moving as we think they should move. We just can't quit everything else, and go into this preparedness program alone. I think we've got to keep our economy going. We can never pay this debt that we owe now unless we keep a large and a mounting national income. And our income is the greatest it's ever been. And that's the reason why I think we can do the things here that will make us safe and also keep our economy going.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, Mr. Speaker, on the line of getting stronger this big problem of sending American troops to Europe—of course it's being debated at great length in the Senate—but it seems to me in the last analysis the House is going to have to put up the money, if it's decided to do it. What do you think about that? Should we send American troops, more American troops, to Europe?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, I think exactly about that like I do about Marshall aid. I don't want a war fought inside the shores of the United States. I'd like to have some friends in the world, and I think we're encouraging them now by the Eisenhower visit and other things to make themselves stronger so they can stand alongside of us one of these days, if the bad time that we fear does come. And I think that we've got to let them know that we're in this game with them and that we've got to send soldiers over there to give specific evidence of our sincerity in wanting to join with them to fight back communism.

Mr. CRONKITE. Mr. Speaker, one of the prime functions, I gather, of the Speaker of the House is to translate to the President the temper of the House in various matters. How do you feel the House is lining up now on the long-range pull in this matter of keeping us on the internationalist bent, if you please, in our own defense rather than swinging back to some isolationism? As the expenses mount, as the controls come in, isn't there likely to be a pull back toward isolationism?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, some people have said that if the fighting was stopped in Korea that there would be a drift back, probably to isolationism and to say "Let's come back home." I don't think that. I think the average Member of Congress, joined with the President, recognizes and realizes this common danger and that they don't think that this cease-fire in Korea would be the answer to that danger. And I think that the temper of Congress and with the President is better than it's been in the last 3 years, to be frank about it.

Mr. BANCROFT. Is there a real unity in Congress, on the foreign affairs?

Speaker RAYBURN. I would think very much, because we passed a bill over there the other day out of the Committee on Armed Services that called for the expenditure of $2,000,000,000 in naval aircraft, and the Navy, and so forth, and we called the roll on that bill and the ayes were 365, and the nays none. That looked to me like a pretty good index of how our minds are running along on those things.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, you had the same unanimous vote also, did you not, on the branding of Red China as an aggressor and opposing her admission to the United Nations?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, there was no roll call on that, but the ayes were overwhelming and the noes very scattered.

Mr. SEVAREID. Mr. Speaker, if you were asked to sum it up, how would you explain the Democratic losses and the result of the election last November?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, only once in my memory has the party in power not lost membership in an off-year election. And I think that was it, seems to me like that was——

Mr. SEVAREID. That was 1934, wasn't it?

Speaker RAYBURN. Nineteen thirty-four—that's correct. And we usually do that. We lost the House and Senate both in 1946. We came back in 1948 but I don't think anybody that looks the situation in the face was very much surprised that we lost seats in the House of Representatives because the people were bothered and worried and when they get that way sometimes they just vote for a change.

Mr. CRONKITE. Mr. Speaker, there's been a great deal of discussion about a southern Democratic and Republican coalition running the House and running the Senate, particularly on those issues on which they might get together. Do you think that is a real danger to the administration?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, you know, being from the South (Texas, of course, is not southern exactly, it's not West, it's just the great Southwest), that's been talked around here for the last 18 years and I go back and look over the New Deal legislation, so-called New Deal legislation. And a southern man's name is on practically every piece of that legislation.

Mr. BANCROFT. Isn't your name on quite a bit of it, when you were chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, in 4 years I wrote out about six or seven very important bills, and they were passed. Doughton, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means; Sumners, of Texas, Judiciary; Steagall, of Alabama, Banking and Currency; Jones, of Texas, Agriculture; Mansfield, Rivers and Harbors; Lanham, Public Buildings and Grounds—you can run right on through it. Now, there are some people from the South, of course, who do not believe in all of this domestic program, and they are not going to vote for it. That's all. They're just not going to do it.

Mr. CRONKITE. Some of the active Dixiecrats have said in the last week, I believe, that they think there is a good chance of a coalition candidate for President. They have even mentioned General Eisenhower as a possibility—a man who could run on the Republican ticket and at the same time win in the South. Do you think there's any chance of that in 1952?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, now, I think General Eisenhower has too much sense to run on a coalition ticket. He might be nominated by the Democratic convention; he might be nominated by the Republican convention. But only once has the South not voted practically solidly the Democratic ticket, and I think it will do it—vote the Democratic ticket—again in 1952.

Mr. BANCROFT. That once was the——

Speaker RAYBURN. That once was the Al Smith campaign. And then, of course, four States in the 1948 campaign.

Mr. SEVAREID. You don't foresee any repetition of the third-party sort of thing such as we had in 1948 in the South this time?

Speaker RAYBURN. I rather think not.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, you look forward from the Democratic point of view to 1952 with great confidence, then. Is that correct?

Speaker RAYBURN. It all depends—a great deal depends just what the situation in the world is at that time, and what our position is, and whom the Republicans nominate, and whom the Democrats nominate.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, we've all seen you presiding over several political conventions, now, and presumably you will preside over one again in 1952. You mentioned earlier in the program that you have no further ambition. Does that mean you are not a candidate for the national ticket in 1952?

Speaker RAYBURN. I'm not and I haven't been because I was born in the wrong section of the country and at the wrong time.

Mr. CRONKITE. That's a little different than your predecessor as the man with the longest tenure in the House of Representatives. I believe Mr. Henry Clay had quite a lot of ambition.

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, Speaker Clay, I think, was a potential candidate for President for about 30 years.

Mr. CRONKITE. He ran two or three times, I think, as an active candidate.

Mr. BANCROFT. I'd like to ask this one thing about the wage and price controls that have just been put on: Do you think they are going to work out all right and really stop inflation, or will the law have to be made stronger by Congress?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, of course, that law has got to be revised because it expires as I think in about June 30, 1951. By that time we'll have the opportunity to look it over and see whether it should be made stronger. I think that the American people, or a vast majority of them, are not hoarders and that they'll be willing to go along, realizing the situation we're in—everybody's got to eat and everybody's got to wear and everybody's got to use just the same as they have.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, you think it was the right thing for the administration to do.

Speaker RAYBURN. I don't think there was any question about it and, frankly, I think it should have been put into effect earlier, and would have been if the machinery for its enforcement could have been gotten into shape earlier.

Mr. BANCROFT. How about this other big problem that's down there in the House right now—this matter of drafting 18-year-olds? How do you feel about that?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, I feel about drafting 18-year-olds just about like I feel about drafting anybody else. Nobody wants to draft anybody to go to war. And we're not going to draft anybody unless we think their services are necessary for our protection and building up the Army. It would be hoped that we wouldn't have to do that. But in many instances, of course, an 18-year-old boy, if he's your son or mine, is mighty young but a great many people believe it would be more just and fair to draft 18-year-olds than fellows 23, or 24, 25, or 26 who have obligations, who have families and a wife and several children. It's a matter that we've just got to work out and make it as fair and as just as possible.

Mr. BANCROFT. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to bring up here, coming back to this, your having been Speaker now longer than anyone else in history. There are only two living former Speakers in the country and we asked them about this before we got on the air and we have a statement here from the former Speaker, John Nance Garner, a fellow Democrat, and a fellow Texan of yours, who was also Speaker of the House before he became Vice President. And here's what Mr. Garner has to say: "SAM RAYBURN, my old friend and for many years close colleague in Congress, has established a new record for length of service as Speaker of the United States House of Representatives. I congratulate him. The fact that SAM RAYBURN has occupied this high position longer than any other man bespeaks integrity of character, fairness as a presiding officer, sound judgment, and great leadership. I have felt and feel now, that the Speakership is not only the most powerful post in Congress, but second most important in our Government. This is particularly so when it is filled by an able man, such as our distinguished and beloved Texan, SAM RAYBURN."

Now the other living ex-Speaker is a member of the opposition party and as you mentioned, in 1946 interrupted your tenure of Speaker for 2 years when the Republicans won control of the House. And we have here a recording from former Speaker, JOSEPH MARTIN, of Massachusetts.

"My most cordial congratulations are extended to the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, of Texas. To him has come the high honor and great privilege of serving as Speaker of the House longer than any other man in the history of our country, surpassing the previous record of Henry Clay, of Kentucky. To be able to achieve such a distinction one must have ability, parliamentary skill, and a sense of fairness. These are possessed by Speaker RAYBURN and have been responsible for his success."

Mr. BANCROFT. These are tributes from the only two living ex-Speakers. Mr. RAYBURN, have you any comment on that?

Speaker RAYBURN. Well, it's most gracious of my old friend and fellow Texan, John Garner, to be fine enough to say what he has said about me, because his friendship and mine run back for 40 years. And to have my colleague in the House, of the opposition party, fine enough and kind enough to say the things he has about me is very gratifying and I am deeply grateful to both of these great ex-Speakers.

Mr. BANCROFT. Well, I'm afraid that's all the time we have and thank you very, very much, Speaker SAM RAYBURN.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, it is a happy privilege to join with other friends and colleagues in paying a justly deserved tribute to the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, who has achieved the distinction of having served as Speaker of the House of Representatives longer than any other man in the history of the Nation.

The people of Tennessee, as well as the Tennessee delegation in the House of Representatives, feel a great degree of pride in the great record of service and the outstanding achievements of our beloved Speaker. He was born in Rome County, Tenn., and comes from two of the most prominent and highly respected families of our State. The names of RAYBURN and Waller have long stood as synonyms of honor and integrity among the people of the great Volunteer State. He has many relatives and a host of friends in Tennessee and is greatly admired and highly respected by all of the citizens of the State.

At an early age Mr. RAYBURN moved with his father's family to the State of Texas and there received his education and grew to manhood. As a young man he served in the Texas Legislature and occupied the high position of speaker of the house of representatives of that State. While still a young man he was elected to Congress from the State of Texas and his record of service has been one of brilliant achievement. His advancement in the House of Representatives has been steady and very outstanding. He served for many years as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and occupied the position of chairman of that great committee when he was called to a still broader field of service and elected majority leader of the House. Upon the death of Speaker William B. Bankhead, Mr. RAYBURN was unanimously chosen by the Democratic caucus for the exalted position of Speaker of the House of Representatives.

He has served in this great position longer than any other Speaker in the history of the country and has made an outstanding record for fairness and devotion to duty and commands the greatest possible degree of confidence, respect, and esteem of all of his colleagues. Mr. RAYBURN has succeeded a long line of distinguished Speakers of the House of Representatives, but certainly none of them has ever achieved a higher degree of greatness in service to their country than that which has come to him. He is a man who possesses the highest attributes of Christian character and all of the sterling qualities of manhood. He is a man of recognized ability and demonstrated devotion to public service and justly deserves the high position that he now occupies as one of the greatest Americans of all time.

I am, indeed, glad to have this privilege of paying brief but very sincere tribute to one of the warmest friends and greatest men I have ever known. I certainly join with other colleagues in conveying my hearty congratulations and sincere best wishes to our beloved Speaker for many happy returns and to indulge the hope that he may have many more years of good health and happiness and the very best of everything in life.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this resolution may be permitted to revise and extend their remarks and also that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the heart of every Texan must have swelled with pride yesterday when their Speaker passed such a memorable milestone in the history of the Nation. It was an important event in the life of SAM RAYBURN and in the annals of the Rayburn family. It was of even greater importance to the State and the Nation.

In these times that try men's souls, it is most reassuring to note the steady and experienced hand of SAM RAYBURN sharing the helm of the ship of state. We may well be thankful for his wisdom and his conservative influence at a time when many are prone to swing to one extreme or the other.

On the personal side, younger Members of Congress are blessed by the presence of this generous man who always has time for those of us who seek his advice. I venture to say that more new men coming into this body choose Speaker RAYBURN as their ideal than any other man. Certainly no one could hope for a life of greater public service nor one of more value to his country.

Those of us who have profited by his wise counsel and who have been blessed by association with him join in congratulations to our Speaker RAYBURN, his family, his colleagues, and his Nation.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the office of Speaker of the House of Representatives is one of the most exalted in the world. It has been filled by some of the ablest and most distinguished statesmen in our history—men whose names have become household words, such as Clay, Blaine, Reed, Crisp, Cannon, and Clark.

It is a great honor for any man to have served as Speaker of the House of Representatives longer than any other. I am happy that our present Speaker, SAM RAYBURN, has achieved this distinction. It is a far greater honor, however, to have filled that office acceptably and well for such a long period. I am sure that everyone who has had the privilege of serving under him feels that SAM RAYBURN has honored his great office. His fairness, his honesty, his outstanding ability as a legislator and a presiding officer, his qualities of leadership are such as to inspire the respect of all of us. His fine human qualities are such as to inspire our affection as well.

In my opinion, SAM RAYBURN will go down in history as one of the really great Speakers of the House, comparable in every way with the greatest of those who have preceded him. May he enjoy many more years of health and happiness and distinguished service to his country.

Mrs. BOSONE. Mr. Speaker, it is not important how well a man begins his life, but it is important that he is able to sustain himself from the beginning through the years of his lifetime. SAM RAYBURN has been able to sustain himself. In order to do this, the Speaker of the House apparently has placed value on the right elements of living. The Speaker loves simplicity and sincere humility because he loves honesty and has no regard for sham. The Speaker loves those things with which God has endowed this world—the sunshine, the marvels and beauty of nature, and the soil.

Greatest of all, our Speaker loves mankind and is deeply religious because he has such a keen sense of responsibility of his relationship to and with mankind.

When I was in Utah, before I was elected to Congress, and used to read of Mr. RAYBURN and hear his voice from the Democratic National Convention over the radio, I was impressed with his greatness; but knowing him personally has impressed me even more. I believe he is a great American so worthy of the esteem of his colleagues and fellow Americans.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would be presumptious, indeed, if I thought I could add anything to the tribute that has been paid to our beloved Speaker by the most distinguished Members of this House on both sides of the aisle and from all sections of our country. I do, however, want to say a word on behalf of Oklahoma.

Oklahoma loves SAM RAYBURN. He lives closer to most of Oklahoma than he does to most of Texas. His district borders mine. His home, just west of Bonham, is only a few miles from Bryan County, Okla. Thousands of my constituents once lived in his district. Some of them went to school with him. Others went to school to him. All of them are proud to claim his friendship.

All over Oklahoma SAM RAYBURN is affectionately and, I think, accurately known as Oklahoma's Congressman at Large. We regard him as the No. 1 citizen of the Southwest.

Like all other Members of this House, I love SAM RAYBURN. He is the greatest man I have ever known. He is one of the great men of this day and generation.

On behalf of the people of my district and my State, I am happy to join with Americans everywhere in congratulating him upon the signal honor he has attained this day—the well-earned honor of having held longer than any other man the most important position in the most important legislative body in all the world.

SAM RAYBURN, CHRISTIAN GENTLEMAN

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, Speaker SAM RAYBURN has innumerable facets of character. Many of us honor him as the American who has held for the longest period of time in history the proud title of Speaker of the House of Representatives. Many of us honor him as a man who speaks for the interests of his constituency and his State. Many of us honor him for his unswerving patriotism. Still more of us honor him as a long-time friend and associate.

My firm conviction is that none of us may pay the highest tribute to SAM RAYBURN. Without his being aware of it, SAM RAYBURN has paid that highest tribute to himself by his very life.

SAM RAYBURN is a Christian. His example has helped to bring the great teachings of our Master in the Sermon on the Mount into the Halls of Congress.

SAM RAYBURN is a Christian. I have gone with him when we fished together. I have heard him pray before partaking of God's food. I have watched him ask for God's guidance, on his knees, before going to bed at night.

A Nebraska poet once wrote:

> You made a song of life.
> I lived it. You were wrong.
> You have a life left to live:
> I—a song!

SAM RAYBURN has lived a long life of selfless public service. His vast accomplishments are dwarfed by the principles for which he served and lived. He himself is the noblest tribute to his own greatness.

SAM RAYBURN is a Christian gentleman.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues today in tribute to Mr. RAYBURN. He has the qualities of leadership necessary in this difficult hour. If I had to select one from all of his fine characteristics, I think I would choose fidelity—as meaning more to me than any other—I trust him. Shakespeare said it this way:

> His words are bonds; his oaths are oracles; his heart is as far from fraud as heaven from earth.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Speaker, for more than 125 years Kentucky has been proud of her distinguished son, Henry Clay. Among his many outstanding accomplishments was the record of tenure which he established as Speaker of the House of Representatives. The fact that this record stood for a century and a quarter is in itself adequate proof of the significance and importance of that record.

It has been said that coming events cast their shadows before. Last May a magnificent 3-year-old thoroughbred horse came out of Texas and made the long trip to Kentucky. On Derby day, at Churchill Downs in the district which I have the honor to represent, in the greatest classic of the American turf that Texas champion proved his mettle. Tens of thousands of Kentuckians paid just tribute to the new champion, Middleground, of Texas.

Today on behalf of hundreds of thousands of Kentuckians I wish to extend heartfelt felicitations and best wishes to the gentleman from Texas, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN. His distinguished career has made him a vital, living part of the great American tradition. Mr. Speaker, Kentucky yields to Texas.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, as I sat and listened to the remarks which were made about SAM RAYBURN, our distinguished Speaker who has served in that capacity longer than any other incumbent, I could not help but think that here is a man who has walked with men and has won not only their admiration, their homage, but in very truth their warm affection. Such a character is indeed rare and such a personality is generally not met with in a lifetime, and so I consider it a great privilege to have known this man and to have served as a Member of the House of Representatives while he was its presiding officer.

This profound respect felt by all men who have come in contact with him is well understood because it is founded on the firm and everlasting rock of truth. If there ever was a man without sham or without pretense, it is SAM RAYBURN. He thinks honestly and in the great deliberative body which he presides over, he administers justice with impartiality and carries on the tradition of our Republic founded on truth. I think it safe to say that no man has filled this great office of Speaker with more ability, nor has anyone shown greater love for his country than SAM RAYBURN. The Speakers of the House of Representatives have all been men of integrity, honored by their fellow Members in being elected to their position, and all have served their country well, but there are very few men to be found anywhere whom the honor and distinction of high office has not marred and who still recognize that liberty and justice are the cornerstones of our Republic.

All that has been said about him, he deserves; all of the love which his fellow Members bear for him, he merits; and all of the best wishes which well up in our hearts today and go forward to him are his well-earned heritage. It has been a great honor to know him and it has been a distinct privilege to serve under him.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I consider it a high privilege to have the opportunity to serve in this Congress with our distinguished Speaker, SAM RAYBURN. I came here with the Eighty-first Congress in January 1949 and was immediately impressed with the great charm, the modesty, and the personality of our Speaker. One can readily see why so many people from his home State of Texas idolize him. The high esteem in which he is held by his colleagues on both sides of the House is a tribute to his great leadership, his fairness and ability, and the kindly manner in which he is ever ready to be helpful and cooperative.

It is indeed a privilege to serve in this greatest of all parliaments, but it is an especially great honor to serve under SAM RAYBURN, who, as Speaker of the House, I am sure will go down as one of the great men in American history.

Today we honor SAM RAYBURN for having served as Speaker of the House longer than any other man in the history of our Government, passing the great record of the immortal Henry Clay. With all my heart I join in paying a deserving tribute to one of America's greatest statesmen, SAM RAYBURN.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be fortunate enough to serve under a Speaker who is a champion. The unique experience of having served longer than any other Speaker must be very thrilling to SAM RAYBURN. But SAM RAYBURN did not need merely time to demonstrate his worth. His championship qualities as a citizen, a legislator, and a committee chairman were recognized long before today. Mr. RAYBURN is a true gentleman. He is kind, he is tolerant, he is fair, and he has the indefinable attribute known as common sense.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most memorable days of my 16 years of service. I consider it a genuine privilege to be present on the occasion when another milestone in the history of this body has been reached through the record which the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has made in having served as Speaker longer than any other individual in history.

The eloquent tribute previously made today by the majority leader, Mr. MCCORMACK, met with my complete approval and I endorse every word which he said with respect to the remarkable talents of Mr. RAYBURN.

It has been a source of genuine gratification to me to have served here during the time in which SAM RAYBURN established this record. Not only has he made the mark of his length of service as Speaker but what is more important, throughout that entire period he has achieved the genuine respect, admiration, and affection of all who have served under him because of his firm fairness, his becoming modesty and his calm counsel. I extend warm and sincere felicitations to him with the prayer that he may continue to enjoy his present health and vigor for many years to come in order that the country may have the benefit of his outstanding talents.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, permit me to extend to you my warmest personal congratulations on the distinction that is yours in having served longer than any other as Speaker of the United States House of Representatives.

This is indeed a great honor which has come to a really great man. But even without this honor, Mr. Speaker, you have made your place in history as one of our country's greatest statesmen and one of our greatest Speakers.

Since taking a seat in this great body I have served under four distinguished Speakers: Byrns, of Tennessee; Bankhead, of Alabama; Martin, of Massachusetts; and our present beloved presiding officer, Rayburn, of Texas. I have always been impressed with the immensity of their job, and I have always been impressed with the ability and patience of those who have served as Speaker.

The reason the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is a truly great Speaker is not alone his length of service as a Member of Congress and as Speaker, nor simply because of his legislative ability and parliamentary skill. He is a really great Speaker because he has at all times protected the rights of the minority. In all his rulings and in his every action he has sought to preserve minority rights in keeping with the highest American traditions, recognizing that in this fine country of ours "every man is king, yet no man dare to wear a crown."

As most of you may know, Speaker RAYBURN as a boy had an ambition to become Speaker of the House. That was his objective in life. He set himself to the task of realizing that ambition. He has done more than that. Today we are congratulating him on having served as Speaker longer than any other occupant of that high office. That in itself bespeaks the ability and character of our distinguished presiding officer.

I congratulate you, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate the people of your district.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, as a friend and neighbor to our distinguished Speaker, Hon. SAM RAYBURN, of Texas, it is with much pleasure that I join my colleagues in commemorating this day to a great American and statesman who has served longer as Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States than any other Speaker in the history of our country.

Many of those who have preceded me have pointed out the patriotic service that Speaker RAYBURN has rendered to our Nation. Of his many fine traits and virtues, those that I have observed and appreciated are his kindliness, helpfulness, patience, and modesty.

Always easy of approach, never too busy to give time to any Member, and always ready to advise on any problem, notwithstanding his enormous burden in his position, he has the patience to listen to anyone, no matter how important or trivial the matter may be.

In his modesty I am reminded by what Fielding said, "His modesty's a candle to his merit."

In his high and exalted position he has always been modest, and in his great accomplishments and service, which seem to come so easily and naturally, I think of what Henry Wadsworth Longfellow said:

> The talents of his success are nothing more than doing what he does so well, and doing well whatever he does, without a thought of fame.

Mr. Speaker, fate is so often cruel and capricious that it changes the lives and fortunes of many of us.

I have always thought that had it not been for a quirk of fate a few years ago, SAM RAYBURN, instead of being our Speaker of the House, would have been President of the United States. Who can tell what fate yet has in store for SAM RAYBURN?

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, to few men is given the privilege of favorably affecting the lives of millions of people. This privilege has been given to our colleague, SAM RAYBURN. Because he has used this privilege and discharged his responsibility humbly, faithfully, wisely, and prayerfully, we have a better world; we have a stronger country and a greater faith in democracy and its precepts.

I am rich because I have clasped his hand in friendship; because I have felt the warmth of his personal regard and have had the treasure of his advice and counsel. Not because he has served as Speaker longer than any other man in the history of our Republic, but because he has done so exercising all of the qualities that free men admire, I salute him, I thank him, and I honor him.

Mr. Speaker, you are a great man because you have remained simple, humble, and accessible to ordinary men in the discharge of responsibilities that are extraordinary.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, not only is this a great day in the life of our illustrious Speaker; it is also a day of significance in the history of the Republic.

This day will be marked by historians as the day upon which our friend and colleague, SAM RAYBURN of the great State of Texas will have surpassed all previous records of tenure as Speaker of the House of Representatives. No man in the history of our Nation has occupied this coveted chair as long as this congenial, efficient Texan.

While we congratulate the Speaker, our real congratulations should be directed toward the Nation itself. The Republic has had the services of Mr. RAYBURN for more than 8 years as Speaker. More than 8 years of service during the most turbulent decades in history and in one of the most strenuous capacities a public servant can fill, is a great monument to this leader of men. Moreover, it is a monument to the American people and the American Government that in times of so much divergence of opinion that one man can hold the allegiance and confidence of those he serves for such a long period.

Speaker RAYBURN has become part and parcel of the useful legislation which has passed through this Congress and is part and parcel of many great economic and political programs which have shaped the history and destiny of this Nation. Millions of people throughout the world have felt the profound impress of the Speaker's career.

We who have heard the strong staccato of his gavel summon the Members of this House to order and to service for these many years pause now to honor this great Speaker. The Nation honors him. But in a larger sense he honors us by his action in remaining in this position of vast power and authority. We, his friends, wish him well as he moves ahead on an untried and unmarked trail leading us as a great nation into the future. We wish him good health and happiness for the many years ahead.

Seldom in history does the tattoo of a leader's gavel command so much respect.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, to be able to add a brief statement on the occasion of this signal milestone in the useful life of our beloved friend and colleague, the distinguished Speaker, SAM RAYBURN, bring to me much in joy and satisfaction.

At times it is difficult to express our fullest and deepest appreciation of a friend. That is true now as I attempt to acknowledge the great debt of gratitude I owe to our Speaker for his kindly interest, his counsel, and advice.

The leadership of SAM RAYBURN has brought to the young and the older men of this House alike an inspiration.

To know Sam is to love him.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, as one of the newer Members of this House, I grasp the opportunity to add a word of tribute in honor of one of America's greatest citizens. To the newer Members of the House he has been more than a leader; he has been their guardian angel. It has not only been a great pleasure to follow his leadership, but it has also been easy and pleasant to follow his advice.

He has always been extremely helpful to the entire country. On October 13, 1950, the United States News and World Report published an interview with our great Speaker, entitled "What Influences Congress," which I am pleased to submit for the RECORD, as follows:

WHAT INFLUENCES CONGRESS—AN INTERVIEW WITH SAM RAYBURN, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—What Congress does is recorded at length, but what influences the action of Congress isn't as well known. To present an intimate view of how Congress operates and what the outside impact is on its legislative policies, the editors of United States News and World Report invited the Speaker of the House, SAM RAYBURN, to its conference rooms for an interview. The Speaker's position has been called the second most powerful in the country. Mr. RAYBURN is perhaps the best qualified man to discuss the workings of Congress. SAM RAYBURN was born 69 years ago and elected to Congress 39 years ago. He has been reelected every 2 years—never suffering a defeat. Schooling earned the hard way, a bit of teaching and 6 years in the Texas Legislature preceded his coming to Washington as Woodrow Wilson entered the White House. Only two men have been in Congress longer than Mr. RAYBURN. The Speaker, who is unmarried, has presided over the House of Representatives for eight successive years. During the Republican Eightieth Congress, he was minority leader. He was reelected Speaker of the Eighty-second Congress.)

Question. How much is the attitude in Congress going to change if the war ends shortly, Mr. RAYBURN? When Congress comes back, are you going to feel any urgency, or is there going to be a tendency to take controls off again, or ease them up?

Answer. Well, you know we are funny people. We get to talking excitedly. And, of course, everybody says get up and prepare and vote for these billions in order to set us up. I'm rather fearful, looking at things as I do, that when this Korean thing folds up, a lot of people will say, "Let's retreat." Now I think the best defense money we can spend is to get strong and stay strong, regardless of the cost.

Suppose we spent $25,000,000,000 a year for the next 5 years, getting our country strong enough so that somebody would fear us. Well, that's a bagatelle compared to the waste of war. In 5 years we spent 350 to 400 billion dollars and materials galore, besides the lives and crippled bodies. I just don't think there is any comparison between those.

I think weakness lays us open to attack. I don't think being strong tends toward aggression, especially on our part.

Question. If there is a popular reaction, will Congress not have to go along with it?

Answer. I don't think there will be that popular reaction. There may be some of it, a good deal of it, but I don't think it will be enough to control the situation.

Question. Controls ends automatically and will have to be renewed next year. If things seem better, will the controls be renewed?

Answer. Well, probably the attitude of Congress will be just about what the average fellow thinks, and I'm just the average fellow. I just don't believe that the people want us to get caught short.

Question. Do you think that attitude may depend on which party controls Congress?

Answer. Well, it might or not, as you look at it.

Question. Mr. Speaker, what will be the dominant issue before the next Congress?

Answer. I wouldn't know yet, but we raised a substantial part of the taxes to meet this emergency and we will raise other taxes either in this Congress or the next. If these programs that we have inaugurated go on, why, I don't see any major issues in the next Congress unless isolationism or too much reaction shows up.

Question. Has any real consideration been given to a base for the excess-profits tax?

Answer. Of course, they might use something along the line of the one that they had in World War II, with a different base period.

You know, when you go to fooling with taxes, you are fooling with a very intricate thing. You might in haste do a great group of people a great injustice, and that is not justified. Now, of course, we had the excess-profits tax during the last war and might have repealed it a little too soon, just as we took our Army and Navy down a little too fast and closed up our defense plants too fast. I've always thought that. Of course, I would have been just like any other father and mother. If I had had a boy, I would have wanted him on the way home.

But there were some mistakes made—I won't put my finger on them right now—against which some people cried out very much. But the experts on the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue in the House and Senate and the Treasury are working together now trying to fix the proper kind of base and hope that it will be equitable and won't hurt too much. Of course, all taxes hurt.

Question. Does the House of Representatives pretty well represent public sentiment? Do you think they keep ahead of the people?

Answer. They certainly try to, because they have to go back every 2 years.

Question. But things change, don't they?

Answer. If the people back home don't have enough faith in their Representative here to feel that, being in the midst of these things, he knows more about when changes come and situations that have to be met in emergency form than the average citizen, why, they aren't going to keep him here.

Question. They've got to trust him to have judgment?

Answer. That's right.

Question. But aren't some of these problems too big and difficult? You've got so many things to do in Congress—you've got to keep in touch with what people are thinking and analyze these problems and represent and reflect the pressures that are on you. How are you able to resolve all those things—just common sense?

Answer. There isn't any substitute for common sense, you know—that's all the sense there is. When a man has real common sense, he's as smart as anybody can be.

Question. Is a Member of Congress influenced much by the mail he gets?

Answer. I would think so, but I'll tell you a remarkable thing about congressional mail. You'll find, if you'll look over your correspondence for about 6 months, that in all probability from 5 to 10 percent of the people have written 90 percent of the letters. The fellow that's back there and satisfied and things are going all right so far as he's concerned, you don't hear from him. It's the fellow that's discontented or unhappy about something.

Question. Or it's mail inspired by some pressure group?

Answer. Oh, yes. I would think that in all probability 30 percent of the mail that comes to Members of Congress is inspired.

ANALYZING THE MAIL

Question. But does that influence the Congressman much?

Answer. I think the average fellow up there has a pretty good idea of sifting the mail he gets, and what it means, and how to evaluate it.

Question. He knows his district and people pretty well?

Answer. If he doesn't, they'll get someone who does.

Question. Do the Members of Congress read the press a good deal?

Answer. They do—every day.

Question. Do the editorials in the press have an impact on them?

Answer. The editorials from some papers—those they think reflect a very sound view of public opinion.

Question. Would you say that all the factors which enter into the formation of public opinion have a certain amount of influence on the Members of Congress?

Answer. That is certainly correct.

Question. Are Members of Congress inclined to read some of the petitions that come to Congress by mail or in the form of advertisements?

Answer. Oh, yes; petitions signed by constituents and in advertisements.

Question. Do you think that the Members of Congress are influenced a good deal by the leading constituents in their districts who may write to them from time to time?

Answer. Yes. And the correspondence of Members of Congress has increased manyfold since I became a Member of Congress.

OPINIONS THAT COUNT

Question. Do you think Members are impressed by letters that are obviously individual and not a part of propaganda?

Answer. That's correct. To an individual who is a friend they certainly pay a lot of heed.

Question. Or some individual whose opinion in the community counts for something?

Answer. That's right.

Question. We've heard from time to time that some Members of Congress maintain lists of what they call leaders in their community. Is that so?

Answer. Practically all of them do.

Question. In other words, these are people whose opinions they respect or whose opinions they regard as influential?

Answer. And that they seek advice from some of the time.

Question. Do you think a Congressman should try to lead his district, or should he reflect it?

Answer. That's double-barreled. I think that a Member of Congress in the House of Representatives is primarily elected to reflect the sentiment of that one district. He's got to do that, or they've got to have faith enough to believe that he can do that, or they take him out, anyhow.

If a subject is discussed enough and the people know enough about it to have an opinion, and he knows that that's their opinion, unless he is convinced that it is utterly wrong and hurtful, I think he ought to follow it, but I also think that if a man can't lead the sentiment of his district, he's in trouble.

Question. Isn't it true that the people back home don't know about many of these issues?

Answer. That's correct as to some, but on many they know a great deal.

Question. What is Congress, then, a sort of meeting place where all the local interests meet, with the result a sort of discipline or some solution reached?

Answer. There are so many questions that we have that we can't localize—they're just national and international.

Question. How does a Member of Congress keep informed on all of these very technical subjects?

Answer. Well, he talks to everybody—he has to talk to everybody, including the Members of the House and the Senate and people from all over the United States. Congress is a mighty good cross section of the American people. You look at a fellow sitting in the House and he's just about a general average of the people he represents.

Question. Do you think that in its workings Congress is an efficient organization?

Answer. I certainly do, and I think that's been demonstrated at the beginning of the Second World War and within the last 2 or 3 months. Nobody wanted any controls any more—didn't want any OPA, didn't want this, that, and the other—but Congress jumped right in and in a very short time gave the President power to control inflation, prices, and wages.

Question. When things are fairly stable and people are fairly well satisfied, you don't change so rapidly?

Answer. There's no hurry to change then.

Question. So Congress does reflect public sentiment?

Answer. Well, the job of Congressman has changed, because, as you say, there are more national and international problems nowadays than there used to be.

Question. A Congressman isn't as much a local representative?

Answer. He can't be and be a proper kind of representative.

THE SPEAKER'S POWER

Question. Is the Speaker as powerful as sometimes pictured?

Answer. Well, that's a question that can be answered in a lot of ways. Of course, way back in the Cannon days when they called Reed a czar and Cannon a czar and all that, they took some of the power away from the Speaker—the power to name committees and the power of recognition.

The rules were liberalized in 1911, when the Democrats took Congress in the middle of Taft's administration. But I would think that the average Speaker still has a good deal of influence in naming committees. Of course, he has the responsibility of naming all the special committees and I don't think there's been a Speaker up there for quite a while that hasn't had quite a bit of influence on committees.

The old day of pounding on the desk and giving people hell is gone. We've all grown up now. A man's got to lead by persuasion and kindness and the best reason—that's the only way he can lead people. And a Speaker should be personally popular. He can't crack down on people.

Question. That's been the situation now, hasn't it, for a long time?

Answer. Well, a lot depends on the man that for the moment is occupying the position.

Question. What influences you, Mr. Speaker, in naming committees? How do you choose the members?

Answer. I choose as chairman the first Democrat who introduced the resolution for a special committee.

Question. I was thinking of the standing committees and the new Members of the House—how do they get assigned to committees?

Answer. They all submit their names as applicants for certain committees. They may state first, second, and third preferences. If they can't get the first, then they go along to the second and the third. Sometimes they don't get even the third, but usually a man can get one of those positions. And they take it, of course.

Geographical location has something to do with it. You wouldn't want Members all from the South, or all from the North, or all from the East or all from the West. They like to have a pretty good cross section of the country on all important committees, and since this congressional reorganization bill, the committees are practically all important committees. We used to have 46 committees and now, I think, we have 19.

CHOOSING COMMITTEEMEN

Question. So far as possible, do you follow the Member's own preference for committee service?

Answer. We'd rather do it. But sometimes we don't think that that is the proper committee for him.

Question. But you don't know very much about a lot of these newcomers, when they come in, do you? What test do you apply?

Answer. Well, you know those new fellows don't have any idea how closely they are watched for the first few months. They also have a reputation when they come here.

One man might be a wonderful man for the Committee on Banking and Currency and no good on the Committee on the Judiciary because he isn't a lawyer.

Question. There still are one or two key men on each delegation who inform party leaders of the caliber of newcomers, aren't there?

Answer. That is correct, and the committee on committees listens to them when a new man comes up.

Question. Should there be more party responsibility in the House? Isn't there some way you can maintain more discipline within the party?

Answer. There is a lot of talk about discipline. It isn't a question of whether you get what you want today or not, or whether the Committee on Rules reports a rule today. The sum total is what you are looking for, and that is what I started out to say here a while ago. The sum total in this session, I think, is amazing under the circumstances. A tremendous amount.

As far as the House leadership is concerned, we have accomplished a lot. We have accomplished everything we thought we would accomplish in this session of Congress, and in some instances more. Of course, there are some of these issues that people filibuster about, but that will always be with us.

Question. The Congress and the White House don't always see eye to eye in what the objective is; do they?

Answer. Well, no two men that have got the good, common sense that I was talking about a while ago agree on everything. If they do agree on everything, one of them is doing all the thinking.

Question. The Executive and Legislature don't have to see alike? One shouldn't necessarily dominate the other?

Answer. I don't believe in any sort of domination.

Question. In Great Britain they have a system of government where the executive makes a decision, or the party in caucus makes a decision, and then everybody has to go along; don't they?

Answer. Yes; they do that, or they get thrown out.

Question. Do you think that system over there would work over here?

Answer. No.

Question. Why not?

Answer. It is too rigid. Our Congress is more independent, and our Executive is independent, too, and their executive is not. We elect a President for a definite time, and we elect a Congress for a definite time. I think that is much more responsible.

Question. Why couldn't we have a responsible ministry form of government here?

Answer. I feel that the people of the United States are the dominant power. They know that under the Constitution they are voting for a legislator for 2 years or for 6 years. I think they have the right to try him out for that length of time. And the party in power that would be overturned today might be the proper party to be in power tomorrow when a bigger issue is coming up. You cannot change Presidents all the time.

I don't like the system of splinter parties, either. We have not recognized more than two parties in the House of Representatives since the Civil War. When I came here in 1913, there were Teddy Roosevelt Progressives. But that party was not recognized. Members of the splinter parties in this country go to the party in the majority for assignment on committees.

IS THE 2-YEAR TERM ENOUGH?

Question. Do you think that 2 years is a long enough term for a Member of the House?

Answer. I have always felt that it ought to be 4 years. I don't know whether I think that as much now as I used to. A fellow hardly has a test in 2 years. He has a better test now than he used to have.

Question. How much influence do lobbyists have?

Answer. Well, now, it depends upon what you mean by lobbyists. People are called lobbyists, and, of course, the word lobbyist has a bad sound.

Some so-called lobbyists are men of outstanding ability, honest men who would tell you the truth and are helpful to committees. Now that kind of lobbyist is very helpful because he has studied one question for many years and maybe some of the members of the committee hadn't studied it at all. Members generally want to learn about it in order to have both sides honestly put forward so they can make a sane, sensible judgment.

Also there are lobbyists of the sort usually talked about, but they don't come to see me.

Question. You feel that different groups should get the chance to put their views to Congress?

Answer. Of course. And that will always be true. Some people who hire people to come here to Washington to represent them make mistakes in the type and character of man they get. But, as far as any of this so-called lobbyist influence in any pernicious way influencing Members of Congress, that just doesn't exist, in my opinion.

THE SOCIAL LOBBY

Question. What about the social lobby? Do they pull much weight in Congress?

Answer. No. I'll tell you a story about that. There was a very popular man who represented rivers and harbors groups. He knew a lot about the subject. When he went before a committee he was helpful. He built up wonderful friendships among the membership. When he would invite people out to dinner, they wanted to go because they didn't feel he was going to talk business.

Another fellow, probably with as much ability but not the personality, came here. He wanted to know how he could get to be the same kind of man the other fellow was, because he would like to give dinners and make friends, and so forth. But I said, "You make your friends first and then, if they want to dine with you, that will be fine, but you are not going to buy any friendship or influence around here with a dinner."

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Question. Isn't it also true, Mr. Speaker, that Congress couldn't do its work without some kind of lobby?

Answer. Well, take the Committee on Ways and Means. The experts in the Treasury are very helpful to them, and experts on the outside are very helpful to them.

Question. Aren't the experts in the Treasury lobbyists in a way?

Answer. Well, you might say so. But they usually are sent for and are asked to give their views on things and to work with the so-called experts on the committee and get things ready to lay before the committee all the facts.

Question. They must like you in Texas—you've never been defeated——

Answer. I'll tell you something about people. I've been in politics all this time, and a lot of people say that people are unkind, and that they are unappreciative, and you get some pretty deep scars sometimes in politics. I haven't got any scars that I don't forget.

Coming down in the car today we were talking about hating somebody, and I said I didn't have any time for hate. I haven't got enough time to love the people that I'm under deep obligation to, and to think about the people you love is much better than hate.

I think that 98½ or 99 percent of the American people have got more good in them than they have bad, and when the test comes that better element will come up. And I think we will have demonstration after demonstration of that in the United States in years to come.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I am moved at this time to associate myself with the expressions of high regard and friendship which have come spontaneously and with deep sincerity from a number of my colleagues for our distinguished Speaker. All of us who are privileged to serve in this House irrespective of political affiliation share in this admiration for the gentleman from Texas. He has won a well-deserved reputation as a gentleman of patience, understanding, and courtesy to even the most inexperienced Member—a gentleman who has contributed greatly to the prestige, dignity, and character of the House—a gentleman with an infinite capacity for making and keeping friends.

We are happy in the knowledge that the Speaker now holds the all-time record for service as a presiding officer of this House and we hope to have the benefit of his guidance and impartial administration of the rules of this body through many years to come.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that some men are born to greatness and that other men have greatness thrust upon them. No one seems to have pointed out that there are men of another character who grow, by their own unrelenting efforts, to a greatness universally recognized by their fellows.

Such a man as this now presides over one branch of the most august legislative body in the history of political society, the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States. Within the dignified walls of this Chamber there have transpired during the last one-hundred-and-sixty-odd years many of the momentous events which shape the course of history. From the floor of this House there arises living, day-to-day evidence that man is the master of his own destiny, vibrant proof that man, in the light of his God-given reason and in conformity with the precepts of the Divine Lawgiver, can effectively act for the spiritual and temporal betterment of himself and his fellow man.

That is why the qualifications of those who serve here are required to be of the highest order. Members of Congress are called upon to be of solid integrity, deeply rooted in moral principles, lucid in thought and expression, wise in their powers of judgment, and profoundly conscious of the responsibilities of their office. Compound these prerequisites a hundred times over, add to them the friendly admiration and devotion of his colleagues and a master's ability to lead and direct the complicated and technical procedures of this House and you describe what is expected of our Speaker.

I am sure that it is the sentiment of this House that the man who now occupies the Speaker's chair has so conducted himself during the tenure of his office as to satisfy these qualifications many, many times over. The most solid proof of this is the fact that he has, as of this year, occupied the Speaker's chair longer than any other man in the history of the Nation.

In Congress after Congress caucuses of his fellow Democrats have named SAM RAYBURN to the highest office this House can offer. The Democratic Party can indeed look with pride to this sterling exemplar of its finest traditions. To a man, we are proud to call him one of us.

This admiration is not, however, rooted in partisanship. The first choice for this office by the Members on the other side of the aisle would naturally go to one of their own number, but when the votes are cast and the tallies made, the waves of applause, as the Speaker mounts the rostrum, resound with equal fervor from all sides of this Chamber.

SAM RAYBURN has indeed grown to greatness. Long ago he determined his life ambition to be the attainment of the high office he now occupies with celebrated distinction. He has discharged the responsibilities of this office in a way that has won him the admiration of each and every man who has had the honor of serving with him. Through every conflict that has raged on the floor of this House he has ruled our deliberations with a fair and just hand. Thus has he won the friendship of every Member of Congress and of many leaders of public life in America. We hear the gavel but we know the man. SAM RAYBURN has grown to greatness in our eyes and in the eyes of the Nation. On this day when he sets a new mark of greatness we extend our felicitations.

In his efforts of the future, made as they will be in the best interests of our country, we say, God bless you, SAM RAYBURN.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with the most intent interest to the tributes of my colleagues, paid to the Speaker who has spent the longest time in office in history. Certainly those who have served with him so long, who come from his own great State, have seemingly mentioned every facet of his remarkable, admirable, and lovable character.

Yet to me, coming from the teeming streets of Manhattan's most crowded area, it seems that those of our colleagues who hail from wider vistas have overlooked a dominant note in the legislative symphony of which SAM RAYBURN is the conductor.

For surely it is not to me alone that this firm, sure-footed, solid man seems to embody in his person the majesty and the integrity of this great House.

AS SOLID AS THE CAPITOL

I have seen him, as have we all, on many occasions and in many locales. Wherever he is, though not a large man, he stands out; often he dominates a scene without a word, his own integrity dwarfing the chatter of a social scene.

I have seen SAM RAYBURN walking, solitary and alone, through the great rotunda of the Capitol, and he seems as solid and perpetual a monument to these United States as the Capitol itself. He walks with a measured tread, not pompously but surely, in a straight line; his walk is the walk of a man who knows his own strength, his own mind, his own authority.

Often when I see our Speaker I think how Walt Whitman, the poet of the people, would have loved this man from Texas.

THE NEW DEAL CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE

We forget now that only a little over a decade ago SAM RAYBURN was the New Deal chairman of my own Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

With the same unshakeable impartiality and integrity he presided over that committee when epochal reform legislation was being reported out and passed over the vociferous objections of one of the most lavishly endowed special privilege lobbies of all history.

SAM RAYBURN enrolled himself under the bright banners of Franklin Delano Roosevelt in 1932. He has never wavered in his fealty to that leadership, even when some of the late President's most cherished aims flew against deeply ingrained Texas prejudgments.

EARLY ACHIEVEMENTS

SAM RAYBURN came to Congress as the representative of the rich black prairie and valley lands south of the Red River, making the Fourth Congressional District, in the Sixty-third Congress, taking his seat on March 4, 1913.

Early in his congressional career he earned the praise of President Woodrow Wilson by skillfully piloting to passage the Railroad Stock and Bond Act.

In 1931—in the Seventy-second Congress—SAM RAYBURN became chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Under his chairmanship momentous measures flowed to the floor and to ultimate passage. A complete catalog of the public acts of which he was author or a leading proponent would be pointless and exhausting; however, there stand as monuments to his indomitable search for justice such statutes as the Rural Electrification Act, the War Risk Insurance Act, the Utility Holding Company Act, the Federal Securities—Truth-in-Securities—Act, the Stock Exchange

Regulation Act, the Railroad Holding Company Act.

He was a leader in the fight that resulted in the passage of farm-price supports, Federal aid for farm roads, social security, and other important mileposts in the New Deal legislative drive.

At the beginning of the Seventy-fifth Congress, SAM RAYBURN left his committee chairmanship to become majority leader; on the death of William T. Bankhead, of Alabama, the gentleman from Texas was elected to the speakership on September 16, 1940.

THE WAR YEARS

There succeeded the most terrible burdens ever carried by a Speaker of this House.

Before Pearl Harbor, isolationist sentiment was a powerful force, and the Roosevelt program of preparedness for the war that was charging toward our security was often threatened.

Time after time the skilled leadership and the profound confidence felt by the membership in his wisdom saved the defense program from disaster.

Through the war years and into the transition period SAM RAYBURN guided administration legislation with the tactical skill of a general. During the brief period of Republican majority he helped the Democratic Party regain its long leadership.

Perhaps there is no better way to close this brief and inadequate tribute to a man who has proved his manhood, who has shown himself to be a great American, a great Democrat, a great Speaker of the House, jealous of its prestige but sensitive to the needs of the country, than by quoting the letter addressed to him on September 16, 1942, by the late President Roosevelt.

The President wrote:

DEAR SAM: Congratulations on the completion of 2 years of faithful and efficient service in the great office of Speaker. An important post always, the speakership has assumed a special importance because of the gravity of the issues with which you have continually had to deal. Keep up the good work. The country has need of you.

With every good wish,

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House are happy to extend felicitations to the great statesman from Texas who has established a new record for length of service as Speaker of the House of Representatives. Length of service is not his only achievement. He is one of the great statesmen of this age. Henry Clay's record is today surpassed. There have been many great statesmen who have filled the exalted position of Speaker of the House. Clay is generally credited with being the man who brought the Speakership to a very high level and made it one of the positions of first importance in our Government. The late Speaker Cannon, of Illinois, served for a long period of time and was sometimes regarded as a czar. In connection with Speaker RAYBURN'S great service to his country, it is interesting to note that there have been only four Speakers from west of the Mississippi River in the period of 162 years since the Constitution was adopted and the Federal Government was put in operation. The late Col. David B. Henderson, of my own State, achieved the honor of being the first Speaker of the House from the great region west of the Mississippi River. His service came around the turn of the century. In the administration of Woodrow Wilson, Speaker Champ Clark, of Missouri—another great statesman—wielded the gavel. In the middle of the Hoover administration the Democrats took control of the House and John Nance Garner, of Texas, became the Speaker. Later on he was elevated to Vice President where he served 8 years. Speaker RAYBURN thus becomes the fourth man from the region west of the Mississippi River who has filled this very important position, and he has established a new record for length of service, but, more important, he has performed a very great service for his country and has, at all times, enjoyed the confidence of the country and the esteem of all Members of the House on both sides of the aisle. We hail him and extend felicitations.

Mr. DAGUE. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep pleasure and a sense of high privilege that I join with those who have raised their voices in commendation of our distinguished Speaker, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, who has capped an illustrious career by attaining a longer period of service in his high office than any other man in the history of this Nation.

As a member of the minority party, I have studiously avoided allowing partisanship to becloud my appreciation of the fairness, tact, ability as a presiding officer, and great parliamentary knowledge, such as are constantly displayed by Mr. RAYBURN. In addition I have had constant satisfaction in the assurance that without regard to politics our Speaker has always been one to whom a Member, new or old, could turn for counsel and advice, knowing that there constantly awaits every appeal that warm understanding which stems from a heart kept attuned to the thinking of the ordinary folks, in which group most of us are pridefully included.

It is my prayerful hope that Mr. RAYBURN may be spared for many more years of outstanding service in the Congress and that we may always enjoy in our legislative deliberations his wise counsel and sound advice.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to pay my respects to a distinguished leader, who has long been a respected public servant. A man who has been often tried and never found wanting, a great American, our beloved Speaker, Mr. RAYBURN.

Speaker RAYBURN is truly a friend of all, regardless of position. He has helped thousands and thousands of people—he has indeed helped humanity.

On behalf of the people of my district and my State of Ohio, I am happy to join with Americans everywhere in congratulating him upon the single honor he has attained, in having served longer than any other person as Speaker of the House of Representatives.

We in Ohio are proud of Speaker SAM RAYBURN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts). The question is on the resolution, and on this vote the Chair demands a division.

The House divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this vote the yeas are 338, the nays 0. The resolution is unanimously agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Members of the House of Representatives, to all who have spoken and have uttered the generous words about me and my service, I am deeply grateful, and to every Member of this House, regardless of which side of the aisle you sit upon today, I want to thank you from the bottom of a grateful heart for the manifold courtesies and kindnesses of which I have been the recipient at your hands.

It has been a long time since March 4, 1913. It has covered a period in our history when prosperity has been with us, when depressions have been with us, and when national crises have been upon us. Serving with more than 2,500 men and women since I became a Member of this House, I still have the faith to believe that our country, as long as it is served by such men and women as these, is safe, that we will remain free, and that this great democracy will live on to serve. I know—I do not just think I know—as when crises of the past have come, if they come again, when the supreme test of the Nation comes, when its preservation is the question, these men and women of this House of Representatives will think and speak and act together for the preservation and the perpetuity of these priceless liberties that we enjoy.

It is a great thing to be chosen as a Member of this greatest of all popular legislative bodies. One term even for a constituency to trust a man or woman to speak their mind and cast their vote here is something to remember; but by the partiality and the graciousness and the confidence of one's colleagues to have been elevated to the high position that your favor has brought me to is a distinction that should satisfy the ambition of any man. I am one man in public life who has achieved every ambition he ever had.

Let me say to you again that I am grateful from the bottom of a grateful heart and I thank you.

THE LATE FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, due to the untimely death of our late beloved colleague, John Sullivan, of Missouri, the House adjourned yesterday in accordance with custom, transacting no business at all. Because of that situation it was impossible for Members to make their remarks on a very important event that happened 69 years ago yesterday in the birth of one of the outstanding Americans of all time, a man who devoted his entire life in the service of his State and country, both in time of peace and in time of war, and who became the Chief Executive of our beloved country.

Yesterday was the sixty-ninth anniversary of the birth of the late lamented but immortal Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Few figures in the passage of time, in the known history of man, have made their imprint on the minds of men more indelibly than has Franklin D. Roosevelt. Two and more generations from now, when the history of his day and era is written impartially and objectively by historians, projecting my mind into the future as far as it is humanly possible for me to do so, and analyzing the minds of such historians, it is my confident prediction that he will be numbered among the great constructive figures of all minds in the known history of man as a great humanitarian, a man who devoted his entire life to the sick, the oppressed, the exploited, the underprivileged, a man who led our country in time of great economic conflagration and rebuilt it; a man who led our country in time of war; a man whose life of leadership has been marked with the word "success." It is only fitting and proper, as we did before in the case of President McKinley, in honoring that great American, to pause today, delayed 24 hours, to honor the memory of a great man, a great American. No matter how one might have disagreed with him in life, I am sure that everyone who served in this body and every American have deep respect for the high motives that our late President entertained in giving our country the leadership he did during the many years he was our Chief Executive. So I pause to pay tribute to one whom I knew personally. To me it is worth living to have known the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, one whom I deeply respected as a public official and one who, in my opinion, the historians of tomorrow will number among the five greatest constructive figures in the history of all times.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may sit during the session of the House during general debate today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. CARNAHAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DOUGHTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks by inserting in the RECORD certain letters and data in connection with the speech he will make on the bill under consideration, H. R. 1612.

Mr. PHILLIPS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a resolution from the California State Legislature.

Mr. POULSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DONDERO (at the request of Mr. REED of New York) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. GAVIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances.

Mr. LATHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

TRADE AGREEMENTS EXTENSION ACT OF 1951

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 103 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immedately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1612) to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue for 1 day, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH], and now yield such time as he may desire to the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make two brief announcements. First, may I say that the following-named Members will be the official objectors on the Democratic side for the Eighty-second Congress for the Consent Calendar and the Private Calendar: The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TRIMBLE], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE], and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ASPINALL].

I also desire to announce that a number of Members of the House will attend the funeral of our late friend, John Sullivan, of Missouri. The requiem mass on the occasion of his burial will take place on Friday morning. Due to the weather difficulties now prevailing, arrangements will have to be made for them to leave early this evening in order to be sure they will arrive in time to attend the funeral. Consequently, the general debate on the reciprocal trade agreements bill will take place today, but the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule will be postponed until Monday next.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

(Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks and include an article appearing in the Lowell Sun of Saturday, January 27.)

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, those of you who were listening to Ray Heule's Three Star Extra on the air last night heard Ned Brooks, one of that trio of Three Stars, speak of the fact that the armed services were drafting into the Army and the Navy a large number, over 400 of the Veterans' Administration doctors and over 303 nurses have been called to the armed services; dentists are being taken also.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfair to take away from the veterans who have given so much for us, the battle-wounded and the ill, the mentally and physically ill veterans, their fine care. This is the second time this sort of thing has happened, because during World War II some of the very best doctors of the Veterans' Administration were drafted into the Army and the Navy. Finally after pleas by the Veterans' Administration and me, the Veterans' Administration doctors were given military status. That plan was helpful.

I have been working on this matter for some time but have been unsuccessful thus far. The Veterans' Administration has the finest medical and surgical service in the world today. It is poor appreciation of our disabled to take that service, that care away from them. The Veterans' Administration doctor should be given the same rank as is given the doctors in the Army and the Navy, and the nurses, too, should have the same rank. Then that very fine care could continue. The interest of Veterans' Administration three star extra should be very helpful in bringing about the results we desire.

Go into any ward today in the hospitals, and you can see the horrible mutilations that have taken place in this Korean War. Certainly when these men are discharged they should receive the very best of care. They should be given their chance to have everything they can to be physically and mentally rehabilitated.

Mr. Speaker, at Walter Reed Hospital there is a boy named Troilo. He was given an ovation in Constitution Hall when he was introduced at the Very Important Persons performance recently which was given for the aid of the veterans. Soldier Troilo is a double amputee. Before leaving Fort Devens in my district for Korea he met and became engaged to a very fine Lowell girl. That man is a Pennsylvanian, but love of a woman is going to make him a constituent of my district. We welcome him and will give him all honor.

[From the Lowell (Mass.) Sun of January 27, 1951]

LOWELL WOMAN TO MARRY WIDELY KNOWN ARMY AMPUTEE—JUDY PAGE, 20, OSGOOD AVENUE, ENGAGED TO PFC ANTHONY J. TROILO, KOREAN WAR HERO

LOWELL.—An attractive 22-year-old Osgood Avenue woman sat close by her radio last Thursday night and her eyes sparkled as she heard the tremendous 12-minute ovation bestowed on an Army amputee by President Truman and a group of Washington VIPS.

The occasion was the VIP amateur show of the Women's National Press Club at Constitution Hall and the special guest of the evening was Pfc Anthony J. Troilo, of Norristown, Pa., fiancé of Miss Judy Page, of 20 Osgood Avenue in West Centralville.

TOASTED BY NATION'S LEADERS

Her legless husband-to-be was being toasted by the Nation's highest leaders and the wife of the Vice President of the United States, Mrs. Alben Barkley, was pushing his wheel chair onto the stage while the plaudits of the large crowd rang in the ears of the Korean veteran.

She found it impossible to hold back the tears a few minutes later when the soft voice of her beloved began reciting the verse of the Battle Hymn of the Republic. Judy could visualize the emotionally thrilling moments as the President and Mrs. Truman, Vice President and Mrs. Barkley, and Representative Sam Rayburn and a host of other notables sat listening to her boy friend recite the famous verse.

The young couple have been planning their wedding day for almost 2 years. Luck hasn't been with them, until now.

Judy and Tony, a Purple Heart veteran of World War II, met while he was stationed at Fort Devens. During Tony's first Christmas at Fort Devens in 1949, he was invited to the Page home for a holiday dinner, and it was then that a romance blossomed. A few months later after their initial meeting they decided to be married.

The two settled on a date in the following July for the wedding but a month before the wedding was to take place Tony was informed that his outfit would be shipping out for Korea soon.

So the two young lovers decided to postpone the wedding until he was discharged from the service, which he thought would be in a couple of months. Fate had a different view on the matter.

TAKEN PRISONER

It was with his unit, C Battery, Tenth Field Artillery Battalion, Third Infantry Division, while they were racing toward the Manchurian border that they were ambushed and he was captured by the North Koreans.

The second day after his capture, Tony was turned over to the Chinese Communists who held him and many of his buddies prisoners for 20 days before he was finally liberated by units of the Twenty-fourth Army Division.

SUFFERED FROSTBITE

During the time he was captured, Tony was put into a flimsy wooden shack and had his shoes taken away from him. He was kept there for 10 days in freezing weather, and it was during this period that Tony received a serious case of frostbite which eventually led to the amputation of both legs below the knees in an Army hospital in Japan.

When Judy heard of the amputation of Tony's legs, she was naturally pained, not for herself, but for Tony, who she knew had suffered through a tremendous ordeal. She attended church every day and prayed that Tony would recover and be returned to her. God must have heard her pleadings, for Tony will recover and will return to Judy.

Tony was flown from Japan early in December to the United States and the Walter Reed Army Hospital in Washington, D. C., where he will undergo further surgery for the removal of six more inches from both legs.

GUEST OF DREW PEARSON

A few days before Christmas, Drew Pearson, syndicated Washington columnist, heard Tony's story and asked him to appear on his Sunday-night-before-Christmas radio program and, as an added treat, invited Judy and her mother for a 4-day all-expenses-paid trip to the Nation's capital for a visit with Tony.

Judy and Tony continue, as they have since he went overseas, to correspond every day and make plans for their wedding day, which they hope and pray will take place sometime this year. According to Judy, they will make their home in Lowell, where, as Tony told his fiancée, "he feels at home."

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, while we may differ in our votes on the bill, I think we all agree that the rule, House Resolution 103, providing for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1612) to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, should be adopted, and the measure brought to the floor for debate.

I have taken this time this morning, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of correcting an evident misunderstanding. I am a national committee member. In the last few days, there has been a great deal of publicity in the newspapers, and some statements have been made on the floor of another legislative body, relative to the power and influence of national committee members in connection with certain appointments to positions in the new agencies of Government which have been created to meet the grave national emergency which confronts us. So I want to make this statement: I have not been approached by any public official or representative of this administration with the request that I, as a member of the national committee make any endorsement or recommendation of any person who has sought or has been appointed to any of these new positions which have been so lately created.

I have checked with two of my colleagues on the national committee, the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HARDEN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE], and they advise me they have not been so approached. So after a rather careful, and prolonged study and investigation, I find that if this rule that all patronage matters must be cleared with the members of the national committee, as charged, is in effect it does not apply to the membership national committee to which Mrs. HARDEN, Mr. REECE, and I belong. I wish to make it very clear that we are members of the Republican National Committee, and as such, we have not been bothered at any time, or consulted or contacted, concerning any of these appointments to jobs downtown, as some people may think we have been.

So I hope that those who do seek such appointments in these great war agencies to these new jobs that have been created because of this great national emergency will realize none of the three of us has anything to do with such patronage matters. Whether any other committee member has any influence in connection with selecting these new job holders, I do not know; but, always being very honest and frank with my colleagues, I might say to the gentleman from Tennessee, I am rather suspicious that perhaps there is some foundation for these reports of political influence dominating the employment situation here in Washington, because, bearing a rather honorable but common name, I sometimes get calls actually meant for other Members of the House having names similar to mine, and before the caller finds out from which State I come, am consulted on Federal patronage matters. But I do want to make it clear that it has not been the practice of this administration to consult the members of the Republican National Committee in connection with any dispensation of Federal jobs, as has been so freely discussed in the other body, and in the columns of the press, during recent days.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I represent a heavily populated railroad district in Pennsylvania, where we have hundreds of retired railroad employees or their survivors who are barely existing on a meager annuity or pension. These good Americans are victims of the high cost of living and without fear of contradiction, I can say that some of them are actually hungry.

During the Eighty-first Congress there were nearly 50 amendments offered to the Railroad Retirement Act, all of them providing for liberalization of the existing law and an increase in monthly benefits. I was among the Members of Congress who sponsored these amendments and pleaded for action, only to be informed that the retirement fund would not stand an increase in benefits. In this connection, there was an honest difference of opinion among those who speak for railway labor and among Members of Congress.

Already in the Eighty-second Congress, many bills have been introduced to provide for the liberalization of the Railroad Retirement Act and to increase monthly benefits. Among these bills are several measures introduced by me which include H. R. 1404, H. R. 1405, and H. R. 1406.

H. R. 1404 provides for a 20-percent increase to all annuitants and pensioners under the Railroad Retirement Act.

H. R. 1405 provides for a 20 percent increase for widows and other survivors of retired railroad employees.

H. R. 1406 is a straight across-the-board increase of $15 monthly to all retired railroad employees.

These bills in my estimation represent a reasonable approach to the plight of the retired railroad employee or his survivors, and at the same time they can serve as a basis for immediate action by this Congress in amending the Railroad Retirement Act.

According to the Railroad Retirement Board, the average age of the disabled and retired railroader who is receiving a monthly annuity is 70.2 years. There are 247,000 of them and their average monthly check is $82.81.

The average age of the pensioner is 81.9 years and there are 7,840 of them who receive an average monthly pension of $70.80.

The average age of the widow of a retired railroader is 72.8 years and there are 75,491 of them who receive an average monthly survivor's annuity of $29.59.

Taking into consideration the meager monthly benefits payable under the Railroad Retirement Act, it is interesting to compare them with the sharp increase in the cost of living since 1937, when Congress enacted the Railroad Retirement Act.

The following information was furnished me by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor under date of January 12, 1951. The letter reads as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1951.

The Honorable JAMES E. VAN ZANDT,
House of Representatives,
Congress of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN VAN ZANDT: In response to your telephone request to Mr. Hollander of our office today, I am sending you the following tabulations of consumers' prices indexes for moderate-income families in large cities combined (national average), by major classes, for the years 1937, 1948, and for November 1950, the latest month for which figures are available, and the percent changes for the periods specified.

INDEXES (1935–39=100)

	1937	1948	Nov. 15, 1950
All items	102.7	171.2	175.6
Food	105.3	210.2	209.5
Apparel	102.8	198.0	195.0
Rent	100.9	117.4	125.4
Fuel, electricity and refrigeration	100.2	133.9	143.7
Housefurnishings	104.3	195.8	202.3
Miscellaneous	101.0	149.9	160.5

PERCENT CHANGES

	1937 to 1948	1948 to November 1950	1937 to November 1950
All items	+66.7	+2.6	+71.0
Food	+99.6	−.3	+99.0
Apparel	+92.6	−1.5	+89.7
Rent	+16.4	+6.8	+24.3
Fuel, electricity and refrigeration	+33.6	+7.3	+43.4
Housefurnishings	+87.7	+3.3	+94.0
Miscellaneous	+48.4	+7.1	+58.9

I hope these figures will serve your purpose. Do not hesitate to call on me if I can be of service at any time.

Very truly yours,

EWAN CLAGUE,
Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

Mr. Speaker, since the Railroad Retirement Act was approved by Congress, the only increase granted was the 20-percent increase approved by the Eightieth Congress to annuitants and pensioners. This increase did not include widows or survivors. Yet, the cost of living on all items increased 71 percent between 1937 and November 1950 and, as we all know, is continually rising.

As I said in the beginning, the retired railroader or his survivors are in many cases actually hungry and we are guilty of gross negligence if we continue to ignore their plight.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE].

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I paid tribute, along with other Members of the House, to the great service of our great Speaker, as will appear in the RECORD, but at this time I am reminded that today another Government employee rounds out 49 years of service: Mr. Joseph H. McGann, who has been with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for 49 years.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may revise and extend my remarks, and that the same be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the resolution under consideration makes in order the bill (H. R. 1612) which is the usual extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act which we have had heretofore. The resolution provides for 1 day of general debate. As I understand it, the general debate will continue throughout the day, and the vote will be taken later. I have no request for time on this side, Mr. Speaker.

I therefore move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1612) to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1612, with Mr. WALTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the debate will continue throughout the day, with the time equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 25 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I feel very much honored by this large attendance here today, since almost the full membership of the House have come here for discussion of this very important resolution under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, H. R. 1612, the pending bill, would extend for another 3 years from June 12, 1951, the authority of the President to enter into foreign-trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930. It will be remembered that the original trade agreements legislation in 1934 was conceived as a basic change in the American tariff philosophy embodied in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, which established the highest tariff schedules in our history. At the time of enactment of the Smoot-Hawley tariff law, the most eminent economists in the country warned of the potential dangers from its enactment. Although its sponsors predicted that it would bring about unparalleled prosperity, we were soon to experience our worst economic catastrophe.

It was in this setting that the Honorable Cordell Hull, one of the most honored and revered statesmen and greatest public servants our country has given to the world, conceived the reciprocal trade program for adjustment on a mutually reciprocal basis with other nations of the barriers to world trade. This is the picture which he presented to the Committee on Ways and Means on March 8, 1934—and my colleagues will well remember that he had served for 16 years on the Committee on Ways and Means before he left the Congress. He said:

> Extreme obstructions to international trade inevitably result in serious economic controversies or wars, the minimum of commerce between nations, constant overproduction through lack of facilities for distribution, together with every sort of artificial device to deal with the domestic price situation, vast idleness of labor, and emigration of capital into thousands of foreign industrial plants, to say nothing of the difficulties of effecting transfers of debt service due from one country to another. The alternative policy would appear to comprize a liberalization of the existing obstructions and restrictions by degrees and over a period of time through careful trade arrangements, to a more moderate and reasonable basis.

The Committee on Ways and Means agreed with the policy recommendations of Secretary of State Hull. The committee concluded in its report on the trade agreements bill:

> To meet the present world situation the first feasible step is to enable the Executive to enter upon a program of bargaining agreements with other nations. The very nature of international negotiation requires that it should be in the hands of the Executive; and to meet an international condition where foreign executives are being clothed with ever greater and greater power to effectuate speedy trade agreements, the United States, if it is to regain its lost proportion of world trade, must repose similar confidence in its President.
> The proposed bill nevertheless does not remove from Congress its control of policy which must underlie every tariff adjustment. Although the exigencies of present-day conditions require that more and more of the details be left to Presidential determination, the Congress must and always will declare the policy to which the Executive gives effect.

OPERATION OF THE TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Since the original enactment in 1934, the administration of the reciprocal trade program has been reviewed by the Congress on six previous occasions. Except for the Trade Agreements Act of 1948, enacted when opponents of the reciprocal trade program were in control of the Congress, the legislation on each occasion has been extended in substantially its original form. The procedures under existing law are as follows:

AGENCIES REPRESENTED ON THE TRADE AGREEMENTS COMMITTEE

First. The statute vests the trade-agreements authority in the President, and he is responsible for the decisions involved in making a trade agreement. In making decisions under the Trade Agreements Act, the President is required by law to consult the Departments of State, Commerce, Agriculture, and Defense, and the Tariff Commission. In actual practice, the President calls upon not only these departments and agencies, but also other departments represented on the Trade Agreements Committee, including the Departments of Labor, Interior, and the Treasury, and also the Economic Cooperation Administration.

INITIAL SELECTION OF ITEMS FOR POSSIBLE NEGOTIATIONS

Second. The Trade Agreements Committee analyzes our trade with a particular country and selects items which we export to that country upon which concessions might be made and articles imported into this country upon which tariff concessions might be made. The list of articles imported into the United States is submitted by the Trade Agreements Committee to the President for approval.

PUBLIC HEARINGS

Third. When the President has approved the list of imports suggested for negotiation, hearings are scheduled to obtain the views of all interested persons and groups. This may be accomplished by filing a written memorandum, although most parties also appear in person. After the hearing is concluded, the record is reviewed by a subcommittee which recommends whether a concession would be justified and if so what the extent of the concession should be. These recommendations are then reviewed by the entire Trade Agreements Committee and the recommendations of the committee, together with any dissenting views, are forwarded to the President for final decision.

A similar procedure is followed with respect to concessions on American exports which may be scheduled for negotiation.

REVIEW BY THE PRESIDENT

Fourth. The President reviews the recommendations of the Trade Agreements Committee and, in the event of disagreement, decides what course shall be followed. He then instructs the United States negotiators what concessions they may make, provided they can get from the negotiating country the concessions which are being asked.

NEGOTIATION OF A TRADE AGREEMENT

Fifth. The actual negotiation is conducted by a team consisting usually of representatives of the Department of State, the Tariff Commission, and the Department of Commerce, as well as representatives from other departments with a particular interest in the items being negotiated.

In recent years the United States has taken the lead in arranging for negotiations among several countries at the same time. At Geneva in 1947, the United States and 22 other countries negotiated tariff concessions simultaneously, and all concessions made by one country to another country were also made available to the other nations participating. These concessions are embodied in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Similar multilateral negotiations were conducted in France in 1949 and are in process in England at the present time.

THE ESCAPE CLAUSE

Sixth. In every trade agreement negotiated since 1943, an escape clause has been inserted under which a concession may be withdrawn if it is found that as a result of unforeseen circumstances and of the concession, imports are causing or threatening serious injury to a domestic industry. It is indicative of the care with which trade agreements have been negotiated that, although the United States has made concessions on several thousand items in trade agreements that contain the escape clause only 20 applications for investigations, covering 17 products, have been filed with the Tariff Commission. Of these applications, only one, involving women's fur felt hats and hat bodies, has been found by the Tariff Commission to justify action.

This is how the Trade Agreements Act was conceived and how it has been administered.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE RECIPROCAL TRADE PROGRAM

We now have trade agreements in effect with 45 other countries, with which, in 1949, we carried on about 75 percent of our foreign trade. These countries and ourselves together carry on about 82 percent of the total trade of the world. I believe it a fair summation of the testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means that no representative of an American industry presented any convincing evidence that it had either been seriously injured or threatened with serious injury as a result of concessions made under the Trade Agreements Act. As has been the case over the years, the opponents of the trade-agreements legislation rest their case upon the vague and thus far illusory fear that sometime in the future they might suffer some injury.

On the other hand, American industries which rely heavily on export markets have benefited materially by the adjustments made by other nations in trade agreements with this country. Those who express such great concern for the welfare of domestic industry, mining, and agriculture might well take into account that in 1949 the United States exported 39 percent of our production of wheat; 32 percent of our raw cotton; 25 percent of the leaf tobacco and turpentine; 24 percent of the lard; 17 percent of the soybean oil and 10 percent of the soybeans; 13 percent of our condensed, evaporated, and dried milk.

We exported, in 1949, 25 percent of all lubrication oil, 30 percent of our paraffin wax, and 12 percent of our anthracite coal.

Our exports of manufactured articles included 32 percent of all machine tools; 20 percent of all agricultural machinery—1948 figure; almost 10 percent of all cotton cloth and duck; about 9 percent of the broad-woven synthetic fabrics, such as rayon and nylon; and over 8 percent of all iron and steel products, including over 15 percent of the tinplate, 12 percent of heavy structural shapes, and 11 percent of the rails.

The welfare of these exporting industries and of others, with total employment of around 40,000,000, has been greatly enhanced by the concessions which have been obtained through the reciprocal trade program. In 1947 at least 2,400,000 workers were engaged in production for export alone. Moreover, the concessions granted by the United States have enhanced the ability of other countries to purchase the goods which we have to sell.

THE 1948 PERIL-POINT AMENDMENT

Despite this record of achievement, which has been generally acclaimed by organizations representing industry, agriculture, labor, and the American consumer, and which has been approved in editorials of the vast majority of the American press, the following crippling limitations upon these tried and tested procedures were imposed by the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948:

First. The President was prohibited from negotiating any trade agreement until he had received a report from the Tariff Commission fixing a peril-point or minimum-tariff level on each article to be considered for possible modification of duties or until 120 days had elapsed. Just what does this mean? The effect is to superimpose the judgment of the Tariff Commission over the collective judgment of the Trade Agreements Committee, consisting of all the interested departments and agencies of the Government in the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements.

Second. The Tariff Commission could no longer be represented on the Trade Agreements Committee and would be precluded from consulting with the President in preparing for trade-agreement negotiation.

Third. In the actual negotiation of a trade agreement with tariff experts of foreign countries, the President was denied the participation and assistance of some of the best qualified personnel in our own Government—the members of the Tariff Commission and their staff.

Fourth, if the President, in the overall national interest, decided to negotiate a reduction in tariff rates below the minimum recommended by the Tariff Commission, whose only concern was the protection of American producers, he had to justify publicly his action to the Congress.

These restrictions were found by the Committee on Ways and Means and the Congress in 1949 to be both unwise and unnecessary. They are again advanced by opponents of reciprocal trade agreements, who do not dare openly to advocate complete repeal of the legislation.

CONCLUSION

It is my judgment that the expansion of international trade and the elimination of trade barriers provide a stable foundation upon which to build a sound foreign economic policy. The trade-agreements program, in my opinion, is the best method yet devised, tested by the experience of 17 years, of attaining these goals.

I understand that several amendments may be offered to improve the program and to perfect the techniques for negotiating trade agreements. I believe that, in addition to the substance of such amendments, it may be well to take into account their sponsorship. I suspect that they may be offered by Members who, over the years, have been among the stanchest opponents of the trade-agreements legislation. Now, like Greeks bearing gifts, they seek to aid us. Having found that they could not kill the reciprocal trade program by frontal assault, they have now embarked on a flank attack.

The record of recent multilateral negotiations bespeaks the success with which the program is being administered. These activities, in turn, help to insure the realization of the greatest possible benefit from our Marshall-plan aid. It would seem fruitless to revive the production of the factories and farms of the war-torn countries, if the most efficient use of this production is to be prevented by barriers to trade. And the maximum collective economic strength of the free nations is now essential to our military security in the days ahead.

It was my privilege to sponsor the original legislation to implement the Hull reciprocal trade program in a period of economic crisis. I am as proud of the sponsorship of that measure and of every genuine bill to extend the life of the trade-agreements program as I am of any bill that I have introduced in my 40 years in the Congress.

It is my earnest conviction that the extension of the program for another 3 years is fully as important to our national welfare as was its enactment in the first instance.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. VURSELL. I am very much interested in the splendid talk the gentleman is making, pointing out the possible operation of the escape clause over the last number of years. I should like to inquire of the gentleman if our Government has made use of the escape clause to any considerable extent since these treaties were enacted, in which the escape clause was written.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will be very glad to answer. It is my understanding that dozens of agreements have been negotiated and entered into making concessions on thousands of articles, and only in about 20 instances have there been even a request for consideration under the escape clause, or has there been complaint that any industry was injured or threatened with injury.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will be glad to.

Mr. VURSELL. I happen to be interested in this matter because of the Elgin Watch Co. and other people engaged in the manufacture of jeweled watches who I happen to know have done practically everything within their power in the past to get the use of the escape clause. Does the gentleman have in mind or recalls whether or not the escape clause has yet been applied for the protection of the American watch industry?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I believe there was no escape clause in the trade agreement with Switzerland until recently. It was in that agreement that the concession on jeweled-watch movements was made. I have not heard of any watch industry that has been in any distress or financial trouble with the exception of the Waltham Watch Co. They have been in trouble for some time. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned them a lot of money, I understand. However, I understand the Elgin Watch Co., in the gentleman's home State, is so successful that it has been paying extra dividends the last few years, so there will not be any occasion for it to apply under the escape clause for any relief.

Mr. VURSELL. I do not happen to know what their progress from a business and financial standpoint has been the last year or two, but I do know that a few years ago they were down here pointing out to many Members of Congress from Illinois, as well as other Congressmen, the devastating effect. They told us they were unable to get any relief whatever from these trade agreements, especially insofar as the application of the escape clause was concerned. I just give the gentleman that for what it is worth.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman know whether or not these complaints are based on the fear of injury, or on an injury that has resulted as an effect of these trade agreements? Before our committee the entire complaint against the program was not based on any serious damage that has been done, with the possible exception of one or two isolated industries that claimed to be adversely affected. They never mentioned the benefits that have come as a result of these trade agreements, but complained about the injuries. Even the complaint, however, usually was that they feared what might occur, rather than what had occurred.

Mr. VURSELL. I do not want to argue the question with my esteemed friend, but I should like to point out that since the last World War we have had only three or four watchmaking concerns in the United States, and from 75 to 85 percent of all the watches used in this country are watches imported mainly from Switzerland. It seems quite evident on the face of it that the watch industry has not fared too well, else there would not be but two or three major watch companies now operating in the country.

Mr. DOUGHTON. As far as I recall, there is no complaint that any watchmaking company in the country has suffered at all under any circumstances, except the Waltham Watch Co. That is my understanding.

I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SADLAK. It is my understanding that the Waltham Watch Co. went out of business primarily because of the fact that it had been engaged in manufacturing precision instruments, timepieces, and so forth, that were used in the last war. During the time they were so engaged, Swiss watches were permitted to come in to take over their trade. Now that many of our industries are turning to the manufacture of defense needs, is it possible that other watch companies might engage in similar manufacture, such as making timepieces for guided missiles, and so forth, and that, with additional watches coming in during this entire time, whether they be from Switzerland or other countries, these other watch companies might again find themselves in the very same situation the Waltham Watch Co. found itself?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is possible. If that evil day arrives, which we hope it never will, then will be the time to make complaint and apply for relief under the escape clause that has now been inserted in the reciprocal-trade agreement with Switzerland. You cannot anticipate what will happen years and years from now, I am sure. It is hard enough to anticipate what may occur a month or 2 months from now. However, I would think that if manufacturing concerns in this country are now going to shift from making watches to making war implements and other things necessary for our national defense, then it would be fortunate for the watch consumers of this country that some foreign country can supply them with watches. We would have been out of watches, according to what you say, if that had been done.

Mr. SADLAK. When this situation, which is becoming more aggravated daily, is over, our watch companies would like again to revert to the manufacture of watches. There would be no one to whom to sell the goods, and the market would again be flooded.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Every watch company in this country which is operated on a businesslike basis is getting along well. What more could you want?

Mr. SADLAK. I am just trying to look in the future a little bit further. If these treaties continue, what will happen to the other industries, in view of the fact we are rapidly converting to defense work?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does not the gentleman think that we should cross that bridge when we come to the stream?

Mr. SADLAK. Of course a long time is taken up in the negotiation of these treaties.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If we were to legislate in anticipation of every possible contingency which might arise, I do not know what we would have to go by.

Mr. SADLAK. Then the gentleman agrees that the proper protection for this situation would be to make sure that the escape clause is in all of these agreements?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, I understand that it is the present policy of our Government to get escape clauses into existing trade agreements which do not now contain them. A congressional mandate, however, requiring that an escape clause be put in all present agreements which do not contain such a clause would put our negotiators in the position of being forced to get the clause inserted regardless of the price. The other countries' negotiators, realizing this fact, would simply raise the ante. This is not the best or most intelligent method of protecting the interests of the United States. It would certainly seriously handicap our negotiators.

I do agree, however, that the insertion of an escape clause in all trade agreements is a desirable goal.

Mr. SADLAK. The gentleman also agress the only time the escape clause was invoked during all the time that these treaties have been in existence was in the case of the fur felt hats and the fur felt hat bodies coming from Czechoslovakia?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is correct. In the other cases, the Tariff Commission has found no basis for recommending that the escape clause be invoked. And I know, on the basis of the hearings before our committee, that those who represent labor, those who represent agriculture, and those who represent industry, are of the opinion that the Reciprocal Trade Agreement policy has been a success and they recommend that it be extended. That is about all that I can tell the gentleman. Of course it is entirely possible that in some isolated case, in some industry, a plant might be adversely affected. But on the other side of the scales the benefits far outweight any damage or hardship or injustice which might occur to some small isolated industry. Consider our exports of agricultural products of tobacco and cotton and wheat and exports of industrial products such as automobiles and tools and a thousand and one other things. If we do not buy something, how are we going to have an export market for the products which we have in excess? Of course, if you could sell everything and buy nothing, that would be fine; but that does not work. We tried that under the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act and we tried it under the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act, and it did not work. Now the reciprocal trade policy has been tried, and it has been found to be the most successful policy yet. I do not claim that it is perfect. Nobody claims it is perfect. We have not yet attained a state of perfection in legislation in any field, so far as I know. But as far as it has been tested, the Trade Agreements Act is the most successful and satisfactory and practical method that has ever been devised for dealing with tariff matters.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SCUDDER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the agricultural leaders were in favor of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act as administered?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Absolutely.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Goss, master of the National Grange, was against it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I know; but the American Farm Bureau Federation is for it. The National Farmers Union is for it. Of course there are a few dissenting votes here and there, but the large preponderance of those who express the view of agriculture or represent agriculture favor the continuance of this policy.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Wiser, president of the Farm Bureau of California, is very much against the program as it is now administered.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes, but he is in the minority.

Mr. SCUDDER. No, he is the president of the Farm Bureau of California and he speaks for the entire organization.

Mr. DOUGHTON. He may be, but he is in the minority so far as agriculture is concerned.

Mr. SCUDDER. No, I would not say so. I think the Farm Bureau represents agriculture.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman did not hear the testimony as we did, or he would think otherwise.

Mr. SCUDDER. I have lived in agricultural areas all my life. I believe I can appreciate whom they represent, because the Farm Bureau does represent the producing agriculturalists of the country and they are very definitely against the program as it is presently administered. There should be a sound administration of the program.

Last week I had a report from my district where they have lowered the tariff and they are bringing into this country almonds. That is a sizable industry in my district. So far, out of this crop they have brought in 7,200,000 pounds of processed almonds, and it is feared that if this is not curtailed the imports will reach eighteen to twenty million pounds. If they would reduce that to 500,000 pounds it would about equal the amount of consumption together with the almonds produced in this country. It is anticipated that they will bring in from Spain between eighteen and twenty million pounds of processed almonds this year, which will ruin the entire industry in California.

Mr. DOUGHTON. But it has not been done yet.

Mr. SCUDDER. Well, it will be.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is what they all say. They all talk about what might happen. When that time comes, they can invoke the escape clause.

Mr. SCUDDER. Last year it broke the olive business in California.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, they are not all the people in the United States.

Mr. SCUDDER. But they are an appreciable amount.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course, they are. The consumers of this country are also entitled to some consideration. You do not hear a voice raised by those who oppose the reciprocal trade policy in the interest of the consumer.

Mr. SCUDDER. I had an agricultural group listen to me last year when they were investigating these things because of the effect on labor.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is entitled to his views, but he is in the minority. He is so far in the minority as to be lonesome.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. HERLONG. In connection with what the gentleman from California [Mr. SCUDDER] said, I think the record will show that I opposed this legislation at the last session. We, in Florida, have a peculiar problem that is very much the same as that of the gentleman from California, but I have taken the time to call my people down there who are interested in this and explain to them the over-all values of the program, in view of the present international situation. They have told me within the last hour that as good Americans they would not oppose this legislation and would not ask me to oppose it, because of the value to the entire country at this time. I just wanted you to know how they felt.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will yield to my friend, but I know his attitude beforehand, that if he had his way he would kill this program, that he would wipe it out overnight if he had his way.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. My chairman, as always, is direct, as he always is when we deal across the table.

I was pleased a bit ago, though, to hear him imply that there might be some small industries which are hurt, but that because they were small it would not be critical to the Nation's welfare. Is that correct?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I did not hear all of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to say that it might result in some small industries being damaged, but that the over-all good to the Nation is the controlling factor, and that justifies injuries to some small businesses. Is that right?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will answer the gentleman's question by asking him one: The gentleman will recall that we had extensive hearings, giving an opportunity to be heard to those opposed to the bill and to those who favored the extension of the act; was not the overwhelming testimony to the effect—I do not mean of the hired mourners and paid lobbyists, but I mean of those who directly represented industry, agriculture, and labor—that labor, agriculture, and industry favored the extension of this reciprocal trade policy? If not, why has it stood up for over 16 years? It should be remembered that every 2 years we have had the opportunity of changing it, or doing away with it, yet it has stood the test of time. Notwithstanding that the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to emasculate it. Unable to kill it outright, he wants to cripple it by flank attack by offering crippling amendments. I know the gentleman's attitude.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has referred to the great watchmaking industry, the timepiece making industry. He seemed to agree that that industry may have been damaged somewhat. I say that the watchmaking industry has been damaged—25 percent of the industry has been eliminated. The great Waltham Watch Co. had to fold up and close up, one of four great companies, had to close up as the result of the reciprocal-trade program. The gentleman justifies that by saying that the over-all economy of the country is helped even though that one industry may be damaged. That is his position. He also believes that other industry, as I understand—the pottery business—it employs only a few people, relatively speaking, and perhaps the general economy can stand the loss of that industry and the country keep going ahead. But with respect to watches and timepieces, in this hour of war when that industry is needed badly, when it is vital to the conduct of the war, we have to go to Switzerland in order to get the instruments we need with which to carry on the war. That is not right. That is why this policy is hurting our economy today.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will ask the gentleman one question: Whether or not he favors, and if so, when he was converted to the reciprocal trade policy dealing with tariff problems? Whether or not he will agree that it has demonstrated itself to be the most effective, most desirable, and most satisfactory method of dealing with our foreign trade? Will the gentleman answer that "Yes" or "No"?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I answer "No." I think the boys in the State Department are trading away the economy of our country by bringing in goods from abroad. The gentleman states that American labor is for this bill. The American Flint Glass Workers Union is opposed to it, the Atlantic Fishermen's Union, the Seafarers International Union, the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders and dozens of others right here in the testimony are opposed to it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If this is an unsound policy why did not the Republicans repeal it in the Eightieth Congress?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I am willing to do it right now.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman knows public sentiment would have condemned your action if you had.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Under leave already granted to extend my remarks, I insert in the RECORD the following statements, letters, and editorials:

STATEMENT BY THE HONORABLE DEAN ACHESON, SECRETARY OF STATE, BEFORE THE HOUSE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE, MONDAY, JANUARY 22, 1951, IN SUPPORT OF RENEWAL OF THE TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. Chairman, I am appearing today in support of H. R. 1612, a bill to extend the Trade Agreements Act for a further period of 3 years. Statements in support of the bill are also being sent to the committee by the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, Defense, Interior, Labor, Treasury, and the Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

PRESENT SERIOUS SITUATION

I want, first, to place the trade-agreements program in the context of our total foreign policy. The President, in his State of the Union and budget messages, has described the challenge of our times and what we as a people and as a Government must do to meet it. He has explained that this challenge is not only the threat of military aggression. It is also the threat of subversion, of stirring up class strife, of exploiting discontent, of preventing economic improvement. He has pointed out that we must be prepared to meet this threat in both of its aspects.

To do this we must do everything possible to build up the strength of the free world and to give its people a real stake in its future.

There is great need in the world today for expansion of production so that the peoples in the less-developed areas may look forward to better living conditions and have a democratic alternative to the promises of the Kremlin. We will need to continue economic assistance for this purpose.

In other areas where postwar recovery is nearly complete, some countries will need further economic assistance to mount the necessary effort for our common defense.

Another integral part of the process of building strength in the free world has been the effort to expand the flow of trade. Only by a greater exchange of goods between countries can the full benefits of economic development and greater production be maintained.

The trade-agreements program has been a major element in our participation in this process of expanding world trade.

ECONOMIC PROGRESS SINCE THE WAR

In facing the crucial peril of today, we can be thankful that so much has been accomplished since 1945 in rebuilding the economic strength of many areas of the world.

Our own country has higher levels of employment and production than ever before. With the aid of the European recovery program, the countries of Western Europe have made remarkable progress in the restoration of their production and in building up their economic strength. Production in Latin America and in other areas of the world has substantially increased. Considerable progress has been made toward a restoration in balance in the international balance of payments of many countries.

Through the economic-development programs of various governments, the point 4 program and the technical-assistance programs of the United Nations, a concerted effort has been begun to help improve economic conditions in the underdeveloped areas of the world. The more developed countries have started to share with the people in those areas some of the skills and some of the knowledge which will help them to improve their present unsatisfactory standards of living; which will give them a real stake in the future.

Important steps have been taken for the expansion of world trade. Tariffs have been reduced over a wider area of world trade than ever before. Agreement has been reached limiting the use of various forms of trade restrictions. A wide area of trade in Europe has been entirely freed from quotas. Some important restrictions in the Western Hemisphere have been lifted completely.

Each of these activities has contributed in its own way to building greater strength and greater unity in the free world. Each has produced both immediate improvements and promise for the future. Each has been carried on by many countries working together. None could have achieved comparable results if the various countries had been working separately and alone.

NEED TO MAINTAIN GAINS

It is essential that these gains should be preserved. Wherever possible, they should be carried forward. In mobilizing to defend ourselves, we must not neglect or lose sight of the positive things that we are fighting for.

It is obvious that for some time to come large areas of world trade will be under some kind of control. Some of these controls, for example, will be imposed for security reasons. Others will be imposed to assure an equitable distribution of scarce materials. Yet there will still be a substantial volume of trade moving in regular commercial channels. But we do not want those controls to go beyond what is really necessary. We do not want any unnecessary obstacles to interfere with the flow of needed goods. It is essential to our security and well-being that the objective of expanding trade be kept constantly before us and that the instruments for such expansion be kept available and used wherever and whenever possible.

The Trade Agreements Act is such an instrument. The act has enabled the United States to participate for many years in the practical work of world-wide tariff reduction. It has done more than that. It has become a symbol of United States determination to lead in the cooperative effort to expand world trade.

Renewal of the act will reaffirm that determination. Failure to renew the act would be a symbol of withdrawal from that cooperative effort.

OPERATIONS UNDER THE ACT

The Government agencies which have been administering the act over the past 16 years have rendered an account of their stewardship from time to time in the hearings which have been held before this committee on the occasion of the successive renewals of the act. I would like, however, to summarize briefly the scope of what has been done under the authority of the act and to refresh the committee's recollection again as to the manner in which the act has been administered.

The results of the operation of the trade agreements program to date are set forth authoritatively and in detail in the reports of the Tariff Commission to the Congress. The most recent of these reports covers the period April 1949 to June 1950 and has, I believe, recently been made available to this committee.

During the course of the years in which the Trade Agreements Act has been in effect, we have negotiated trade agreements with 45 countries, with which in 1949 we carried on about 75 percent of our foreign trade. These countries and ourselves together carry on 82 percent of the total trade of the world.

In these negotiations the administration has kept continuously in mind the needs of producers and workers in both American industry and American agriculture. The concessions we have granted have applied almost equally to agricultural products and nonagricultural products. On the other side of the ledger slightly more concessions have been obtained for agricultural products in other countries than for nonagricultural products.

The earlier agreements negotiated under the act were agreements simply between ourselves and one other country. There are now 14 of these bilateral agreements.

Under the 1945 renewal, however, a new approach was used, which was designed to increase the benefits to be obtained under the program and to widen the area of world trade covered by reductions of tariffs and tariff preferences.

This approach was to invite a number of countries to negotiate with us simultaneously and at the same time to negotiate with each other. The effect was to extend the area of reductions of tariffs and preferences to the trade between the other countries themselves, and thus greatly to increase the potential effect of the negotiations upon the level of world trade. Moreover, the United States becomes entitled to the benefits of the tariff concessions and preference reductions made by the other countries to each other, as well as those negotiated directly with us.

The result of these multilateral negotiations is embodied in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This technique has proved so successful that 32 countries are now parties to that agreement and 7 more are now negotiating to accede to it at Torquay. The products included in the tariff schedules of the general agreement account for somewhat over half the entire trade of the world.

A further reason why the multilateral approach was felt to be more effective in helping to expand trade was that it would mean a far wider application of the general provisions of trade agreements.

These general provisions, as the committee will recall, obligate the parties to the agreement to do such things as give each other most-favored-nation treatment, not to put disguised tariffs on imports in the form of discriminatory internal taxes, to minimize the restrictive effect of customs regulations, to limit the use of quotas, not to increase preferences, permit them to take action necessary for their national security, and so forth. With the large number of countries now parties to the general agreement, these provisions constitute an important body of international commercial policy rules, and have provided a basis for the settlement of a variety of trade disputes.

The periodic meetings of the parties to the general agreement have provided a convenient opportunity for each country to put into actual practice the vital principle of consulting with other countries before taking action which might adversely affect their trade. The atmosphere around the table has been one of mutual understanding, cooperation, and respect. We hope to be able to find ways of strengthening the general agreement and making its operation even more effective.

Thus these trade-agreement negotiations have brought about a substantial reduction of tariffs and of tariff preferences on a very wide area of the world's trade.

It is particularly notable that during the period of this activity the people of the United States have achieved the highest levels of prosperity and real personal income that this country has ever known. This great expansion of employment and consumption is one of the significant factors which enables our economy to make its maximum contribution to the expansion of world trade.

The standards of wages and working conditions of the wage and salary earners of the United States, as well as the standards maintained by our farmers, during this period have been the highest in history. These standards will continue to improve over time. What has been truly remarkable about this improvement has been the generality with which standards have risen—the way in which workers and farmers in all segments of industry have benefited. This phenomenon should put to rest for once and for all the old fear that a lowering of tariff barriers would depress labor standards in the United States. Despite substantial differences in money wages paid to workers in our farms and factories and those paid abroad, the superior efficiency of our industry and agriculture has offset the apparent wage disadvantage. So much so, in fact, that it is United States competition that is feared in many areas of the world, rather than the competition of countries where wages are low and efficiency is equally low.

There are some special cases in which disparities in wages might create some degree of competitive problem, even for United States industry. This is particularly the case in industries where there has been relatively little mechanization and where labor cost is still a very large proportion of total cost. The record of action under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act demonstrates clearly that we have been fully aware of this situation, and that we have carefully acted with respect to situations of this kind in a manner that would avoid serious injury to the industry and the workers involved.

The trade agreements job has been very carefully done.

In the first place, all of these negotiations, whether bilateral or multilateral, have been conducted on a product-by-product basis. This has enabled us and the other countries to take into account the needs and problems of particular industries on the basis of the facts of each case. No country has been obligated to give concessions on any particular product. No country has been expected to give concessions unless it got satisfactory concessions in return. And every agreement negotiated since 1943, including the general agreement, has included a general escape clause. This clause permits the withdrawal or modification of a concession if, as a result of unforeseen circumstances, imports increase in such a manner as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers.

The procedures followed within the United States Government are carefully designed to permit maximum scope for negotiation and at the same time to guard against injury to domestic interests.

Responsibility for decisions under the act rests upon the President.

Because of the wide variety of interests which are necessarily involved in the tariff problem, the President has entrusted it to a committee composed of representatives from a number of agencies, each of which is directly concerned with important aspects of the problem. These agencies are: the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Defense, Interior, Labor, State, and Treasury, the Economic Cooperation Administration, and the Tariff Commission. This committee is known as the Trade Agreements Committee. It is chaired by a representative of the Department of State.

This Committee makes its recommendations directly to the President.

The members of the Trade Agreements Committee attend the conferences at which tariff negotiations are held, such as the conferences at Geneva and Torquay. The negotiating teams, which handle the actual details of the day-to-day negotiations, also include members from several agencies.

During my years of Government service I have been in reasonably close contact with trade agreements work. I think it can fairly be said that the operation of the trade agreements organization over the years has been one of the most effective examples of interagency collaboration developed within the Government.

I have brought with me two statements which describe exactly how a trade agreement is made and the safeguards with which the administration of the act is surrounded. I would like to submit these for the record.

There is one point, however, that I would like to stress. The Congress has wisely required that public notice shall be given before the President concludes any trade agreement, so that anyone interested may be able to present his views and have them considered. Particular efforts have been made to get the largest possible amount of information from the public about products that may be involved in any negotiation. Every product that may possibly be considered for a tariff concession is described in the notice of a prospective negotiation. Written briefs are solicited. Public hearings are held at which people interested can appear to supplement their briefs and answer questions. The information thus obtained is analyzed by the experts of the various Departments and forms an integral part of the basis for the recommendations of the Trade Agreements Committee to the President. Thus every possible effort is made to ensure that those recommendations are based on full and up-to-date knowledge of the facts.

It is indicative of the care with which the program has been administered by the interdepartmental trade agreements organization, that out of all the hundreds, even thousands, of individual United States tariff items which have been reduced or bound in these agreements during the life of the escape clause, there have been only 20 applications for its use. Six of these applications are still pending before the Tariff Commission. Of the 14 that have been dealt with only 1 has been found by the Tariff Commission to justify action. In that case action was promptly taken and the concession in question was withdrawn.

The Trade Agreements Act has become a fundamental part of our foreign policy. Each renewal by the Congress has been a welcome indication to the rest of the world of the desire of the United States to play a leading part in the constructive work of expanding world trade. It is important now, as it has been in the past, that this policy be reaffirmed.

NO LARGE-SCALE NEGOTIATIONS IN PROSPECT

The next 3 years will necessarily be a period of consolidation and adjustment in the trade field rather than of major progress forward.

When the conference now going on at Torquay is over, participating countries will want to have a period of time in which to test and observe the operation of the tariff rates there agreed upon. Moreover, it is obvious that the great uncertainties of the world situation are likely to persist for some time. It is therefore not expected that there will be another Torquay within the life of the extension provided for in H. R. 1612.

Adjustments in existing agreements will, however, undoubtedly be desirable from time to time. It is possible that it may be desirable to negotiate with one or two countries not represented at Torquay, either for their accession to the general agreement or bilaterally. It is possible that some negotiations may develop in connection with efforts to promote greater integration in Europe which will involve some products in which we are interested and in which it would be to our advantage to participate on a limited scale.

Consequently, an extension of the President's authority is essential. The administration does not, however, believe that any change is needed in the limitation now included in the Trade Agreements Act on the permissible range of reduction in rates of duty. It, therefore, fully endorses H. R. 1612, introduced by the Chairman.

In conclusion, I would like to return for a moment to the central idea which I expressed at the beginning. Our primary objective is to build strength and unity in the free world. Our whole program must create immediate military strength and the economic base on which military strength depends. It must create incentives to work to achieve and maintain that strength.

Continued participation by the United States in the cooperative effort to improve the conditions of world trade will be recognized both at home and abroad as one clear indication that behind the shield of military power which we and our allies are creating, the techniques of growth and expansion are being maintained intact. Continuation of the trade-agreements program is one way in which we can assure the peoples of the free world that economic expansion and rising living standards for all countries is still the goal of the United States.

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, January 22, 1951.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, House Ways and Means Committee, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: I understand that hearings on renewal for 3 years of the Trade Agreements Act are soon to be held by the Ways and Means Committee. I wish to lend my full support to the renewal of this legislation as being in the best interests of the country and in accordance with the program of the President.

Faithfully yours,

G. C. MARSHALL.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, January 22, 1951.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Committee on Ways and Means has before it for consideration H. R. 1612, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes. The effect of this bill would be to continue the reciprocal trade agreements program, which has been in effect since 1934, for an additional period of 3 years beyond the present expiration date of June 12, 1951.

In order to conserve the time of the committee, I understand the Secretary of State will make the sole personal presentation for the administration in behalf of the bill. I wish by this letter simply to add my word of endorsement.

Apart from my direct interest in this legislation stemming from the participation of the Treasury Department in the administration of the trade-agreements program, I am interested in it also because of my responsibility as chairman of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, the interdepartmental body which has responsibility for coordinating the policies and operations of this Government in the foreign financial, exchange, and monetary fields. Since the termination of hostilities in 1945 this Government has undertaken an unprecedented series of measures involving international cooperation with and assistance to friendly foreign countries in an effort to reestablish stable international economic relationships. An important part of this program involved an effort to promote expanding international trade as a contribution toward rising living standards both in our own country and in foreign countries. The policy of reciprocal reductions in trade barriers instituted in 1934 under the wise leadership of Cordell Hull played a useful part in carrying out these policies. A substantial measure of success has attended our efforts to achieve a sounder structure of international economic relationships, and it is important that we hold the gains we have achieved through the new difficult period in which we now find ourselves. For this purpose, it is considered essential to preserve the executive trade agreement authority, and I therefore urge your committee to give favorable consideration to H. R. 1612.

The Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this report to your committee.

Very truly yours,

JOHN W. SNYDER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1951.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: With reference to the hearings to be held by your committee on H. R. 1612, a bill to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, I wish to inform you that this Department favors passage of this bill.

The trade agreements program has wide support among American farmers because they realize that they have an important stake in foreign markets. Many United States agricultural products are exported in large amounts. In the last fiscal year, such exports included 37 percent of our cotton, 26 percent of our wheat, 27 percent of our tobacco, 39 percent of our rice, and nearly 35 percent of our dried fruits.

The prospects for maintaining foreign markets of our agricultural products will depend largely on whether or not we succeed in securing comparative freedom for international trade. Failure to do so will cause these markets to become more and more curtailed by the self-sufficiency policies of importing countries designed to protect high-cost production.

The reciprocal trade agreements program has made an important contribution to arresting, in important instances, the world-wide trend toward protection. The United States has, under this program, received tariff concessions from foreign countries on agricultural as well as other products. The importance of these concessions to American farmers will grow with the restoration of more normal conditions in the international economy.

To obtain these concessions, we had, of course, to make concessions on our part. As regards the latter, I would like to note that they were about evenly distributed between agricultural and nonagricultural imports. As the Tariff Commission has recently reported to Congress, import duties were reduced on 44 percent of total agricultural imports as compared with 47 percent of total nonagricultural imports. The duty reductions made average 50 percent for the agricultural and 53 percent for nonagricultural products on which duties have been reduced.

Reduction of duties and other trade barriers is, of course, the primary objective of the Trade Agreements Act and of the agreements negotiated under this act. But, as your committee certainly is aware of, the act and the agreements negotiated under it, such as the general agreement on tariffs and trade, also contain machinery for correcting inequities in the existing structure of tariffs and trade controls.

I would also like to refer to our struggle with the dollar gap in our foreign trade. For several years we were faced with the threat that, when United States foreign assistance comes to an end, this gap might be closed by a sharp curtailment—in United States exports—a curtailment which would threaten to cause depression in important sectors of American agriculture and industry. With the help of the trade agreements program, we have succeeded in expanding our imports and thus in supplying foreign countries with a current source of dollars which they can use to buy the products of American farms and factories they want.

The American people also have come to realize that we must import many products to supplement our domestic resources. This dependence on foreign products has become particularly evident in the present defense effort, but it is also an important consideration under peacetime conditions if we wish to maintain and improve our living standards.

There are also other broad benefits derived from the trade agreements program in which American farmers have an interest. By facilitating the exchange of products which we produce most advantageously for products that other countries produce most advantageously, the trade agreements program helps to link the freedom-loving nations more closely. This is of particular significance in the present critical world situation in which the Communist aggressors are using every means, economic as well as political, to split the free world.

It is also clear that the foreign assistance that we are giving under various programs will bring lasting benefits to us as well as to the recipient countries only if the opportunities for trade among the peace-loving nations are being maintained and enlarged. Continuation of our trade agreements program will give those countries assurance that we will play our part in assuring such opportunities.

Sincerely yours,

C. J. MCCORMICK,
Acting Secretary.

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1951.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: I am writing you in connection with the consideration by your committee of H. R. 1612, the bill to extend the authority to conclude reciprocal trade agreements.

The purpose of this legislation and the policies and procedures that have been followed in its administration are well known to your committee and consequently need not be discussed in detail. The disturbed conditions of international life make it unlikely that great use can be made of this authority over the next few years. It is, nevertheless, important that the legislation be kept alive as a symbol of the desire of the United States to cooperate with the rest of the free world in the progressive relaxation of tariff and trade barriers.

The procedures which have been worked out for the administration of the act are well designed to protect producers in this country from irreparable injury. At the same time benefits have been received by those industries which are dependent upon foreign sources of supply. Similarly, the concessions received from other countries have been significant for the large number of our producers who are partially dependent upon foreign markets.

Accordingly, I should like to urge favorable consideration by your committee of the proposed legislation.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES SAWYER,
Secretary of Commerce.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1951.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: This letter is to express the strong support of the Economic Cooperation Administration for H. R. 1612, the bill to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

We firmly believe that the reciprocal reductions in tariffs and other trade barriers negotiated under the authority of the Trade Agreements Act have been highly beneficial to the United States both in general and in terms of the specific objectives of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 with which this Administration is primarily concerned. We regard extension of this trade agreements authority as most important to continued progress toward these objectives.

In the introductory section of the Economic Cooperation Act, 1948, the Congress recognized the vital importance of "the expansion of foreign trade," and "the progressive elimination of trade barriers." Congress declared it to be one of the three main purposes of the Marshall plan to aid European countries in "facilitating and stimulating the growth of international trade * * * with one another and with other countries by appropriate measures including reduction of barriers which may hamper such trade."

Our experience in ECA has testified to the wisdom of this congressional emphasis on reduction of barriers to international trade in the basic provision for the European recovery program. Apart from the obvious physical destruction and disruption directly caused by the war, the two main problems we found in Western Europe were economic stagnation and the dollar gap. The high level of tariff and other barriers to international trade which had been built up in Europe, in the United States, and elsewhere in the world was a major contributing cause to both of these problems.

By the same token, efforts to reduce these barriers have proved to be a major factor in curing these conditions. By removing some of the shelter which national trade barriers provided to inefficient industries in Europe and exposing them to the invigorating effects of international competition from other European countries and, to some extent, from the United States, we have made a start on getting rid of some of the economic stagnation. European trade liberalization has been one of the major planks in ECA's program for promoting economic integration in Western Europe. As for the dollar gap, it has been clear from the beginning that there were only three ways of solving it: To cut down the level of European imports from the United States below what would be tolerable either for the peoples of Western Europe or for United States agriculture and industry; to raise the level of European dollar earnings by increasing their sales of goods and services to the United States and other parts of the dollar area; or to ask American taxpayers to continue to pay for the deficit for the indefinite future. It has seemed obvious to ECA that the second of these alternatives was by far the most desirable for everyone concerned. We have, therefore devoted considerable attention to stimulating European efforts to sell increased quantities of goods in the United States. Until recently ECA's program in this field was concentrated on encouraging increased European exports of luxury type goods which would enrich American life without competing directly with established American industries. More recently in view of the changed world circumstances, we have been concentrating on efforts to secure from Europe commodities which are in short supply in the United States both for civilian and military purposes.

The program of multilateral negotiations of reductions in tariff and other trade barriers made possible by the Trade Agreements Act has made a highly valuable contribution to the work of ECA both in attempting to secure a liberalization of trade within Europe and to close the dollar gap. This contribution has been made both at the practical and psychological levels. The actual reductions in United States tariffs which have taken place under the authority of this act have acted directly to permit increased imports of desirable European products. The specific tariff reductions negotiated by the United States with each ERP country have been generalized to the others and have thereby directly helped to liberalize trade within Europe. Perhaps even more important has been the psychological effect of the fact that the United States Government was in a position not only to preach reduction of trade barriers but to practice it. This has helped greatly in creating an atmosphere of liberalization rather than economic nationalism in Europe. On the dollar earning program we have found that many European businessmen are most reluctant to expose themselves to the vigorous free competition of the American market, in spite of the urgent need of their countries to earn more dollars. Searching for an excuse for their reluctance, they have often pointed to the high tariff barriers of the United States. Because of the existence of the Reciprocal Trade Act, we have been able to answer this contention by pointing to progressive reductions in the United States trade barriers and to the possibilities of further reductions on a reciprocal basis. We do not think that we could have made nearly as much progress either in European trade liberalization or in developing European interest in increased dollar earnings if we had not had the indirect support of the Trade Agreements Act.

The reasons why trade agreements legislation has been valuable to ECA's program in the past will continue to operate with great force in the period ahead. The need for vigorous economies, liberalized trade, and maximum dollar earnings will be greater than ever if the European countries are to carry the double burden of continued economic recovery and full-speed rearmament. Opportunities for great further strides in European integration may well occur. At the same time the pressures on the European governments and businessmen will be such that they will be strongly inclined to return to manifold governmental controls and protectionism in their own markets and to lose interest in the dollar market. There is great danger that the important achievements which have been made in the fields of trade liberalization and dollar earnings will be lost. Thus the situation could move either toward or away from the desirable short- and long-term goals of European trade liberalization and self-support. Which way it turns will be influenced to an important degree by the ability or inability of the United States to speak forcefully for and participate practically in further liberalization efforts. This ability in turn will be determined by whether or not the Trade Agreements Act is extended.

The bill under discussion provides for no increased authority for reductions in United States tariffs but simply permits further negotiations within the authority already granted. Limited further use of this existing authority can be a great asset in achieving significant progress toward American objectives in Western Europe.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised us that it has no objection to the transmission of this letter since the proposed extension of the Trade Agreements Act is part of the President's legislative program.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM C. FOSTER,
Administrator.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Due to illness in my family I deeply regret that I am unable personally to appear before your committee to urge renewal of the reciprocal trade agreements program.

I believe I have appeared as a witness in support of this program each time the act has come up for renewal.

In the tragic situation now confronting our country and the rest of the free world, the reasons for continuing this program are much stronger than they have ever been in the past.

Communist Russia has divided the world into two parts—the Communist world and the free world.

The peace-loving free world, enormously superior in wealth and industry to the Communist world, but just now disunited and militarily weak, stands before an aggressive, united, and powerful enemy sworn to destroy it—an enemy without conscience, without religion, without decency, without mercy.

Under the leadership of the United States, the free world has united its military strength in the North Atlantic Treaty. General Eisenhower, as Supreme Commander of the military forces of the 12 countries composing the North Atlantic Pact, is now in Europe for the purpose of organizing and leading the armies for defense which these 12 nations will provide.

But military unity alone is not sufficient to create the necessary conditions for the preservation of world peace and freedom.

It would be a great mistake to think that communism is the only obstacle to a continuation of conditions of peace and prosperity in the free world.

Communism is but an outward manifestation of the world revolution now in progress—a revolution of the have-nots—not so much against the haves as against their own lot in life.

When the Premier of Pakistan was here a few months ago, he said that when he thought of the United States, he saw a fabulously prosperous island; but still an island, surrounded by a sea of poverty, of cold and of hunger; and it frightened him.

There are just too many hundreds of millions of people who go to bed hungry and cold every night.

Someone will probably say, "But that has always been true." Yes, of course, but the modern world as we know it today has not always been here.

The first job of the free world is to make itself so strong that the aggressor dare not strike.

To do this the free world has united militarily.

The second job to which the free world must bend its efforts is the raising of the standard of living of hundreds of millions of people in the world.

The United States has also taken leadership in this field.

It is unnecessary to refer in detail to the various steps which have been taken under our leadership to improve economic conditions in the world—conditions in such deplorable state because of two world wars in one generation.

One of the most important of these steps, but the one perhaps least understood, is the reduction, through trade agreements with friendly nations, of the barriers to the movement of goods throughout the world. Much constructive work has already been done here but much remains to be done.

The standard of living of any people is measured by the quantity of useful goods available to them.

Economists agree that substantial reduction of barriers to the movement of goods between countries would greatly enlarge markets, would rationalize production on the basis of comparative advantage, would necessitate a great increase in the production of raw materials, and would enormously augment the volume of useful goods made available to the world's population.

The development of our own country proves this. This development and the consequent very high standard of living here is largely due to the freedom with which goods move across State boundaries.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

This matter has unusual importance at the present time due to the fact that our preparedness program demands that we acquire great quantities of metals and other materials from all parts of the world, not only for the enormous increase in production which our program requires but also for stockpiling for future needs.

Not only should these imports be freed of the excessive tariffs which many of these materials now carry but in order to pay for these materials we must be in position to export freely of the products which the United States is in position to produce most effectively. It is, therefore, necessary that trade agreements be made with friendly countries for the mutual reduction of tariffs—our tariffs on the goods we need to import for civilian and defense needs, and their tariffs on the goods we need to export to pay for such imports.

For 15 years or more we have listened to predictions of dire results to flow from any reduction of our protective tariff. Interested parties have thought they foresaw certain ruin from any such action.

No such consequences have resulted from trade agreements already made. No such consequences can be expected to result from future trade agreements.

The care and study given by interested agencies of our Government before action is taken is a guaranty of this.

But, in any case, we face a world situation which makes imperative actions to serve the common good as opposed to individual or special interests.

The preparations which we and our allies are making to restore to the free world the power to preserve its freedom will fall with a heavy hand on some segments of the economy. For example, producers and distributors of luxuries will in many cases undoubtedly suffer great injury and possibly ruin.

In the crisis which we face we must act for the greatest good to the greatest number.

It will avail us little to restore the power of the free world to preserve its freedom if we fail to reorganize international economic relationships in such way that production and distribution will provide the people with more to eat, more to wear, and better homes in which to live.

To this end I strongly urge the renewal of the reciprocal trade agreements program without crippling amendment. Such a course is unquestionably dictated by our national interest.

Respectfully submitted.

W. L. CLAYTON.

STATEMENT OF MORRIS S. ROSENTHAL FOR THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES TO HOUSE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE ON H. R. 1612, JANUARY 24, 1951

My name is Morris S. Rosenthal. I am president of Stein, Hall & Co., Inc., New York City.

I appear before you today as a representative of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to urge strongly approval of H. R. 1612, which would provide for renewal of the Trade Agreements Act. I am a member of the foreign commerce department committee and of the policy committee of the chamber.

I attach a brief description of the Chamber of Commerce.

The chamber in 1913 advocated, by referendum vote, the establishment of a permanent Tariff Commission, and in 1921 supported the principle of adjustment of tariff rates by administrative authority, within the limits set by Congress.

Our support of the Trade Agreements Act has been continuous and emphatic since 1933. On May 5, 1933, the national chamber adopted a policy favoring action by our Government in initiating reciprocal trade agreements with foreign countries, where such bargaining would be clearly in the public interest, keeping in mind the policy for assuring stability in internal industry and agriculture through reasonable protection. This statement was reaffirmed by the chamber membership in 1934.

The chamber, at the last annual meeting of its membership in May of 1950, renewed its support of the Trade Agreements Act. The members adopted this statement of policy:

"The policy of the Trade Agreements Act should be continued. This policy gives adequate authority for the Government, through its established agencies of negotiation and administration, to reach effective agreements for the reciprocal and selective adjustment of tariffs and other barriers to trade, including quota restrictions and other obstacles to the reasonable flow of goods and services.

"There should be appropriate safeguards in legislative provisions for ample public notice and open hearings, and clauses in the agreements providing, in case of unforeseen developments, for the modification or withdrawal of concessions, in order to prevent serious injury to domestic producers. Neither in the original form nor in practical application by reason of events that were not contemplated should agreements be permitted to cause destructive competition in American agriculture or industry."

The policy which I have just read to you has been in force, in its present form, since 1943, when it was adopted by vote of the membership. Under chamber bylaws this policy had to be considered for renewal in 1946. At that time it was submitted to the membership by referendum. The vote was overwhelmingly in favor of continued support.

Prior to renewal of the policy last year, the entire question of trade agreements was again examined thoroughly. A special subcommittee of the foreign commerce department committee, which is composed of outstanding businessmen in the foreign trade field, recommended that the policy be continued. This recommendation was concurred in by the full committee, and then submitted to the board of directors of the national chamber, who also approved. Afterward, it was studied by the policy committee. That group recommended that the policy be renewed again without change, and this recommendation was approved unanimously at our annual meeting.

I have gone into the question of chamber policy at some length because I think it important to emphasize that our continued support of the Trade Agreements Act is based on careful and mature consideration by businessmen representing diverse economic and geographical interests.

Some of you will recall that on May 5, 1948, Earl O. Shreve, then president of the chamber of commerce, appeared before a subcommittee of this committee to urge renewal of the Trade Agreements Act. In June of that year, Clem D. Johnston, a director of the national chamber, took the same position before the Senate Finance Committee. At other times, statements urging renewal of the act have been filed by the national chamber.

Our support of the program is based on the firm conviction that true world peace cannot be attained without world prosperity, that world prosperity cannot be attained without expanded and unhampered international trade, and that such trade cannot be attained without sincere and determined efforts on the part of all nations to reduce the barriers to world trade.

The Trade Agreements Act enables this Nation, with others, to work for the reduction of tariffs and other barriers to trade. The program is not a panacea for all the ills besetting international trade. It will not, by itself, bring about world peace and prosperity. But, the program is the only logical mechanism of attacking the excessively high tariffs and the pernicious invisible barriers which operate so effectively to strangle trade.

The national chamber does not believe that all tariffs should be eliminated. We recognize the need for, and support, such tariffs as are necessary to provide adequate protection to American agriculture and industry and, also, where needed, for national security. We do not believe that all tariffs should be reduced to a specified equivalent ad valorem duty, for a high tariff on one item will not necessarily be restrictive, whereas a relatively low equivalent ad valorem duty on another may still be high enough effectively to preclude imports.

By the policy which I have read to you, it is evident that the chamber membership recognizes the importance of having available at all times appropriate executive machinery for the prompt adjustment of tariffs through reciprocal negotiations, flexible enough to meet rapidly changing world economic conditions. At the same time, one of the fundamentals of the chamber's position has been, very naturally, that the administrative machinery contain adequate safeguards for the protection of domestic industry and agriculture from destructive competition by foreign goods. The escape clause, established by Executive order, provides this protection.

It seems logical to assume that the reduction of excessive tariffs, with the elimination of other restrictive barriers, will be an important step on the road to unhampered and expanding international trade. The Trade Agreements Act is, so far, the most realistic and practical method of attaining this type of world trade.

Accepting, then, the premise that the Trade Agreements Act will, under normal conditions, permit private international trade to expand, the question to be answered is: "Do we want to encourage such trade?"

The answer is an unequivocal "Yes."

No nation, not even the United States, is self-sufficient. The high standard of living which we enjoy in the United States would not be possible without imports. It is true that our imports represent only a small percentage, generally less than 5 percent, of national income. But without certain products which we must import, our national income, and our standard of living, would be much lower. Where would we be, for instance, without coffee, and sugar, and tungsten? We could get along, but at a much lower standard of living. In the manufacture of the automobile, which is certainly a typically American product, it is necessary to import close to 100 different items.

Other nations, less richly endowed with natural resources and industrial potentialities, are even more dependent than we on imports. Those nations, too, could get along without imports, but the results would be even more drastic than they would be for us. Artificial barriers to trade can be erected, as they have in the past, but out of those barriers will spring the poverty and want of a lowered standard of living, and it is in the grounds of that despair that the seeds of communism are sown. Economic isolationism cannot, in the long run, benefit any free country.

Because the Trade Agreements Act will help to expand international trade, by reducing the barriers, the Chamber of Commerce gives it its support.

There is another factor which must be considered, a factor which can be evaluated in terms of black ink or red ink on the balance sheet. Increased trade means increased business for all segments of our economy. Almost every major industrial group does some export business, and in many cases the export market represents a fairly large percentage of the total business volume. Even if foreign sales represent only a small percentage of total sales, it may mean the difference between profit and loss.

We should not make the mistake of believing that the size of the export market is important only to our manufacturing interests. Shipments of agricultural products and extracted raw materials have formed a large part of our total export market.

There may have been some temporary disturbances in some lines of business as a result of adjustments necessary to meet altered conditions, and there has probably been a greater degree of competition, short of permanent injury, from foreign goods due to reduced American tariffs. It is my opinion, and I think this is shared by many persons who have been intimately associated with the details of the program, that those who have complained about these things have been prompted more by apprehension as to possible future injury than by actual experience of destructive effects. I believe that instances in which actual injury have occurred, and which have been serious enough to warrant recourse to the established machinery for the correction of abuses, have been very few.

On a historical basis, 60 percent or more of our imports come in duty-free. Thus, no more than 40 percent of our total imports could possibly be affected. Actually, only a very much smaller percentage could now be reduced. In many cases duties are now down to the limit which our negotiators feel is wise, and in other cases the duties have been reduced by the maximum permitted by our laws. Thus, the scope of further reduction of our own duties is limited. If we do not now continue the act, there will be no possible chance of getting other countries to reduce their tariffs and eliminate other obstacles.

Before closing I would like to make a few remarks about whether the act should be continued during this period, which has been so aptly termed the "dark-gray period" of mobilization. There is, I am convinced, even more reason now to work for reciprocal trade agreements than there has been in the past.

At the present time, or during a war, there will still be some private international trade, and it is important that every opportunity be afforded for it to continue. The Trade Agreements Act will help provide this opportunity.

To discontinue this program now would be more than a repudiation of our previous policy. It would be a deliberate step which could have no other effect than to raise the present barriers to trade, and that, as we know, leads to economic isolationism, which leads to political and military isolationism.

ADDENDUM

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States is a national federation of 3,133 trade associations and local chambers of commerce, which, in turn, represent 1,350,000 individual businessmen. Because the chamber in membership and direct interests embraces every important activity in our economy; and, through its membership—small businesses as well as large—it presents the opinion of a cross-section of our entire economy. Thus, it is that policies of the chamber do not represent the views of some special group or particular interest, but are drawn from the diverse interests of the country as a whole and are voted by its membership. This voting, incidentally, is so regulated that no geographic concentration of interests or economic concentration of power can override the broader interests of the entire membership.

Since the Chamber of Commerce is a democratic organization, and since its membership encompasses the widest range of interests, the members retain every right to express themselves as individuals. So, there may be some members who are in a minority disagreement, but the official attitude as approved at the annual meeting, favors the continuation of the Trade Agreements Act.

PERIL-POINT CLAUSE

The Eightieth Congress inserted a so-called peril-point clause in the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Extension Act in 1948 requiring the Tariff Commission to advise the President whether proposed tariff reductions would imperil American industries. The President was not compelled to follow the Commission's recommendations, but if he disregarded them, he would have to inform Congress of the reasons for doing so. A move is now under way to include this peril-point clause, deleted by the Eighty-first Congress, in legislation extending the President's authority to negotiate reciprocal trade pacts for a 3-year period. Its restoration would unquestionably hamper the negotiators, despite the fact that it is merely a warning signal, not an order to stop. It would also increase the pressure of special interests for favorable treatment.

Experience has shown that the only practicable method of reducing tariff barriers is by executive negotiation. In concluding trade agreements, moreover, the administration has always tried to protect legitimate American interests and there is no reason to suppose that it will be any less vigilant in the future than it has been in the past. Finally, a vote for restoration of the peril-point clause would not only be a retrograde step, it would also create fears, whether justified or not, of a return to narrowly protectionist policies that would reduce the capacity of other countries to earn more dollars from exports to the United States.

RENEWING THE TRADE ACT

With the opening of hearings this week on extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, we may expect renewal of the long battle to curtail existing Presidential authority to lower tariffs. Under the 1949 law, which expires next June, the President may make tariff reductions up to 50 percent of the 1945 rates in exchange for trade concessions from other countries. This law carries on the spirit of all the reciprocal trade acts since the first one was passed in 1934, except for the 1-year extension adopted by a Republican Congress in 1948, which required the President to report to Congress if he set rates below the point considered by the Tariff Commission as threatening serious injury to American producers. Republicans in both Houses have already said they would attempt to restore this peril-point provision, which was eliminated by the last Congress. If they succeed in doing so, they will do damage to the whole reciprocal trade system.

The peril-point provision retains the germ of the protectionist philosophy which the world trading position of this country has long since rendered obsolete. And as a practical working matter, the success of the program initiated by Secretary Hull has depended at least in part on freedom of negotiation by the President's representatives in the tremendously complicated bargaining discussions held periodically with other trading nations. Furthermore, the pressures induced by any proposal to lower tariffs are bad enough; the peril-point procedure only makes them worse. Under existing practice, all interested persons, all businesses that might be affected by a change in the rates, all Government agencies concerned, have ample opportunity to express their views. And most of our agreements have an escape clause for protection in case of serious injury.

Ever since the outbreak of the Second World War, our foreign trade has been carried on under abnormal conditions. But the necessity still remains for the United States to encourage imports, and that condition will persist so long as we are the world's great creditor. The administration's request for a 3-year extension of the existing reciprocal trade law should be approved.

EXTEND THE TRADE ACT

Although the problems of security for ourselves and our allies overshadow all other legislative issues, the question of renewing the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for another 3 years will no doubt prove a lively one for Congress. Foreign policy splits between the Republicans and Democrats are never so marked as in the field of trade relations. While it is true that a goodly number of Republican lawmakers are by no means protectionist in their tariff attitude, the GOP as a whole on the basis of its record does not take kindly to the idea of lower American trade barriers.

Thus, it was the GOP Eightieth Congress that hobbled the Reciprocal Trade Act with the so-called peril point amendment, thereby weakening this country's role as a leader in the campaign for freer commerce among nations. The succeeding Democrat-ruled Congress struck out this amendment, which had handicapped the Executive in swapping tariff concessions. Now the Republicans can be expected to try to put it back in the new extension that must be voted before June 12.

The peril point amendment is advanced as a safeguard against a domestic industry being seriously hurt by imports. Yet due protection to industry has not been wanting under the normal reciprocal trade law, which has worked well without such a clause for some 15 years. Actually, by giving the Tariff Commission broad powers of review, this amendment would mean lengthy delays in reaching reciprocal accords. On the whole, it would put needless obstacles in the way of worthwhile tariff adjustment.

"Continued participation by the United States in the cooperative effort to improve conditions of world trade," Mr. Acheson told a House committee this week, "will be recognized both at home and abroad as one clear indication that behind the shield of military power which we and our allies are creating, the techniques of growth and expansion are being maintained intact." To assure that continued participation and indeed to give evidence that this country means to lead the free world to a saner economic order, Congress should extend the Trade Agreements Act with no strings attached.

[From the Boston Herald of January 22, 1951]

TARIFF COMMON SENSE

The House Ways and Means Committee begins hearings today on a bill to extend the 17-year-old reciprocal trade program for another 3 years. There is little doubt that this vital measure will be adopted in some form. But die-hard opponents are mustering their strength against it, and, if they are not watched, they may succeed in entangling it in reservations and amendments.

This must not be allowed to happen.

The principal reservation now being suggested is a return to the peril-point clause, which enjoyed a brief trial during the Eightieth Congress. This clause would simply require the President to consult Congress before lowering any tariff below a point designated as dangerous to domestic producers, and would not be particularly troublesome in itself. It would, however, signal a drawing back on our tariff reduction program at a time when logic and self-interest should be taking us strongly in the opposite direction.

The United States for many years has been a creditor Nation and since the war our credit position has become enormously more pronounced. During the 4 years 1946–49 we ran up an export surplus of $29,000,000,000 (excluding $3,000,000,000 of net receipts from investment income), which was nearly half of our total exports. All but a fraction of this was paid for by United States Government grants and loans. This simply cannot go on indefinitely. Eventually we must either stop selling abroad or let our customers pay for what they purchase by selling their own goods here.

It will doubtless be pointed out by the tariff group that the dollar gap of the early Marshall-plan period is now rapidly disappearing under the impetus of renewed United States military buying, and that the argument for tariff concessions is weakened to that extent. The Gray Report on Foreign Economic Policies, however, makes it abundantly clear that this condition is temporary. The moment European rearmament starts catching up with ours, the gap will reappear, and we must work harder than ever at finding solutions that do not involve Government hand-outs.

We are, moreover, looking for long-term as well as short-term solutions. And it is apparent that we cannot hope to get permanent stabilization of trade at the high level our exporters want unless we clear the way for a much freer flow of imports. The tariff conservatives, who would lean indefinitely on Government protection at home and Government handouts abroad, are living in a dream world. They should catch up with reality.

In fact, as the President's economic advisers suggest, we should go beyond mere renewal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. We should also push to speedy enactment the proposed Customs Simplification Act. And we should give serious consideration to the possibility of letting the President reduce tariffs unilaterally, at least during the present emergency, on essential items now in short supply.

But the reciprocal trade program is the indispensable and fundamental first step. Prompt approval of the administration bill will demonstrate our good intentions, and we can build from there. It is important that we do not stumble at the start.

[From the Christian Science Monitor of January 23, 1951]

RENEW THE TRADE ACT

American leadership for freedom must include leadership in the economic as well as political and military fields. One aspect of this leadership is reflected in American trade policies. This year what the United States Congress does about the reciprocal trade agreements will be watched closely throughout the free world and on the other side of the curtain, too.

It is specially important as hearings on the Trade Agreements Act get under way in the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives that Americans understand why the trade program for mutual reductions of tariffs should be renewed without restrictive modifications.

In the 17 years since the reciprocal trade program was inaugurated it has proved itself so convincingly that few responsible voices are raised these days for its abolition. Most of the opposition centers on limiting the Government's powers under the act.

For example, it is again being suggested that the peril-point clause should be added to the law. Such a clause would require the President to consult Congress before lowering a tariff below a point considered dangerous to domestic industries.

This is undesirable not so much because of its probable application as because it would preserve protectionist fallacies in a program designed to overcome these very fallacies.

This is no time to advertise any remnants of an American economic isolationism. The tasks of survival demand the broadest readiness among all free peoples to learn how to live together and to strengthen each other. The United States must lead in this, too.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of January 24, 1951]

ENCOURAGING RECIPROCAL TRADE

As the world's largest creditor nation, the United States can make the most appropriate sort of contribution toward widening the base for international financial stability by reaffirming its unqualified adherence to the reciprocal trade program. Neither the unsettled state of military affairs nor the temporary use of economic controls here and abroad diminishes the importance of our holding fast to basic objectives. The trade program is a logical part of the total policy we are directing toward the achievement of those objectives. We want to encourage economic self-reliance, not dependence, in friendly nations. We wish private traders and investors to participate fully in international exchange and development. We recognize the necessity of cutting away those barriers and discriminations that have so often invited political chaos and armed conflict.

Neither the trade program nor any other single program can do the whole job. Yet other countries will judge the sincerity of our total intention, and the wisdom of following our lead, by our willingness to take the individual steps leading toward the ultimate goal. For this reason favorable action on trade act renewal is of particular practical and symbolic importance.

One might have supposed that there would be no opposition within the House Ways and Means Committee to the renewal of so constructive an element in our foreign economic program. Not so. The old arguments, despite their having been riddled in the past, are being dusted off again: "American industry needs high-tariff protection. Tariffs will be slashed without warning. American industries will be destroyed. The only way to make the trade agreements safe is to nullify their central principle; no real concessions can be exchanged."

This total argument is contrary to fact and reason. American industry is the most efficient in the world; it does not live by high-tariff protection. Tariffs will not be cut without warning; even without the contradictory and unworkable peril-point provision, the law provides extensive opportunities for all interested public agencies—including the Tariff Commission—and private persons or groups to testify as to the possible results of future tariff concessions. American industry will not be destroyed; 16 years of reciprocal trade experience proves this. The reciprocal trade law is in the Nation's interest; it should be renewed in its present form.

[From the Philadelphia Bulletin of January 23, 1951]

THE IMPORT "PERIL"

A drive for the renewal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act comes when the Nation faces a strain on its resources from a huge military program. No hardy isolationist will claim that the United States can do the job before it without great quantities of imports. The "peril" point that some Republicans worry about when they think of goods coming from other countries seems remote when the United States needs about everything it can get its hands on.

When the reciprocal trade policy was adopted by Congress 16 years ago we had trouble selling our products. We appeared to have more than we needed. If a liberal trade policy was sound then, it is today.

Most high protectionists will agree we need the world's minerals and raw materials in this crisis of rearmament. But some of them are so wedded to their theories that Congress still keeps a tariff on copper, although we desperately need every ounce.

Right now customers are on a buying spree to stock up manufactured goods they fear will become scarce. They are certainly not worrying about the peril of having too much. Every customer will cheer if Europe and Asia are in the mood to send us anything we need.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 35 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps this would be the best place to read into the RECORD some of the labor organizations that were opposed to the extension of this Trade Agreements Act without amendment. I refer to pages 298 and 299 of the hearings which show the following labor organizations opposed to it:

Labor organizations: American Flint Glass Workers' Union; Atlantic Fishermen's Union; Seafarers' International Union; Fish Cannery Workers' Union of the Pacific; International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America; United Hat, Cap, and Millinery Workers' International Union; International Council of Aluminum Workers' Unions; National Brotherhood of Operative Potters; United Cement, Lime, and Gypsum Workers' Union; International Chemical Workers' Union; National Match Workers' Council; Greenhouse Vegetable Workers' Union 20557; United Wallpaper Craftsmen and Workers' Union of North America.

Management organizations: American Glassware Association; National Association of Manufacturers of Pressed and Blown Glassware; Scientific Apparatus Makers' Association; National Fisheries Institute: Gloucester Fisheries Association; Massachusetts Fisheries Association; Seafood Producers' Association of New Bedford, Mass.; California Fish Canners' Association; Book Manufacturers' Institute, Inc.; American Photo-Engravers' Association; The Hat Institute; Wool Hat Manufacturers' Association of America; Reynolds Metals Co.; United States Potters' Association; Vitrified China Association, Inc.; Edgar Bros. Co. (kaolin); Manufacturing Chemists' Association; Synthetic Organic Chemical Manufacturers' Association; American match industry (no association); National Hot House Vegetable Growers' Association; The Wall Paper Institute.

America's Wage Earners' Protective Conference is composed of the following national and international unions affiliated with the A. F. of L.: International Brotherhood of Bookbinders; International Union of Operating Engineers; International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America; Atlantic Fishermen's Union; Glass Bottle Blowers' Association; American Flint Glass Workers' Union; Window Glass Cutters' League of America; United Hatters, Cap, and Millinery Workers' International Union; Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America; National Brotherhood of Operative Potters; American Wire Weavers' Protective Association.

Of course, in the eyes of the bureaucrats, these are just little people who have payrolls, people paying for their own homes, perhaps the central industry of a certain town—these workmen who are being sold out. Just kill them off say the free traders with this trade-agreement proposition here and let the communities die in their tracks.

Mr. Chairman, the two issues before the House in its consideration of H. R. 1612 are whether the Congress should again delegate authority to the President to make new trade agreements, and if the Congress does so delegate this authority what should be the terms of the delegated authority.

My position on these two issues can be as simply stated as the issues themselves and it is that: First, no further delegation of authority should be made by the Congress to the President to make new trade agreements; second, if such authority is granted by the Congress, then, as a bare minimum, H. R. 1612 should be amended to provide: 1. That, with certain modifications as discussed below, the peril-point report provisions established by the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948 be reenacted; 2. That the President be directed to prevent the application of reduced tariffs and other concessions made in trade agreements with the free nations to imports from Soviet Russia and Communist China, and to imports from any Communist satellite country (including North Korea) which the President finds is part of a conspiracy against the free world; 3. That, for the purpose of clarification and to facilitate procedures, certain standards be established by the Congress for the guidance of the President in determining relief under the escape clause; 4. That the authority of the President to make new trade agreements be extended for a 2-year period instead of a 3-year period.

These four qualifications on the terms of the President's authority were unanimously recommended by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee.

In 1934 the citizens of the United States were told by unsound propaganda of the State Department that reciprocity would lay the foundation for perfect peace and brotherhood throughout the world. Our people were assured by the proponents of the trade agreement program that there would be no need for further conflict or wars if only we of the United States would agree to enter into reciprocal trade agreements with various foreign countries. This plausible but false idea was exploited to the fullest degree. What was the result as one after another trade agreement was entered into by the United States?

The result was that international trade, commerce, investments, and other economic relationships became more confused with every new trade agreement entered into. Currency depreciation and other forms of monetary manipulation became the order of the day. Exchange control, including clearing and compensatory agreements, were adopted as Government policy in the struggle of many nations to get an economic advantage over the people of other countries. Trade and commerce became confused with a maze of quota restrictions, licenses, permits, and other forms of control. A multitude of different unfair methods of competition became the practice of the day. All manner of foreign discriminations were introduced or resulted from the numerous so-called reciprocal trade agreements entered into by the United States with foreign nations and between various foreign countries. The trade agreement program during the past 17 years has become nothing more nor less than a poorly conceived device for reducing custom duties to let foreign-made competitive goods and other products into our domestic market, to the injury of American labor, the American farmer, American industry, and the American taxpayer.

The truth about reciprocal trade agreements has never been revealed to the public by the State Department. It has resorted to misrepresentations as to the objective of the trade agreements and to false promises with respect to expected benefits to the United States.

The propaganda that peace would be restored and permanently underwritten by the proposed agreement made a powerful emotional appeal to the mothers and fathers throughout the Nation. International peace through trade agreements stirred into action the Christian churches, the women's organizations, and every mother who had suffered a tragedy in her home as a result of World War I. This sham crusade for peace led by the State Department became one of irresistible pressure on Congress to support this New Deal tariff-reduction plan for world peace. This unholy propaganda resulted in the enactment of the Trade Agreements Act of 1934. It did not result, however, as many a bereaved family knows, in the nations of the earth "beating their swords into plowshares."

I shall show later how it did promote war and also the price our Nation paid in American blood, lives, and treasure.

It was urged by the proponents of the trade-agreement program under the leadership of the State Department that, aside from the promotion of world peace and brotherly love, the adoption of the tariff-reduction scheme would increase our exports and thus bring prosperity to our workers, industries, and farmers. This was another fantastic promise on the part of the State Department that did not materialize from lower tariff concessions.

To fortify this statement's indisputable facts let me point out that the physical quantity of exports during the 5-year period—1935–39—before the beginning of World War II was only 80 percent as much as during the earlier prosperous 5-year period—1925–29. In other words, the physical volume of exports was actually 2 percent less under the reciprocity than under the American system of prosperity at home.

Now then, the assurance given the public that the Trade Agreements Act, if adopted, would bring about peace in the world and that the program would increase exports did not materialize. I state to the Congress, without fear of successful contradiction, that the trade agreements program as carried out by the State Department contributed to the wars in Europe and to the one in the Pacific. Had it not been for the perfidy of the State Department in deceiving the public with reference to exports the United States would not have been involved in a war with Japan. What did the State Department officials do when they found that there was a 20 percent reduction in exports under reciprocity than there had been under the American system of protection? Not only the State Department but also the entire New Deal administration forfeited their promise of peace under the trade agreements program and instead encouraged the shipment of war materials to foreign nations in an effort to build up the promised increased exports.

I shall now show the tragedy for which the State Department has been responsible. Exports became more important to the State Department than human lives. Why not, said these zealous proponents of the trade agreements, furnish the war lords in Japan with our scrap iron, copper, steel, aircraft and plane parts, petroleum, street car rails, the latter removed from in front of the White House, the steel from the elevated railway in New York City and metal junk from all parts of the United States.

Robert T. Oliver, in his recent book entitled "Why War Came to Korea," makes this statement:

> Japan's attack upon China in 1937 was strongly criticized in the United States, but during 1938 we provided Japan with 90.4 percent of her scrap iron and steel, and 76.9 percent of her aircraft and plane parts, 65.6 percent of her petroleum needs and many of her sinews of war. This trade continued to the very eve of Pearl Harbor.

I ask, has any group of persons or any nation by its acts, furnished Russia with more effective propaganda than to point out to the Chinese the fact that the United States armed Japan with the material to make the weapons with which to slaughter the Chinese women and children? The warmongering program of the State Department finally succeeded in preparing Japan for an all-out war against us. There could have been no war in the Pacific and the Far East had it not been for the shipment of war supplies by the United States to a potential enemy.

Let me present the facts to establish the responsibility of the State Department more in detail. The very year—1937—that Japan opened war in China our exports of scrap iron and steel exports to Japan amounted to 2,081,037 tons, or enough to build 20 battleships of 45,000 tons each; 200 submarines of 2,400 tons each; 10 aircraft carriers of 30,000 tons each; and 26 cruisers at 15,000 tons each. Thus the State Department could claim an increase in exports—not in the regular course of commerce—of which to boast, so long as the character of the diabolical purpose of these exports were not disclosed to the public.

The next year—1938—our scrap and steel exports to Japan were 1,463,000 tons; 1939 they were 2,179,000 tons, and in 1940 they were 1,248,000 tons. At this point in this program of claiming an increase in exports as promised by the State Department, the United States foreign trade statistics, normally published by the Department of Commerce, became a military secret. No official figures are available to reveal the amount of metals and war materials exported to Japan in the first 11 months of 1941. The fraudulent claim that the trade agreement program was responsible for an increase in exports was becoming debunked. Protests against arming Japan were being heard in Congress. An inquiry as to why the State Department was suffering and permitting these shipments would have been most embarrassing to the trade agreement proponents. Arming a country to cut the throat of our Chinese friends as a means to claiming credit for increased exports under the trade agreement program would have been indefensible. These war exports to Japan came back with ghastly results.

At 7:55 o'clock on the morning of December 7, 1941—Hawaiian time—100 Japanese planes, built of and equipped with our exports, attacked our United States Pacific Fleet anchored at Pearl Harbor, T. H. To aid in this raid several midget submarines constructed with our exports assisted the Japanese planes in their raid on our men and ships. It was our exports to Japan that totally destroyed the battleship Arizona. This raid severely damaged the battleships Oklahoma, Nevada, California, West Virginia, and three destroyers, one target ship, and one minelayer. Damaged but finally repaired were the battleships Pennsylvania, Maryland, Tennessee; cruisers Helena, Honolulu, Raleigh; one seaplane tender, one repair vessel, one drydock. Our loss of airplanes in this raid: Navy, 80; Army, 97.

All of this damage and cost was inflicted by Japan with our exports to her of essential war material.

But here is the ghastly part of this export program. Casualties: Navy, 2,117 officers and men killed; there were 960 missing and 376 wounded. Army, 226 officers and men killed; 396 wounded.

This is the result of an attempt of the State Department to deceive the American people that exports had actually expanded as a result of the reciprocal trade agreements.

Have the American people suffered enough from the perfidy of the State Department? Now after the experience of the holocaust at Pearl Harbor is the same scheme of arming our enemies being suffered and permitted to be continued as a permanent appeasement policy? The shipment of essential war material to Russia and Red China from our own ports has continued since and even before the Korean war.

I call attention to the fact that the State Department, in its mad rush to increase our exports, stripped our Nation of copper, scrap iron, and other essential war materials to the point where the children were asked to save their copper pennies for our war needs. The State Department had a secret meeting with the Ways and Means Committee, urging the removal of the tariff on scrap iron to aid our war effort. The country was so reduced in scrap metal that ships and men had to go to Central America and the Caribbean islands to collect old sugar mills and the rails from abandoned railways to replenish the loss of the material that had gone to Japan to enable her to butcher the Chinese.

It would not be fair to leave this subject without further emphasizing the fact by repeating that during the 5-year period 1935–39 a very large portion of the exports of commodities consisted of materials needed by Germany, Italy, and Japan in their preparations for World War II. They imported from us, not because of trade agreement concessions, but in order to prepare for war. In other words, if I may repeat, not only was the physical quantity of legitimate exports 20 percent less than during the earlier period, but a very large portion of the exports which we did find possible consisted of scrap iron and steel, petroleum products for military purposes, trucks, tractors, and other vehicles, machinery for the making of war instruments of destruction.

It should not be forgotten that much of the exports of farm products were made possible by payment of export subsidies, and not as a result of reciprocal-trade agreements.

Aside from the contribution of the State Department to the death of our boys at Pearl Harbor and the devastating war that followed in the Pacific, the loss in revenue from the reduction in custom duties under the reciprocal trade agreements should not be overlooked.

The rate of duty imposed upon dutiable imports has now been reduced down to the last month for which the official figures—which averaged on 12.4 percent of the value of dutiable imports. So that whereas over a 20- or 30-year period—in fact at the turn of the century—our tariff averaged something like 36 percent. Now, the tariff has been gradually reduced under the trade-agreements program until the last month—as I say—the tariff was on 12.4 percent of the value of the dutiable commodities. The value of imports has increased and they are now up to well over $6,000,000,000 so that even with the low rate of duty the revenue has not increased. Over one-third of all imports are dutiable—just about $2,000,000,000 out of $6,000,000,000 are dutiable. Now during the 5 years since the war closed—there is no use discussing the revenue during the war period—the customs duties have been as follows:

During the year 1945, $391,000,000.
During the year 1946, $498,000,000.
During the year 1947, $445,000,000.
During the year 1948, $417,000,000.
During the year 1949, $374,000,000.

They had been up to a very much higher level than that. During earlier periods the revenue customs duty collected had run up to approximately $600,000,000 a year. In other words, during the 10 years from 1920 to 1930, there had been right around $600,000,000—now they are down to less than $400,000,000. In spite of the fact that our imports have increased from $400,000,000 to $600,000,000, because of the lower rates under the trade-agreements program, the revenue has decreased from an average of $600,000,000 to $400,000,000. The result is that we are now losing $200,000,000 a year in revenue, because of the trade-agreement concessions. Well, if you lose $200,000,000 a year, it only takes 10 years to lose $2,000,000,000. So you could say that during the last 10 years we have lost $2,000,000,000 because of the low rates.

I want to call attention of my colleagues to the fact, and a tragic and indefensible one, that Communist Russia and all of her Communist satellites, including Red China, are getting the benefit of every tariff concession made in every trade agreement entered into by the United States.

Communist Russia and all of the countries behind the iron curtain, including Red China, get all of the tariff concession benefits without granting a single concession to the United States.

This is simply a repetition of arming another foe with the implements to destroy our American boys. Such deadly material exported to Russia and paid for by free imports into the United States from Russia in time of war cannot be successfully defended. To grant Communist Russia and the countries dominated by her the same tariff reductions the United States has made to 45 other free nations is to furnish Russia and her satellites the dollars with which to buy arms, ammunition, and other war materials with which to build tanks, planes, and trucks to prosecute a war against us is unthinkable and preposterous.

THE PERIL POINTS

In considering why it is imperative that the Congress establish some safeguards to the conduct by the State Department of this program I call the attention of every Member of the House to the following statement which was made by the State Department to the Ways and Means Committee regarding the objectives of trade-agreements legislation. The statement is as follows:

> We shall have a clear mandate to broaden the basis of United States foreign trade, to create purchasing power for American exports, and to guide the economy as a whole into the most productive lines possible.

I repeat "to guide the economy as a whole into the most productive lines possible." Let me ask the proponents of this legislation to point out to me the section of this law or the section of any past extension of the trade-agreements program which gives the State Department authority to "guide the economy as a whole into the most productive lines possible." I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that they cannot do so, because there is no such authority and it was never intended by the Congress that the State Department should be entrusted with the responsibility of "guiding the economy as a whole into the most productive lines possible." But, and here is the crux of the matter, State Department officials believe they have this authority and it is for this reason that some safeguards must be established by the Congress if H. R. 1612 is enacted.

Personally I do not feel that the peril point procedure adopted in the Extension Act of 1948 and recommended by the Republicans for reenactment at this time is an adequate safeguard because in the final analysis it means only that the President will have to advise the Congress if the State Department negotiators have reduced tariffs below a point which will result in serious injury to our domestic producers. But it is a step in the right direction. In brief, all that the peril point procedure will do is that—

First. The President will be required to submit the list of articles to be negotiated to the Tariff Commission.

Second. The Tariff Commission must make a factual study of each item and make a report within 120 days to the President. This report will contain the Tariff Commission's findings as to the limit the President might lower or raise duties without causing or threatening serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or similar articles.

Third. The Tariff Commission is required to hold hearings.

Fourth. The Tariff Commission is to continue to furnish factual information to the negotiating committees but members of the Tariff Commission may not sit as members of the Committee for Reciprocity Information or the Trade Agreements Committee.

Fifth. If tariff cuts and other concessions are made below the peril point report of the Tariff Commission, the President must identify the articles and state the reasons to the Congress for the action taken with respect to such items.

Sixth. The Tariff Commission is to furnish the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee a copy of its report on only those items which have been cut below the peril point.

Those who oppose the peril-point procedure have been carefully schooled by the State Department in the argument that this procedure deprives the executive department from using the Tariff Commission and its employees in negotiating trade agreements. The answer to this is that the Tariff Commission was never intended by the Congress to participate in the conduct of foreign affairs—it was established as a bipartisan fact-finding commission by the Congress to carry on investigations and to supply information on our customs laws. It is not the function of the Tariff Commission to trade and to negotiate, and in fact it is the very purpose of the peril-point report that the findings of the Tariff Commission be made as a full commission based on facts and not vague international objectives.

The only argument of any possible substance against the peril-point safeguard procedure in the 1948 Extension Act was the requirement that a copy of the complete report of the Tariff Commission, including the items on which concessions did not go below the peril points, was to be furnished the Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance. It was alleged by the State Department that some dissatisfaction by foreign countries might arise if they learned that their negotiators had not held out for the maximum reduction which the Tariff Commission reported could be made without serious injury, or the threat of it, to our domestic producers. To remove this objection we recommend a change in the peril-point procedure so that the information to be supplied by the Tariff Commission to the Congress will be limited only to those items on which trade agreement concessions go below the peril points.

It is ridiculous to say as the State Department does that the Tariff Commission cannot establish peril points. The dissenting members of the interdepartmental committee are charged under Executive Order 9832 with the duty of "giving the reasons for their dissent and specifying the point beyond which they consider any reduction or concession involved can be made without injury to the domestic economy." It is not a question of being able to establish peril points, but rather whether the State Department or the expert Tariff Commission is better equipped to do so.

In substance the issue boils down to whether in its calculated-risk policy of guiding the economy as a whole into the most productive lines possible, the State Department should have available to it the expert advice of the Tariff Commission. The very stating of the issue must in itself supply the answer to any reasonable person.

THE ESCAPE CLAUSE

One of the most serious defects of this misnamed program is that no provision for an escape from serious injury or the threat of it caused by imports resulting from reduction in tariffs and other concessions is contained in the trade agreement law itself. An escape clause was inserted in the trade agreement with Mexico in 1943 and all subsequent agreements now contain such a clause. Due, however, to the ambiguity of the language of the clause and the failure by the Congress to establish any guiding principle for the President in determining when relief under the escape clause should be granted, only one application for relief has ever been made. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to insert the record of what has happened to applicants who have applied for relief under the escape clause. As you will see the escape clause is a wholly ineffective remedy—in fact it is no remedy at all.

To correct this deplorable situation it is imperative that the Congress establish certain criteria which will be recognized as a presumption that a serious injury or the threat of it has occurred. This will greatly expedite the procedure under the escape clause and give assurance to all segments of the economy that it is not futile for them to apply for relief. This problem will be discussed more fully as the debate develops, and for that reason I pass now to the question of imports from Russia, Communist China, and their satellite Communist countries.

IMPORTS FROM RUSSIA, COMMUNIST CHINA, AND OTHER IRON-CURTAIN COUNTRIES

As the result of the most-favored-nation principle, reductions in duty and other concessions made by the United States with all countries under the trade-agreement program are automatically extended to Russia, Communist China, and all other Communist-dominated countries. We now have trade agreements with approximately 45 free countries, covering literally thousands of imported items, and the benefits of all these concessions contained in these agreements are now benefiting Russia, Communist China, and their satellite iron-curtain countries.

In the case of Russia, for example, approximately 88 percent of its dutiable imports into the United States benefit from reduced rates provided in trade agreements by us with free countries, and 92 percent of the tax-free imports from Russia consists of products bound on the free list in trade agreements by us with free countries.

In the case of Communist China, 72 percent of the dutiable imports into the United States from that country benefit from trade-agreement concessions granted by us to free countries, and 75 percent of the duty-free imports of that country benefit from our concessions to the free nations.

Briefly summarized, similar figures for other iron-curtain countries are as follows:

Poland, 80 percent of the dutiable imports and 79 percent of the free imports.

Hungary, 73 percent of the dutiable imports and 69 percent of the free imports.

Bulgaria, 97 percent of the dutiable imports and 30 percent of the free imports.

Manchuria, 99.8 percent of the dutiable imports and 98 percent of the free imports.

Rumania, 96 percent of the dutiable imports and 84 percent of the free imports.

It is outrageous that our American soldiers should be fighting the Communists in Korea while at the same time all the Communist countries are enjoying the benefits of concessions made by the United States to the free world without—except in the case of Czechoslovakia—having given the United States a single concession in return. This rank and preposterous inconsistency in our foreign policy must be removed at once by the denying to Russia and Communist China, and to any Communist satellite country—including North Korea—which the President finds is part of a conspiracy against the free world, the benefit of the reduced rates which we have granted to the free world.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, House bill 1612, was favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means by a vote of 18 to 7. It is very gratifying that three of our Republican colleagues on the committee joined with the solid majority in voting to favorably report this bill.

The purpose of the pending bill is to extend for 3 years from June 12, 1951, the authority of the President to enter into foreign-trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930. The original Trade Agreements Act was approved on June 12, 1934, and has been extended six times.

As is shown on pages 14 to 19 of the report the various extension acts are there listed and it shows that the act was extended on March 1, 1937, again on April 12, 1940, again on June 7, 1943, again on July 5, 1945, again on June 26, 1948, and on September 20, 1949. It has always been the policy under this legislation for Congress to frequently make a review of this program. It was originally enacted for a period of 3 years, and the purpose expressed at that time was that Congress should periodically review the accomplishments under this type of program and retain control of the program by making these frequent reviews of the effects of the program, and that has been done throughout the years since the beginning of this program. The trade-agreement program is a very important part of our foreign policy and should be continued. The trade agreements resulting from the negotiations of the past 16 years are now in effect with 45 other countries. In 1949 about 75 percent of our foreign trade was carried on with these countries. The most important agreement made thus far under the program is the general agreement on tariffs and trade which was entered into first at Geneva, and then later negotiations were carried on at Annecy, France, and now negotiations are under way at Torquay, England. The first negotiations at Geneva were in 1947, and 23 countries participated in the negotiations. Over 100 negotiations took place; over 45,000 separate tariff rates were dealt with. At Annecy, France, in 1949, nine more countries negotiated with the original countries and became parties to the general agreement. When the negotiations now going on at Torquay, England, are completed, it is expected that seven more countries will become parties to the general agreement. Therefore it will be seen that this program has been systematically and carefully built up throughout the years of the existence of the program.

The general agreement is the most successful effort ever made to negotiate tariff reductions over a wide area of world trade. The products included in the tariff schedules in the general agreement account for over one-half of the entire trade of the world. The fact that so many of the trading nations of the world are parties to this agreement means that its general provisions have a much wider application than the general provisions of any of the earlier bilateral trade agreements that were ever entered into. These general provisions now constitute an important part of the international commercial policy rules that apply between all of the commercial trading nations of the world. Thousands of our American businessmen are today profiting very materially by these rules governing commercial policy throughout the world. Why, it has been brought to our attention on many occasions that one of the most discouraging things encountered by American businessmen is the various trade restrictions that they have to encounter when they go to other countries of the world to try to dispose of their products, and among other things are the many restrictions with respect to getting their money out of those countries after they have sold their goods and their products there. These and the various other restrictions that apply to trade throughout the world are dealt with in these trade agreements in a scientific and effective manner, and the best results thus far accomplished in the field of foreign trade and commercial policy between the peoples of the different nations of the world have been accomplished under this trade agreements program. The program has been administered with great care. All negotiations have been handled on a product-by product basis. All negotiations have been handled under safeguards adequate to meet the needs of particular industries or groups of producers. The procedures followed in the administration of the act include provisions for wide public hearings and public notice to secure the fullest possible information in dealing with these various commodities proposed by the different countries of the world.

They provide for making concessions to meet the particular situation of particular producers, so as to permit the proper degree of imports into this country and to avoid injury to domestic interests. They include the escape clause, which provides for the withdrawal of concessions should they cause or threaten serious injury to any domestic industry.

As an indication of the care with which the authority to reduce the tariffs by the trade agreements has been administered, it should be pointed out that out of all of the hundreds and even thousands of tariff rates which have been reduced in agreement since the escape clause was first introduced in 1943 only 20 applications have been made to the United States Tariff Commission for its use, and thus far only one has been recommended by the Tariff Commission to justify action. We were told that only 20 of these applications for the application of the escape clause had been made throughout all this period of time, and that six of those applications are still pending before the Tariff Commission. All the others except one had been dismissed as not meeting the requirements laid down by the Tariff Commission, and in only one instance had the application been approved.

Mr. Chairman, it is well known that during the period covered by this program the people of the United States have achieved the highest level of prosperity and real income ever known in the history of this Nation. The standards of wages in the United States, as well as the income of our people and our farmers during this period, have been the highest in all history. The expansion of world trade brought about under the trade agreements program has contributed substantially toward this degree of prosperity.

It is not claimed by anybody that this program has been solely responsible for these gratifying results, but certainly it has made a material contribution in this direction.

Let us just remind ourselves for a moment in passing of the tremendous importance of foreign trade to the business of this country as well as agriculture. We know in ordinary times that we produce about 20 to 25 percent of our wheat as a surplus, about 55 or 60 percent of our cotton, about 40 percent of our packing house lard, as well as many other livestock products; and about 40 percent of our tobacco, as well as vast quantities of many other agricultural products.

We produce that much more in this country than we consume. Unless we can find a market throughout the world to dispose of these agricultural surpluses there can be only one result, and that is they will remain on the markets in this country and beat down the prices that our farmers receive for the products of their toil. Likewise it is true with reference to our manufactured products. We produce vast quantities of surplus products of many industrial items in this country. Unless we can find markets throughout the world to dispose of these surpluses they can have but one effect, and that is to curtail business in this country and produce results such as existed during the period of time when the doors of the markets of the world were closed under the operation of the embargo tariff provisions provided under the Tariff Act of 1930. This program has worked well. It is the most constructive effort that has been made thus far in the history of the country to carry on world trade on a scientific basis so as to keep secure the maximum degree of benefits and at the same time permit the least possible degree of injury to any industry in the country or any product produced by our people.

So we feel the splendid results accomplished under this program justify further confidence and support, and we ask for your support of the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEARNEY].

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, once again we are debating a bill to extend the reciprocal trades agreement for another 3 years. I want to go on record as opposed to this extension for 3 years.

I believe in reciprocity in its broad sense but I do not believe that under the law which has been on the statute books for many years it even begins to add up as a reciprocity act. To me, reciprocity is not a one-way street but that is what the act has been in my humble opinion.

If the act has to be renewed, it would be far better to extend it for a period of 1 year in order that a thorough review be had during the coming 12 months. It would be well for the Congress to appoint a joint committee composed of not only members of the Ways and Means Committee but also members of the Foreign Affairs Committee. This committee, in the joint study of the Reciprocal Trades Agreement, should go into the question of its effect not only on our domestic economy but its importance to our foreign policy.

There should most certainly be a part of any bill passed by this House a provision for an escape clause. Further, the Tariff Commission should be required to publish its reasons for dismissing any application and investigations.

In the Thirty-first Congressional District of New York, the district I have the honor to represent, we have a large segment of our economic life devoted to the manufacture of fine ladies' and men's leather gloves, fabric gloves, and knitted woolen gloves. This industry is one of the oldest in our country. The requisite skills in cutting and sewing leather gloves have been handed down by generations from father to son and in one county of the Thirty-first District of New York, my own home county of Fulton, practically the entire economy of over 50,000 people is directly dependent upon the welfare and progress of this industry. This is also true of many communities in the Middle West, throughout Wisconsin and Michigan.

On June 9, 1950, I appeared before the members of the Committee for Reciprocity Information and gave to them the above facts and followed with further information on our industry. A survey shows that almost 70 percent of the workers are in the age group of 36 to 87. By and large they own their own homes, have families, and are skilled workmen. I do not believe it was the intention of Congress in 1934, when the representation of the people delegated certain power to the executive branch of the Government, to negotiate with other nations from time to time on the question of raising or lowering the rates in our tariff structure, to force people to break up their homes and start life anew as unskilled laborers at lower wages. That is the prospect they face at being thrown into competition.

Back in 1929, Congress conducted extensive hearings as to tariff rates to be set on every item in the schedule. It was conceded then that the rates so set were to be in a measure a protection for American industry and American working men and women and to equalize, as far as possible, the difference between the cost of direct labor abroad and similar costs in this country.

One constantly hears that tariff is a form of subsidy but that is not so. A subsidy guarantees to a producer a fair return for his product. The tariff does not guarantee any producer anything.

Our industry cannot compete with foreign-made gloves, either leather or woolen gloves. Today, knit wool gloves coming from Japan, with practically the same design as ours hand-made, are being sold at retail much cheaper than we can make them. Today we are importing more than we ever did and, barring a war or depression, we shall continue to import as much or more. In our economy we certainly have a place for both imports and exports. But the fact that we have no control over the standard of living in foreign countries makes it necessary that we in the Congress protect, as far as possible, our own industries. Today, more than ever, the welfare of our people should be the adopted policy.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, the question of the protective tariff is as old as our country and really a little older. You know, before the Constitution was written the States built up trade barriers, in a way, against each other and for the protection of themselves. And all that time Great Britain was trying to keep us as an agricultural country and nothing else. They wanted us to produce raw material for their manufacturing plants. When the Constitutional Convention was called the members of that Convention wrote a Constitution which cemented us together. The Constitution provided that one State could not levy a duty against the importation into that State of the products of another State. Ever since that time the protective tariff has been a live issue, and sometimes it has been more alive than others. Our country quite consistently has protected its industries against the importation of competitive articles from cheap-labor countries. So the program has been carried on, and today we naturally claim that it is a Republican doctrine because in the early days when the products of the North and South were more distinctively different than they are now, naturally the South was an agricultural section and was inclined to free trade, and the North, being an industrial section, needed and demanded protection.

So the writers of the Constitution put a provision in it which is very positive. Here is what it says in effect: It says that the Congress shall have the right and the power to levy duties and imposts, and so forth. That also puts the responsibility upon the Congress. That is our responsibility. We should write the tariffs and impose the duties. Today our good friend, the gentleman from Tennessee, stands in the well of the House and tells how prosperous we are, and so forth. Well, I do not fully agree with him, especially his implications, but I do not have the time to go into details and argue with him on that proposition.

But this is what I am trying to suggest to you. We, the Congress of the United States, have in effect surrendered up a right which the Constitution gives us. More than that we have surrendered a duty and responsibility which the Constitution imposes upon us. We do not write the tariff laws any more. We have but very little to do with it. It is a case of where we have yielded an inch and they have taken a mile.

We have down here in Washington the trade agreements set-up, and that group writes the tariffs, and they write all the concessions that we surrender up to the other countries. All they have to do is make a finding and tell the President just what they found, and he can do just what he pleases. The practical writing of tariffs today is in the hands of the President and those he appoints. I am not speaking of the Tariff Commission. The Tariff Commission is a dignified, bipartisan commission, made up of four Democratic and two Republicans. This Commission was set up to render a great service which was demanding attention. This Commission was given great responsibilities under the law. They have a responsibility under the law, but now they have been supplanted they have practically nothing to do with the writing of tariffs. That has been transferred over to the President, and the President does it through the groups and agencies that he appoints. I think that few if any of these appointments are confirmed by the Senate. I say that this departure is a usurpation of the power of Congress, a surrender of the power of the Congress that I have never supported and I do not intend to support. It is not necessary for us to give up this constitutional privilege and it is not consistent with good government for us to voluntarily surrender it by passing legislation permitting the executive department to usurp and to supplant the prerogatives of the Congress.

Let me give you the history of the tariff, as far as the Republican Party is concerned. The Tariff Commission was established for the purpose that its name implies—to deal with tariffs. In order to do it effectively we did what we have done several times before—and it is perfectly constitutional—the Congress has surrendered certain of its powers to the executive department but within definite and certain limitations. Congress has surrendered to the Executive some executive functions that the President and his executive staffs can and should do but these functions have been given to be exercised strictly within limitations. We the Republican Party passed the first reciprocal trade agreements, but we established them within limitations. We said, in effect, that the Tariff Commission shall study all these tariffs and trade matters and then make recommendations to the President, and the President then could go up or down, and increase or decrease the tariff rates within the limitations prescribed by the law passed by Congress. He could not exercise any congressional functions except those which the Congress had given to him. We gave him his responsibility and his power, but we said he can go only that far. But today he can do just about as he pleases, because the Democrats have amended the laws so as to make the fixing of tariff rates and the regulation of the flow of imports and exports to and from our country an executive function to be exercised by the executive branch of the Government. The President has now practically the whole power; all the tariff fixing agencies are responsible only to him.

They talk about the law providing for an increase or a decrease in tariff rates. They say that the President is yet bound to raise and lower duties but I think I can say that in practically only one instance has the President or his group ever increased any tariff duty. Just think of it. The President in every instance but one has reduced the tariff duties and never increased them. It is by increasing duties he protects our industries and by reducing the duties he opens the doors of our ports to the great flood of foreign-made goods that fill our stores and take the markets away from American producers and American makers.

They say, "Well, how about the industry of the country?" I see my good friend who sits on the front seat on the Democratic side, right down in front of me, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS]. He comes from a coal-producing county. I dare say that the coal producers in his county are not satisfied with the importations of oil, a million barrels of oil coming in every day. This is not a million barrels every week or every month or every year, but a million barrels a day coming in. What effect does that have on the coal industry? Ask any coal producer or any well-informed coal miner—and there are thousands of them—they will say that these importations of oil are very disastrous to the coal-mining industry.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to agree in your statement. I do come from a coal-producing State and a coal-producing section, and this residual oil problem has created quite a problem for the coal fields.

Mr. JENKINS. I am glad for the comment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS]. His mining industries are affected as are all other coal mines. It is a very serious problem. They say the coal business is a big business. It is but it has been curtailed dangerously. You can allow your feelings with reference to the producers and miners of coal to prejudice you against the industry generally but there are hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children dependent upon the coal industry. Today the coal miners of the country in 3 days a week can produce all the coal that the coal industry can sell in this country.

Many miners are idle 3 or 4 days a week and many the whole year round. What is the reason? The reason is this million barrels of oil that is coming in every day. It finds its way into the furnaces and into the heating plants of the whole Nation. You cannot blame this situation onto the miners. This is another industry that you cannot say is prosperous. I do not know anybody who wants to invest money in the coal mining business. They are not listed on the stock exchanges in New York. Nobody is falling over himself to get into that business, because it has gone down about 50 percent. I can cite some other industries also that are suffering because of the so-called reciprocal trade agreements.

But getting back to my real point, it is the duty of Congress to levy tariffs and we should again assume it. We can do this if we will vote to put into effect real reciprocal trade agreements that are considered fairly and made fairly and enforced fairly.

We the Republicans first established reciprocal trade agreements, and they were truly reciprocal. What was then our basis? Mr. Chairman, the basis was a very simple little formula, very easy to remember. Here is what it was: The difference between the cost of an article at the port of entry and the cost of production of the same article in our country. That is how simple it was, and it worked well.

About 65 percent of all commodities that come into our country today come in duty-free. We by this action give a tremendous concession to practically all the countries of the world. But as I say, under the Republican administration we provided a system of sliding scales that would rise or fall only with the cost of production. That is what we applied against Japan when Japan paid wages of about 10 or 12 cents an hour and we were paying a dollar or a dollar and a half an hour. Nevertheless we told them and told all the countries of the world that they could bring their goods to our ports and we would admit them to the country if they would pay a duty equal to the difference between their cost of production and our cost of production.

We talk about the Tariff Commission today, our Tariff Commission might just as well be out of business as far as anybody's paying any attention to it unless it be a professor or somebody who wants to get some figures. That is about all they do. They are competent individuals, expert men in their fields, nonpartisan, but that has nothing to do with it because the President and his men have taken over the matter of fixing all tariff rates.

Some say that you can go down there before the Committee for Reciprocity Information and get fine service. This is not in line with much testimony given before the Ways and Means Committee. The same can be said of the Trade Agreements Committee. These Committees operate under the guidance of the State Department with the purpose of pleasing the New Deal administration. They are creatures of the New Deal and are thorough in their knowledge of New Deal technique. The treatment that the average producer who wishes to complain receives is not in tune with the average business ethics of our country; it is not fair, it is not honest, it is not sincere. Some of you are lawyers. When you go into court and present your case and file your brief you expect an opinion some time and you expect the court to say why he did this or why he did something else. And you usually get an opinion which is decisive and the court will give a reason for what he has said and done. But the businessman who appeals to these executive agencies seldom gets any report and never any reasons. He does not know who reads his application and who passes on it. It goes to the President eventually and the President does just about as he pleases with it. That is about what happens, the complainant gets no serious consideration. That is not American, it is not fair, it is not decent. Something ought to be done about it but you cannot do anything about it unless you restore the Tariff Commission to the dignity which it ought to have. This proposed legislation should be amended severely and if not amended to restore the tariff making functions to Congress it should be defeated.

I remember well the time when Mr. Cordell Hull came before the Committee on Ways and Means with his reciprocal trade agreements bill. He was then the Secretary of State. He had been a Member of Congress and also a member of the Ways and Means Committee. He was an ardent free trader.

I want to respect him for his patriotism and for his ability, and all that; but when he came before the Ways and Means Committee in 1934 I was a member of the committee then. At that time he was not too anxious to observe all the amenities and to show the courtesy that a Secretary of State is usually expected to show. He took a position of infallibility and showed some impatience when anyone questioned the soundness of his arguments. His whole argument was that his method of dealing with foreign trade was the only method and that if we failed to follow his course war would be inevitable. He practically maintained that the only way to prevent a world-wide war was to adopt his so-called reciprocal trade agreements bill. He thought that the only way to prevent war was for us to give our markets away to the other countries, many of which were opposed to us in every way. The New Deal administration put every publicity agency of the country that it could control to work boosting the Cordell Hull trade agreements as the great preventive of war. Many people are still inclined to believe this fallacious piece of advertising in spite of the fact that nearly all the time since Mr. Hull presented this fallacious theory our country has been in a war or been operating under threatening war clouds.

Mr. Chairman, I am tired of seeing the resources of our country wasted on impractical experiments. I tell you, I have about come to the place where I am tired of giving everything away. This situation is more serious than many think it is. We have about come to the end of the road with these expensive and insecure policies.

They tell us that there is no industry that has ever suffered by reason of the discrimination of these trade agencies. Come out into my country and visit the potteries in my State and tell some of those people that trade agreements have done them no harm and wait to hear what they say. Or better yet read the testimony given before the Ways and Means Committee by a number of industries that have been driven well-nigh into bankruptcy. If the tariff had been effective and beneficial those industries would not be in such distress as they are today. But I realize that such arguments to New Dealers are just like sowing seeds on the rocks; there is no soil in which they can germinate.

Come out to my State and meet the glass people, if you will. You will find them to be typical Americans who love their country and would like to make a living, as they have always done. You will find there company after company folding up and going out of business. They have worked and planned, but the Government that they have and yet respect has taken from them this opportunity and has given it to the people of some other countries that are killing our boys in a war. These glass and pottery workers are fine American citizens who live in their own homes, but they have to compete with Czechoslovakia and other communistic countries. They have to compete with China and all the other countries of the world that make chinaware, many of whom are now at war with us in spirit if not in actual combat.

Let me give you an illustration of how this trade-agreement plan fails to work. A man told us a story in committee the other day. He is the greatest producer of tableware in America. He is a great man, very intelligent, a good fighter, but his business has gone down. He told us one day he went through Pittsburgh and noticed in a big department store there a fine dinner set. He thought it was one of his make. So he decided to go in and get acquainted with the man who was selling his dinner sets. He went in and said, "I see you have a fine dinner set in your window." The man said, "Yes."

"How much do you get for it?" the manufacturer asked.

I do not know the exact figures involved, but we will say $125.

The store operator said, "$125." The visitor then said, "Why, that is my production cost. You could not sell it at that price. They should sell for about $200."

The department-store man said, "Let us go down and see."

They went down and found that the dinner set had been made in Japan. It had been made to imitate the product of this American manufacturer. It was the same pattern. The manufacturer did not know it from his own product. But, of course, he was chagrined to see the deception that was tending to put him out of business and his men out of work.

What are you going to do about cases like that? Those of you who support this New Deal deception cannot honestly say that nobody has been injured by this system, because I say to you there have been many injuries. You ask me to prove it. Well, that is like I said before, why go before a packed group or board to prove a thing when you know that board will not pay any attention to you, you know they will not give you any consideration. They have repeatedly done so. We have testimony, an abundance of it, to prove what I am saying.

Let me go on to watches. There are no watches produced in my part of the country, so I can speak about that only from what they tell me. If you want to read a masterful presentation of the injustice that has been done to the watch industry of the Nation, read the testimony in the RECORD of the hearings on this bill. Other members of the committee will touch on that subject and no doubt will go into detail with facts and figures.

Last year the fisheries came in before our committee. They came from both coasts, the Atlantic and the Pacific, and protested vigorously.

There is a general protest rising up in a great crescendo all over the country. But our little President puts his foot down and refuses to yield the power that has improperly been given to him. There are some who say, "It is all right; this is all right." But it is not all right. Somebody is suffering every day.

Mr. Chairman, I will not have time to discuss the peril points nor these other very important propositions, but they will be ably discussed by others who will address this body. I want to say most emphatically again that this wrongful assumption of power by the Executive is a very important matter. We, the Members of Congress, have the duty to hold for Congress the rights that the Constitution gives it. This is our day and generation. We should not by reason of blind partisanship or political expediency yield the power to protect the rights of the people, which is our plain duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time to advise the Members of the House that the announcement heretofore made that this bill will be taken up under the 5-minute rule on next Monday has been changed to next Wednesday. There are certain circumstances I was not aware of at the time the announcement was made. So I repeat, the bill will be taken up under the 5-minute rule on Wednesday next.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest advances this country ever made in its history was in 1934 when the Congress passed and the President signed the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Since that time the influence of the Congress of the United States has tremendously increased in all areas and portions of the world, since that time we have had greater prosperity in the United States. since then business has prospered more than ever before and since then we have accomplished and achieved better relationships and more good will throughout the world. That is an important consideration, Mr. Chairman, and if we did go back to what some have suggested, to this sort of behind the iron curtain, where our expanding business would have no markets in other areas of the world where they could sell their products, it would have an effect upon every business in this country; it would have an effect upon the workingmen of this country, and it would have an effect all over the world in bringing us down to a lower standard of living.

Mr. Chairman, something has been said about a suggested amendment, an amendment which was sought to be put into effect 2 years ago, which was known popularly as the so-called peril point amendment. This amendment will be offered, I understand, by one of my colleagues on the Republican side of the House. This afternoon I would like to take just a little bit of time to tell the membership of the House, and perhaps the country as a whole, why I think the peril-point suggestion is not a good one.

The fact is that this so-called peril-point proposition would bring into operation of the reciprocal trade-agreements program rigidities which would cripple and hamstring a proper administration of the program. It would be in effect giving notice to the world that the United States does not favor a continuation of a policy of good will and good neighborliness and expanding trade with other nations of the world. The peril point amendment would introduce a number of rigidities into the method of formulating recommendations to the President about proposed tariff concessions.

One of the first rigidities is that in practical effect the extent of the recommendations would be controlled by one agency of the Government. That agency would be the Tariff Commission. At the present time the trade agreement committee is made up of the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Commerce, the Tariff Commission, the Agricultural Committee, and others. I think there are about seven different agencies of the Government involved. So when that trade agreements committee meets we have a broad sweeping knowledge brought to the conference table of what effect the trade concession might have, not only the effect on imports, but the effect on our exports.

We cannot in these days, Mr. Chairman, go back to the system that was in effect during the days of President McKinley and build a stone wall around this country and not export anything, and that is exactly what would happen if we repeal this trade-agreement program. What country is going to buy products of our great manufacturers when we do not buy any products from them? What businessmen could go into business and simply sell things and nobody buy anything? That, in effect, is what those who are opposing this program would have us do.

Now, another rigidity in that so-called peril-point amendment is that the Tariff Commission would be required to fix, mind you, accurately and with precision the exact point below which a tariff rate could not be reduced or the exact point a tariff rate would have to be increased in order to prevent the causing or threatening of injury to a so-called domestic industry. I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is simply a practical impossibility for a single agency of this Government to fix a precise and exact point wherein tariffs could not be lowered any further.

Another rigidity is that the Tariff Commission decision on the peril point would have to be made without the benefit of discussion or consultation with other agencies of the Government, some of which agencies, like the Department of Commerce, the Department of Defense, and the Department of Agriculture, really have particular knowledge of the facts. They have the qualifications to make the judgments on the probable effects of a tariff concession on particular products. They have fields of interest where they know very, very many times more than the Tariff Commission could ever hope to find out about various products. So it just would be an impossible factor for a Tariff Commission alone to arrive at.

Another rigidity in this peril-point determination is that it must be made by the Tariff Commission in advance of any consultation, in advance of any negotiation, without the benefit of any facts that may be developed around the conference tables with the different countries. We all know that when negotiations are held we get the benefits of the advice of the experts of other countries, and we get the benefit of the advice of experts in this country, people who have special qualifications to understand the effects of them. As I said before, we have all these various departments that have special knowledge of the facts in their field.

Another rigidity, Mr. Chairman, is this: In cases where the Tariff Commission would fix a so-called peril point, what would actually and practically happen? The Tariff Commission would always fix a point that was extremely safe. They would not want to take a chance and perhaps fix a point that was low, for fear of being criticized, so they would play safe. The result would be, as I think I indicated a few minutes ago, that some of these countries that are selling us some goods would simply become discontented with our trade methods, they would refuse to buy any of our goods, and our export business would decline, with a bad effect on every working man and woman in this country, because you cannot let the economy of a country deteriorate without affecting practically every business in this country.

Another rigidity, Mr. Chairman, is that if the President should go beyond this so-called peril point which was fixed by the Tariff Commission he would be compelled to publish that to the Congress. The result of that would be that the country which had a peril point fixed to its disadvantage would feel hurt, it would be disappointed. The consultations would become public. The negotiations would be open to all the world. If these negotiations become public, it puts the United States at a disadvantage and you perhaps put other countries at a disadvantage. As we all know, negotiations that are held prior to the making of a contract or an agreement are not permissible in court. Some people say, "We will make these consultations public," but you can see that if the jury knew of all previous negotiations, if it had the benefit of all the negotiations and proposals and counterproposals and propositions that were made, it would not be in a position, perhaps, to render a true and a just verdict. It simply would not work in actual practice. Under the amendment which was in effect, if one peril point was discarded the President would be compelled to publish the entire list of peril points. This would upset our trade balance tremendously. I wish I had before me a list of the business organizations and a list of the outstanding businessmen in this country who feel that this trade-agreements program is really one of the things responsible for the United States being the leader in the world today. It helped that situation to come about. When we started this program in 1934 it helped us out in South America with our good-neighbor policy and it helped in all the European countries, and is still helping today.

I wish you would keep in mind, if you can, that we cannot put a barrier around this country and manufacture a lot of material and sell it to the outside world unless we buy some items from the outside world. That is the stark, naked fact that everybody should have in mind when we come to the final vote on this proposition.

Mr. Chairman, this peril-point proposition was advocated in the first place by those who have always opposed this program in its entirety. It is just one of those suggestions which will hamstring the proper operation of the act. It will be notice to the world that the United States is changing its foreign policy and does not have the intention of spreading good will and spreading our products all over the world.

I sincerely trust that when the vote comes on the so-called peril-point amendment, that the amendment will be defeated and the bill be passed so that our foreign affairs and our foreign relations can continue to make the progress that has been made in the last 17 years.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. The gentleman referred to experts who sat down and arranged these tariff duties for the United States. Who are these experts?

Mr. EBERHARTER. The Department of Defense, the Department of Agriculture, the State Department, and the Department of Commerce are represented, and on these committees are persons who are specially qualified to know about these different businesses and to know what impact a change in the tariff rates would make.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. What committees are you referring to?

Mr. EBERHARTER. To the trade committees.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. I understand you are talking of the group that sits down and meets with the foreign country.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The Trade Agreements Committee, yes.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Or are you referring to the group that actually negotiates with the foreign country?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Yes, my understanding is that that group is actually meeting right now in Europe to see whether they can obtain any more concessions from their countries so that our businessmen can export more and perhaps in return we will give them a consideration or two.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. I understand that they meet. But what is surprising to me about your statement is that you said they are experts. I wish you would put in the RECORD the name and address of these so-called experts, what they are expert in and something of their history which makes them an expert.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I think I can obtain that detailed information for the gentleman.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. I am referring to those individuals who actually negotiate with the foreign countries.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman mean those who are at this meeting now in Europe?

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. I do not care when they meet. If they are experts I would like to have that information, and you qualified them as experts.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That information is as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. As I understand, this committee on reciprocal trade is made up of interdepartmental experts.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is right.

Mr. STEFAN. The question I want to ask is when do the businessmen appear before the interdepartmental committee to state their case—after the London meeting or is it before they go to London?

Mr. EBERHARTER. A list is published of the various items on which the United States might be willing to negotiate. That list is published. Then any interested business can appear before a committee and present its case in the best light possible, to show whether or not any harm would be done to that particular industry in case a concession is made.

Mr. STEFAN. That is what I am interested in.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is before they meet with the other nations.

Mr. STEFAN. I am very glad to know that. I know there are two meetings. There is a meeting in some foreign country, either France or England, and there is also a meeting down in the department where the businessmen of the country are called in to state their case to the interdepartmental committee. Has that interdepartmental committee met with the businessmen and held that meeting?

Mr. EBERHARTER. The list is published about 4 months before the actual meeting in the foreign country, and in that 120 days businessmen can appear before the committee here in the United States, present the facts concerning their particular industry or their particular product.

Mr. STEFAN. Has that meeting already been held in the United States?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEFAN. And therefore the businessmen of the United States have been put on notice that the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act is going to be extended for 3 years?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. And they appeared before the interdepartmental committee and stated the various problems they are up against or have been during the past 2 or 3 years, and the businessmen have made their case before the committee, and then the interdepartmental committee and their experts have gone to Europe to see what trades they can make in the foreign country? Is that the mechanics of it?

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is the mechanics of it.

Mr. STEFAN. So that the businessmen of the United States have already had their day in court?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Oh, yes. That is set out rather completely and in detail in the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] has again expired.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, the issue before Congress at this time is not what it is labeled; it is not reciprocal trade which concerns us, but a further lowering of protection for American workers and American industries.

The title of the legislation is a sham. There has been no reciprocity in this ill-advised program. As is customary in all our dealings with other nations—we give and they take. Higher trade barriers are being erected by other countries while we lower ours. They disguise their trade restraints as import quotas and licensing agreements. We make concessions and other nations make it more difficult for us to trade with them.

The Trade Agreements Act is a sell-out by the Democrat Party to big business and the free traders of the South. The workingman and the small-business man are pushed aside—and their interests are forgotten. Let us remember that the worker and the small-business man paid the bulk of the taxes to finance ECA and other relief programs. These programs rebuilt the industrial capacity of foreign nations who are now privileged to compete in both domestic and world markets with cheap or slave labor. We are asked to compete against our own tax money, and to grant favored treatment to our competitors.

Czechoslovak rubber footwear—hats and pottery produced by slave labor are sold in America more reasonably than they can be produced here. Russian furs and Red Chinese dried eggs find ready markets in the United States because they are cheaper than the domestic variety. English and German steel and cutlery manufacturers can undersell the American producer.

Many big business firms support this trade program as they export much of their production. The small firm confined to the American market suffers because its plight goes unheeded.

Proponents argue that we must import to survive. This simply is not true, as we now import more than we export. In both August and October of 1950 imports exceeded exports substantially. This happened even while tremendous shipments were being made under Government sponsorship in connection with ECA, Army civilian supply, and mutual defense assistance programs.

I have in the past fought for "peril point" and "escape clause" amendments feeling that with them the trade program might be workable. Sufficient evidence has now been gathered to demonstrate clearly that even with these amendments the trade program will not benefit the citizens of the United States.

The Fair Deal administration has no intention of safeguarding the working people of this country, and I shall not support this ill-conceived program.

Many of our economic ills can be traced to this program. Expansion of industrial capacity for this Nation's growth has been stymied because of it. The sole beneficiaries are the monopolies and cartels abroad. I am not in Congress to acquiesce in the liquidation of American industrial life—but to assist in preserving jobs for the people of this Nation. Let others concern themselves with subsidies for foreign industries—I want the American worker to have a square deal first.

Mr. CURTIS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, we have been told this afternoon of the great prosperity which exists in this country. It has been stated that the reciprocal-trade-agreements program plays a substantial part in the measure of prosperity which some may enjoy. We all know that the prosperity, factual or fancied as it may be, which we have today rests upon the blood of American youth who have died and are dying overseas, and on the preparation for further war, and on the expenditures to repair the damage brought on as the result of war. So long as this type of expenditure continues we will have the false prosperity we have today.

If the Democratic Party favors this type of prosperity and expects the country to engage in wars periodically, and will agree to keep this country continuously preparing for war, and will agree to continue repairing the damages of future wars, we will continue to have the same kind of prosperity we have today. Prosperity through war and inflation has wiped out the real value of the savings of the American people. No, Mr. Chairman. This reciprocal-trade-agreement policy, sold to the American people by the internationalists as a solution to international discord, has today turned about and is one of the causes of why we are not properly prepared today.

The trade-agreement program has failed utterly to wipe out the restrictions and the limitations imposed by foreign countries upon free trade which appears to be the goal of the internationalists in our State Department today and the announced purpose of the trade program. Today, 17 years after this law began to operate, there are more limitations, more restrictions upon the free interchange of manufactured goods and agricultural products between nations than there were 17 years ago. This program has failed. Its failure is proved by the fact that when expenditures for war and associated purposes decreased, the effect of imports was immediately noted, and severely damaged certain of our important industries. Only about 1 year ago our unemployment amounted to almost 5,000,000, and loud cries were made to curtail imports. Labor was greatly concerned, and dozens of labor organizations, at that time and at the present time, oppose the administration and extension of this act. Representatives of these men who lost jobs prior to the resumption of war preparations came before our committee last week pleading for relief from this insidious policy under the Trade Agreements Act. They ask that the Congress of the United States do something to assure their industries, wherein skill is the first requisite, be preserved.

I said earlier that the trade-agreements policy has brought us to a point where our defenses are inadequate. In one of those areas real suffering prevails. In Korea today, because of our trade-agreement policies, young men are freezing in subzero temperatures; their legs and arms have had to be amputated because of the shortage of proper clothing; because wool was not available to them in the form in which it could be used to keep men warm, and because the great wool industry, in which millions upon millions of the sheep which provided that wool, has been liquidated under the trade-agreement policies. Today more than two-thirds of the wool we need comes from abroad. Today the flocks of sheep from which we formerly got our wool are at the lowest point in all history; and those trade agreements cutting down the price of wool below a level at which the sheep could be profitably grown here. This is the result of the negotiations of our Department of State, headed by Mr. Dean Acheson, who has been wrong before with respect to the question of war, and who I submit is wrong again. After our killing this industry here, the foreigners on whom we depend have raised the price of wool to its highest price in history.

Consider other industries—and these about which I am going to speak employ only a few hundred thousand men, if that many—but consider their strategic importance today as we prepare for war. Without the production of these industries we must import vital war materials from overseas. Consider the watch and clock industry, and remember that in time of war skilled specialists manufacture the timepieces without which no airplane can fly, without which guns cannot properly be fired, producing thousands of units which are used for the detonation of certain of our shells, and so on; and realize that that industry has been traded down the river to such a degree that one-quarter of the industry has been eliminated within the past year or two. Today we need skilled men capable of manufacturing an important type of mechanism that is delicate and very much needed. The craftsmen of this dying industry are the men to do it. I realize it is true that our remaining companies manufacturing watches show a profit in their dollar profit-and-loss account, but the industry has not expanded at all; on the contrary it has been reduced by 25 percent, and today we have to turn abroad and risk the hazards of overseas transportation in order to secure watches and the various time mechanisms we need. Right there the trade-agreement program is hurting us seriously in connection wth this question of preparation for war.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. As the gentleman knows, I come from a district in which 20,000 people are engaged in the manufacture of shoes. About 6 months ago the State Department came forward with an idea that proposed the scrapping of what is known as the American selling price and substituting in its place a foreign selling price, thereby enabling Japanese shoes to be shipped in for about 35 cents a pair in competition with shoes which the people in my district could only produce at 95 cents a pair. This is also true as applied to countries behind the iron curtain.

May I ask the gentleman if there is any disposition in this bill to scrap the American selling price in favor of another system which would enable Japanese shoes and shoes made behind the iron curtain to be shipped in here in competition with the people who work in my district?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I know of nothing that would make the change to which the gentleman refers. I do know, however, the practice is to permit the Japanese, at their hourly average wage of perhaps 20 to 25 cents, to ship into this country all kinds of any goods they care to ship in competition with American produced articles. That is the policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I withhold the point of order until the gentleman has concluded his statement.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I referred to two items on the critical list, both of which have been and are adversely affecting our war effort, one being timepieces and the other being wool.

Another one is the great chemical industry. Gentlemen appeared before our committee and testified that if cuts are made in the items now before the negotiators abroad the expansion of the chemical industry here in our country, so vital for the further conduct of the war, will be curtailed. That industry will be hurt to such an extent we will be dependent upon imports for essentials in the manufacture of our own munitions, clothing for our soldiers, and many other items important in the conduct of war. That industry is so alarmed that in response to direct questions it was stated they could not get capital with which to expand their industry from private individuals in order to increase production they know will be necessary in time of war. They will have to turn to the Government for money, turn to the taxpayers, to build and to expand that industry, instead of depending on the American way of doing it through the free-enterprise system.

A trade agreement today is threatening that industry with substantial extinction because they can and do produce those chemicals in Germany and other countries just as well as they do here. The great German chemical industry is revived by ERP funds and is taking over the American market.

I come now to a fourth critical industry for war purposes. The representatives of that industry, the industry composed of companies that manufacture binoculars, microscopes, range finders, and many other precision optical items in time of war told us that since the threat of war the industry has been asked to expand 40 times in order to make sufficient of these items. They do not have the trained men to so expand.

The trade agreements as administered in the past several years have so cut the tariff protecting this vital industry that in the past year 68,000 binoculars were brought in from Japan, many thousands from Germany, and other thousands from other countries. These could have been made here. It is a sad commentary that our Government purchased thousands of dollars worth of these products made in Italy and elsewhere overseas by cheap labor. This has the effect of cutting down planned expansion of the industries in question, of creating again the hazardous circumstances wherein we in this country are again dependent upon imports for the necessities to conduct our war, imports which our skilled men here can make better than they can be made abroad if given a chance.

I charge that, with respect to our four great industries, producers of timepieces, producers of chemicals, growers of wool, and producers of optical glass items, the trade-agreements program is directly responsible for the shortages of these products so vital in the conduct of war. We are in a dangerous situation and are forced to depend on imports now and, at great expense and inefficiency, to expand these industries. The negotiating boys from the State Department, untried in the business and military world, acting under congressional powers delegated to the President, evidencing a complete lack of realism to the welfare of our country, are responsible for the critical position of the country due to a shortage of these items. Congress should never have delegated this authority to the President which he, in turn, entrusts to Mr. Acheson. The risk to our country is too great, and Congress should recall this delegation immediately by defeating the bill now before us.

Should an enemy to our country seek effectively to damage us and seek to make us impotent in time of war, he would do it by striking us in the critical materials area. There have been men in our Government service concerned with the making of the trade agreements to whom the welfare of the United States did not come first. One of those instrumental in making these agreements, representing our Department of State, was Alger Hiss. Is it not significant that among all the complainants of the ill effect of the trade-agreements negotiations these four critical industries are the most outstanding and have suffered the greatest injury proportionately?

This is too dangerous a power to rest with the Executive and to be delegated by him to others.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. HAND. I would just like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, to my distinguished friend, that while he is talking about the optical glass industry, he might well talk about the entire glass industry in this country, which has a total value of approximately $250,000,000, which is highly strategic and highly necessary to the war effort, because, among other things, the manufacturers of ampules for the retention of medicine and antibiotics and the entire glass industry of this country, 9,000 workers of which are employed in my congressional district, have been and continue to be threatened by these reciprocal trade acts which are improperly administered by representatives of the State Department.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I am sure the gentleman is correct, and I thank him for his contribution.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michgan. The gentleman has made a very instructive statement and has shown how this program is interfering with American production. Now, am I correct in assuming that under point 4 as urged by the President we would be furnishing the dollars to instruct these people abroad to improve their methods of production, and that the competition will become greater yet than the gentleman has mentioned?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes, and after they build their plants with our dollars they impose embargoes so that we can no longer ship into their country, while we have reduced our tariffs to permit them free access to our markets.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I want to utter the fact that Poland, behind the iron curtain, is shipping in glass, paint and processed meats so low in the cost of production that our people do not have a chance, no matter how much they improve their technology.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, as I said, it is not only the optical glass industry, but the entire glass industry of this country which either has, or will, be adversely affected by the policies of our State Department, carried on under the authority of law which is now sought to be extended.

I have repeatedly argued this question before, and there is little use in presently laboring the point. It is no exaggeration to say that the present attitude of the State Deparment is to let American businesses die, if they cannot compete with low wage scales abroad, while at the same time we pour millions into those same foreign industries to enable them successfully to compete.

I woul l like to call to the attention of the committee the excellent review of this whole subject, published by Mr. O. R. Strackbein, Chairman of the National Labor-Management Council of Foreign Trade Policy. It is worthy of the attention of all Members before we consider this bill again next week.

At that time I hope I will have a further opportunity to discuss this subject, and particularly my bill which is designed to restore at least some measure of congressional authority with respect to tariff problems.

In its present unrestricted form, this bill should be defeated.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] A quorum is not present.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. DEMPSEY) having assumed the chair, Mr. WALTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 1612, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 335 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he submitted herewith the names of the absentees to be spread upon the Journal.

The Committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CAMP].

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, much has been said in this debate regarding the method of negotiating trade agreements with foreign countries. This principle is not new, and in fact the trade-agreements policy or program has been endorsed by some of the greatest leaders and experts on this subject. President McKinley advocated trade agreements. President Theodore Roosevelt was an outstanding advocate of reciprocal trade agreements. It has come on down to us through several decades of thoughtful men who were experts on foreign trade. This method of negotiating a trade agreement has been worked out and is a scientific one.

In making decisions under the Trade Agreements Act, the President is required by law to consult the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Defense, State, and the Tariff Commission. In practice, he gets a broader range of advice, for he has, by Executive order, set up the Trade Agreements Committee, which includes not only the agencies that he is required by law to consult, but also representatives of the Departments of Labor, Interior, the Treasury, and the Economic Cooperation Administration. From time to time other departments and agencies are consulted when problems of particular interest to them arise.

The first thing done in preparing for negotiations with a particular country is for the Trade Agreements Committee to appoint a country committee composed of officers of the different agencies which have members on the Trade Agreements Committee. These officers are selected because they are experts on our trade with that country. This committee then carefully studies the statistics of this trade and eventually picks out for possible tariff negotiation the products which we import from that country and for which that country is the principal supplier. The committee also chooses those items which that country imports and for which we are the chief supplier. The decisions of this committee are then presented to the Trade Agreements Committee, which sends the list of products to the President for approval.

When the President has approved the list, it is published and a date is set for public hearings to obtain the views of all interested persons and groups as to whether concessions on any of the items should be made. These hearings are held before the Committee for Reciprocity Information, which is composed of the same agencies and the same individuals as the Trade Agreements Committee.

I have had occasion twice since I have been a Member of this body to go with constituents of mine before this Committee for Reciprocity Information. On one occasion we had a product from our district which is only produced in our district. As a matter of fact, I think more than 75 percent of that product that is used in the United States is produced in my district. That product was in the list to be used in negotiating a treaty with Italy and with Spain. Both Italy and Spain produce this same product. I found that the members of the committee were most interested when I made that statement to them, and asked many questions, and went very carefully and very thoroughly into the cost of that product in my district, and what it meant to my district economically. I am very glad to tell you that when the trade agreement was made they did not disturb the tariff on that product.

The Tariff Commission member acts as chairman of the Committee for Reciprocity Information.

Right there I want to make another statement. If this peril-point consideration is adopted, the Tariff Commission member will not be sitting there, and the group that negotiates the treaty will have lost the benefit of his intricate knowledge of our tariff. The tariff consists, as you know, of hundreds and hundreds of items, and those gentlemen are experts who study the meaning of the tariff as it applies to the economics of these different items.

As I say, the Tariff Commission member acts as chairman of the Committee for Reciprocity Information. After the hearings are concluded, the information received, both orally and in the form of briefs submitted, as well as the information in Government files with respect to each product, is studied by the country committee. The committee makes a recommendation as to whether a concession would be justified. These recommendations are presented to the Trade Agreements Committee, which reviews them item by item and approves, modifies, or rejects them. The Trade Agreements Committee is very reluctant to recommend a concession which any one of its members feels strongly would be likely to result in serious injury. If any member of the Trade Agreements Committee, including the Tariff Commission member, disagrees with the majority decision, he is required to report his dissent, together with the reasons for the dissent, to the President. Consequently, the President actually does obtain, in effect, a peril-point finding in cases where there are serious misgivings in the mind of the Tariff Commission member of the committee or any other member as to the effect of a particular concession.

This system has worked well for 16 years. As I have shown, great care is exercised during every step of the preparations. The final recommendations represent the best judgment of qualified experts in all the branches of the Government which have anything to do with trade agreements. No one agency dominates the proceedings. In every case every member of the Trade Agreements Committee has the duty and is, in fact, required, if he disagrees with the majority view, to file his minority opinion.

If, in spite of all the care which is taken, unforeseen circumstances arise which result in increased imports of an item upon which a concession has been granted, there is the remedy of the escape clause, with which you all are familiar. Action under the escape clause permits us to modify or withdraw entirely any concession previously granted. Such an action recently took place in connection with women's fur-felt hats. This escape clause is administered solely and entirely by the Tariff Commission. Here again, then, the Tariff Commission is in a position to act to prevent injury to a domestic industry.

Under the present system, the Trade Agreements Committee is not required by law to give a guaranty such as the peril-point theory would require of the President in good conscience to give him its best collective judgment. And that judgment, as given in the past, has almost without exception proved to be right.

SAFEGUARDS EMPLOYED UNDER THE TRADE-AGREEMENTS PROGRAM TO PREVENT INJURY TO UNITED STATES INDUSTRIES

Measures to assure that no United States industry will suffer serious injury or threat of serious injury through a United States concession in a trade agreement are provided for: First, in the procedure followed before a trade agreement is negotiated; second, in the individual concessions themselves; and third, in the general provisions of the agreement which apply after the agreement becomes effective.

SAFEGUARDING PROCEDURES EMPLOYED BEFORE AGREEMENT IS NEGOTIATED

Before any concession is even offered by the United States in a trade-agreement negotiation, the following procedures are required either by the Trade Agreements Act itself, or by Executive order of the President.

First. The Tariff Commission, a bipartisan, expert body responsible to the Congress, makes a thorough study of the possible effects of a concession, including competitive factors, with regard to each item on which a concession is being considered.

Second. A list of all items on which concessions may be considered is made public.

Third. Public hearings are held at which any interested person has opportunity to present his views, both in writing and orally, on whether any concession should be offered.

Fourth. Opportunity is given for informal consultation with interested persons or groups.

Fifth. Facts and opinions developed through the Tariff Commission studies, the hearings, and any other available means are closely examined by the Interdepartmental Committee on Trade Agreements, which includes a member of the Tariff Commission, a representative of the Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration, and representatives of the Departments of State, Agriculture, Commerce, Treasury, Labor, Defense, and the Interior. This committee was established by Executive order.

Sixth. After considering all available information on each item, the Trade Agreements Committee decides what recommendations it will make to the President as to concessions which might be offered in negotiations. More than 99 percent of these recommendations have been unanimous. If any agency disagrees with the majority recommendations, that agency submits its dissent, in writing, with its reasons, to the President along with the majority recommendation.

Seventh. After examining all available information regarding a given item included a published list, the Trade Agreements Committee may decide not to recommend any concession whatever on that item.

Eighth. The concessions which the President approves form the basis of United States offers in the actual negotiations. No United States concessions are actually made unless adequate concessions from foreign countries are obtained in return.

Ninth. Concessions granted and obtained in the negotiations must be approved by the President before they can be put into effect.

SAFEGUARDS "BUILT INTO" INDIVIDUAL CONCESSIONS

In recommending concessions the Trade Agreements Committee tailors each one to fit the situation of the product concerned and of any domestic industry with whose product the imported article might compete.

First. On certain items the concession may be only the binding of the existing duty rate or existing duty-free status. "Binding" means agreement not to increase the existing tariff on a dutiable item or to impose a duty on a duty-free item. It involves no change in the tariff treatment of the item.

Second. On certain other items the recommendation may be to reduce the duty only 10 percent or 20 percent instead of the full 50 percent which would be possible under the President's authority.

Third. The duty may be reduced on only a specified quantity of imports of the product in question. On any imports over this "tariff quota" the original rate remains in effect. Sometimes a concession provides that only certain quantities of the tariff-quota product shall be admitted at the low rate of duty per month or quarter. This prevents the market from being flooded by large imports under the quota at any one time.

Fourth. The duty may be reduced on only specified types, grades, or value classes of the product in question, the rates on other classifications remaining unchanged. On cotton textiles, for example, the United States has reduced tariffs on high-quality goods which are normally imported from Western Europe, but not on goods of lower quality produced in Japan.

Fifth. In some cases, such as that of fresh vegetables, a reduced duty may apply only during a specified season when domestic products with which they might compete are not being marketed—a seasonal quota.

SAFEGUARDS EMPLOYED AFTER TRADE AGREEMENT IS IN EFFECT

Ever since the Trade Agreements Act was proposed and all through the administration of the trade agreements program, there have been industries which have claimed that they would be injured by the program. There is clear evidence, both in the hearings that precede negotiations and in the congressional hearings in connection with renewal of the Trade Agreements Act, that in very few cases have the fears of injury been justified. However, there are adequate means for preventing or remedying any such injury if it occurs after the agreement has gone into effect.

THE STANDARD ESCAPE CLAUSE

All the trade agreements which have been signed since 1943, including the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, have included an escape clause under which any party to the agreement may modify or withdraw an individual concession if it is found that, as a result of unforeseen circumstances and of the concession, imports of the item in question are occurring in such increased quantity and in such circumstances as to cause or threaten serious injury to a domestic industry. Under this clause the concession may be either partly or wholly withdrawn, a quota imposed on imports, or a rate of duty even higher than that in effect before the concession may be put into effect.

By joint agreement a substantially identical clause was included on October 13, 1950, in the trade agreement between the United States and Switzerland, concluded in 1936.

For the United States, the escape clause action is administered by the Tariff Commission, which makes its recommendation to the President, directly and without participation of any other Government agency.

An industry claiming injury or threat of injury resulting from a trade-agreement concession applies to the Tariff Commission for an investigation and public hearing. If, in the Commission's opinion, a preliminary examination reveals facts warranting a formal investigation, the Commission conducts one and recommends to the President the action, if any, which should be taken.

Although the United States has made concessions on several thousand items in trade agreements that contain the escape clause, only 20 applications for investigations, covering 17 products, have been filed with the Tariff Commission. Five of these are still pending. Of the 15 which have been disposed of, only one—involving women's fur felt hats and hat bodies—was found by the Tariff Commission to justify action. In that case the Tariff Commission recommended withdrawal of the concession and this was done.

The careful application of the safeguards observed before concessions are made and the way concessions are tailored to particular needs are primarily responsible for the fact that need for using the escape clause has been minimized.

REMEDIES OTHER THAN STANDARD ESCAPE CLAUSE

Several trade agreements concluded by the United States before the general agreement contained clauses under which a concession could be modified or withdrawn if it was found that its major benefits were going to some country other than the one to which the concession had been granted, and if serious injury to a domestic industry was occurring or threatened.

The 1936 trade agreement with Switzerland, containing this clause, included a United States concession on certain types of embroidered handkerchiefs. In 1940 it was found that large numbers of such handkerchiefs were being imported from another country and were threatening injury to a domestic industry. The concession was withdrawn.

The 1939 agreement with Canada included a United States concession on linen fire hose. In 1947 it was found that such hose was being imported in large quantities from another country and the domestic industry was being threatened. That concession, too, was withdrawn.

The 1939 agreement with Canada included a United States concession on live black and silver foxes and on fox furs. On the outbreak of World War II several large European markets for furs were closed, and there were considerable increases in shipments of furs to the United States. A supplementary agreement, limiting the number of furs to be admitted to the United States, was negotiated.

In the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade the United States granted to Canada a reduced-duty quota on potatoes and agreed to increase the quota if United States potato production should fall below 350,000,000 bushels per year. In 1950 the United States sought and obtained from Canada, with the approval of the other contracting parties to the general agreement, a waiver under which the United States is not obligated to increase the Canadian potato quota unless United States production should fall below 335,000,000 bushels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SEELY-BROWN].

Mr. SEELY-BROWN. Mr. Chairman, on June 23—a scant few days before President Truman ordered our troops into Korea—I was nominated as the Republican candidate for Representative from the Second District of Connecticut.

In accepting that high honor, I said:

Unemployment—in the city, on the farm, and all the evils that unemployment breeds under its dark shadow—is our most serious domestic problem here in eastern Connecticut. Our every effort must be directed toward the proper solution of this problem. If elected, I shall analyze the issues as they are debated in the Congress with this thought always in mind: Are we helping to provide a job for the man who wants to work? Are we helping to provide job security for the man who is working?

The present abuse of the existing reciprocal trade agreements has resulted in the flooding of the American market with goods made by slave labor behind the iron curtain. This abuse of a principle, which, in its proper form I support, is directly responsible for the shutting down of many of our mills in eastern Connecticut. This abuse must be corrected if we are to provide proper employment for our people.

With this pledge to my people in mind, I rise to discuss the issue before us today. Certainly the times are different now than they were last June. Mothers instead of watching the papers for announcements as to how many days' work would be available for their men or for themselves at the mill, now watch for the latest draft call, and for the latest casualty list.

Certainly now is the time, not only to provide for the lives of our people but also to provide for the livelihood of our people in the days to come.

To do this—to provide for better livelihood for our people—I believe that the present reciprocal trade agreements must be improved. They must be improved in at least three respects.

First. I believe that the peril-point-report provisions as established by the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948 should be reenacted.

These provisions originally were adopted in order to do certain things:

1. To furnish competent and expert nonpartisan information for the guidance of the State Department as it determined our foreign-trade program.

2. To safeguard the economic health of industries essential to the national defense.

3. To prevent serious cut-backs in jobs for our workers.

Under the terms of these provisions, the Tariff Commission was required to specify certain points below which, in the judgment of the Commission, it would be perilous to go in making further tariff cuts.

This procedure in no way interfered with the President's authority as delegated to him by Congress to make future trade agreements. This procedure imposed no obligation on the State Department to adhere to the Commission's finding.

I believe that the President should be required to advise the Congress and the people of those items on which tariff cuts have been made if the cuts go below the point the Tariff Commission found would result in serious injury to our domestic workers. The President should be required to tell us exactly why he believed it advisable to go beyond these points.

Second. I believe that the President should be directed to prevent the reduction of tariffs or other trade concessions made in trade agreements with the free nations to imports from Soviet Russia, Communist China, and any Communist satellite country.

I have said before on the floor of the House that I regret that while all the partners in the Atlantic Pact are supposedly uniting to build up defenses against Soviet aggression, some are still supplying the Communist empire with critical and strategic war materials.

In this same vein, I cannot for the life of me see why we should allow our American soldiers to fight and die fighting the Communists in one part of the world while many of the Communist countries enjoy the benefits of our trade concessions made to the world without making a single concession in return.

It is reported that—and I quote:

In the case of Russia, approximately 83 percent of its dutiable imports into the United States from that country in 1949 benefited from reduced rates provided in trade agreements with other countries and 92 percent of the tax-free imports from Russia consisted of products found on the free list in trade agreements with other countries.

We cannot, we must not, tolerate a condition of our own creation which results in our fighting the Communists in Korea on the one hand and encouraging on the other hand imports from Communist countries which compete with the products of our own domestic labor. The least we can do is to insist that imports from behind the iron curtain pay a full rate of duty. We are asking our boys in Korea to pay their full share of duty, are we not?

Third. Certain standards should be established by the Congress to guide the President in providing relief under a so-called escape clause.

In 1934, the Congress delegated to the President the authority to enter into trade agreements with other nations. At this time, no provision was made for escape from serious economic injury to our own domestic industries. Since 1943, however, practically all trade agreements contain a so-called escape clause.

As has been stated here on the floor before, by others, the peril-point report helps prevent anyone setting the barn on fire; the escape clause provides some hope for those inside the burning barn to get out and survive.

As we face the difficult days that lie ahead, I hope that our friends will like us, not just for our money, but more importantly, for the principles in which we believe.

I believe in and shall support the principle of the reciprocal trade agreements. I recognize that since this principle was first adopted by the American people we have had very little opportunity to study its workings under any peacetime economy. I can support this measure with much better conscience if the suggested amendments I have listed above are adopted. If these amendments are defeated, I hope that those in charge of our foreign-trade program will carefully consider why these amendments were offered.

Certainly this is the time for a clear statement of fact and principle.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill, H. R. 1612, now before the House, is to extend the authority of the President to enter into foreign trade agreements, under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, for an additional 3 years from June 12, 1951.

Trade agreement resulting from negotiations of the past 16 years are now in effect with 45 foreign countries. The purpose of the law as it was originally presented to Congress for enactment was to encourage trade between our country and the other countries of the world. This basic principle was praiseworthy. However, the administration of the law by the State Department has been in many respects very unsatisfactory. There have been too many instances under the agreement entered into, where industries of this country have had to meet the competition of products manufactured or produced by underpaid labor in foreign countries. This has resulted in hardship for the affected industries and the workmen of our own country. We cannot maintain our standard of living and successfully compete with foreign products that result from the low-scale wages prevalent in foreign countries. In all our efforts to assist foreign countries we should be realistic and consider the effect on our own workmen and their standard of living. To do otherwise is to improve conditions abroad at the expense of the standards prevailing in this country. The fact that the officials of the State Department charged with the administration of the law, have not always recognized this fact is in my opinion a just cause of complaint.

Severe criticism has also been directed to the administration of the law for failure to permit interested parties, including representatives of workers in affected industries from having full opportunity to appear and argue their case before determination is made. Under the procedures followed interested parties are kept in the dark. They do not know what is claimed by their foreign competitor, or, in some instances do not know what articles are being considered by the State Department. This procedure, with respect to American manufacturers and workers, is not applied by foreign countries to their nationals. According to my information all interested parties in other countries are given full and free opportunity by the officials in their respective countries to be heard. They are given every consideration before any determination is made or treaty entered into. The attitude of foreign countries toward their nationals is not only reasonable but right and just. There should be similar consideration given to our citizens by our officials in our State Department. Right and justice should prevail in this country's administrations of the law at least equal to that which is observed in foreign countries.

Another feature that has never seemed justified to me is the application that is made of the so-called most-favored-nation clause of the reciprocal trade agreements. Under this clause whatever reduction we make in our tariff rates with respect to any nation with whom we enter into an agreement immediately becomes available to every other nation regardless of whether or not that nation has made any concession to us. It seems to me that this sets at naught the whole purpose of reciprocal agreements. The fundamental purpose of such agreements is to give some concession to us in return for concessions we give to other nations. When nations who have made no concessions to us can obtain the same benefits as other nations who have made concessions, there can be no justification from the standpoint of reciprocity. It destroys the very basis of reciprocity. Such nations get benefits without giving benefits.

Nowhere is the injustice of this principle more apparent than in its application to Soviet Russia, Communist China, and the iron-curtain countries.

The minority report filed by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee clearly and forcibly emphasizes this fact in the following language:

> As the result of the most-favored-nation principle, reductions in duty and other concessions made by the United States with all countries under the trade-agreement program are automatically extended to Russia, Communist China, and all other Communist-dominated countries. We now have trade agreements with approximately 45 free countries covering literally thousands of imported items, and the benefits of all these concessions contained in these agreements are now benefiting Russia, Communist China, and their satellite iron-curtain countries.
> In the case of Russia, for example, approximately 88 percent of its dutiable imports into the United States benefits from reduced rates provided in trade agreements by us with free countries, and 92 percent of the tax-free imports from Russia consists of products bound on the free list in trade agreements by us with free countries.
> In the case of Communist China, 72 percent of the dutiable imports into the United States from that country benefits from trade-agreement concessions granted by us to free countries, and 75 percent of the duty-free imports of that country benefits from our concessions to the free nations.
> Briefly summarized, similar figures for other iron-curtain countries are as follows:
> Poland, 80 percent of the dutiable imports and 79 percent of the free imports.
> Hungary, 73 percent of the dutiable imports and 69 percent of the free imports.
> Bulgaria, 97 percent of the dutiable imports and 30 percent of the free imports.
> Manchuria, 99.8 percent of the dutiable imports and 98 percent of the free imports.
> Rumania, 96 percent of the dutiable imports and 84 percent of the free imports.

It is outrageous that our American soldiers should be fighting the Communists in Korea while at the same time all the Communist countries are enjoying the benefits of concessions made by the United States to the free world without—except in the case of Czechoslovakia—having given the United States a single concession in return. I believe that this preposterous inconsistency in our foreign policy should be removed at once by the denying to Russia and Communist China, and to any Communist satellite country—including North Korea—which the President finds is part of a conspiracy against the free world, the benefit of the reduced rates which we have granted to the free world.

In addition to what I have already mentioned as defects in the administration of the law, there are other conditions that should be rectified.

One of the most important of these is to prevent serious injury or the threat of it to our workers, farmers, and productive enterprises resulting from unwise tariff cuts and concessions by the administrators of this law. This is often referred to as the peril point. I am in favor of an amendment to the law that will require the Tariff Commission to study all contemplated cuts in tariff rates to foreign countries and ascertain what cuts would in its opinion go below the peril point and thereby endanger the affected industry in our own country and its workers. Reports would be made to the President or to the Congress of the cases where the contemplated concessions would go below the peril points. This would provide a signal against the danger ahead if such concession should be made. This would, in my opinion, prove of great advantage to our producers and our workers.

Another feature that needs attention by way of remedial action relates to what is termed the "escape clause." A peril-point clause, to which I have just referred, is to warn us of danger, and the escape clause is to save us in the event that a situation develops that shows we have made a bad bargain. Thus, the peril point and the escape clauses are closely related. The adoption of adequate provisions to accomplish the purposes designed for each of them respectively is with the sole thought of protecting American industries and their workers from what might be found disastrous to American interests. Clauses of this character should have the approval of the Congress.

In conclusion, I think it would be much wiser to limit the operation of the act to 2 years instead of 3. The uncertainty that exists in the world today admonishes us to go carefully. We should not commit ourselves too far in the future. We need to exercise caution.

I trust that the suggestions I have made to improve our reciprocal trade-agreement policy will have the support and approval of the Congress.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, we have considered periodically the method of tariff reduction provided for in the present bill.

I rise today as I have risen before to urge the adoption of the so-called escape-clause amendment, the so-called peril-point amendment, and for that matter any other amendment which may be offered to protect American labor.

I rise particularly to support the so-called escape-clause amendment which is to be offered, and to express the hope that the Democratic majority of this House will see fit to accept it.

This amendment will permit suspension, withdrawal, or modification of concessions by the President whenever any industry in America may be jeopardized as a result of any trade agreement.

Frankly, I cannot see why or how any Member of this House, who has at heart the best interests of the great body of patriotic, hard-working men and women in this country who compose our labor force, can oppose this amendment.

I appreciate fully the importance of international trade. Under present world conditions, confronted as we are by the menace of world-wide communism, international trade is vital.

But surely, Mr. Chairman, we have not only the right but the solemn obligation to safeguard American labor from the loss of its means of livelihood—from being thrown into the army of the unemployed—if the administration misjudges the effects of any particular trade agreement under existing policy.

We talk of a "reciprocal" trade-agreement policy. The policy under consideration, Mr. Chairman, has never been truly reciprocal. Every man and woman in this House today knows that once a concession is made to one country, that concession, generally speaking, applies to every other country on the face of the earth, whether or not behind the iron curtain, which produces the commodity in question.

Who can tell what the adverse effects under any trade agreement may be under these conditions?

It cannot be denied that great damage has been done to certain industries under the present trade agreements policy. Those of us in New England will not forget the fate of the Waltham Watch Co., and the American watch industry generally, despite repeated appeals to the State Department and the Tariff Commission.

Why not require an escape clause in all trade agreements as a safeguard for our workers in the future?

An escape clause has in fact been included in certain agreements from the outset. Still other agreements have been renegotiated for the purpose of including an escape clause.

The amendment which will be offered will simply make it mandatory that every trade agreement hereafter shall include a proper escape clause.

I am for international trade, Mr. Chairman, but I am also for the protection of the men and women in this country who labor in our plants and who contribute to the industrial success of this Nation.

They are entitled to and must have jobs at real American wages, under decent working conditions, if we are to produce what must be produced to meet our tremendous obligations at home and abroad.

In the name of American labor, in the name of American industry, essential in time of war, I appeal for the overwhelming approval of the escape-clause amendment when offered and for the approval of any other amendments which will safeguard the jobs of the rank and file of labor.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. SCUDDER].

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Chairman, almost 2 years ago today when H. R. 1211 was under consideration, which repealed the peril point and escape clause and extended the Reciprocal Trade Act for 3 years, I opposed this bill and gave warning to the effect that it would be hazardous to American agriculture and industry. I cited a number of industries in my district that would be jeopardized through the reduction of tariffs. I cited from a speech of Albert S. Goss, master of the National Grange, and of Mr. Ray B. Wiser, president of the California Farm Bureau Federation, substantiating my position in opposing this legislation.

One year later, on February 9, 1950, I addressed this House on the effects of the Reciprocal Trade Act during the past 12 months, and I am sorry to say that my predictions were coming true. Among the industries that were being injured through the unrealistic administration of the Reciprocal Trade Act were lumber, fishing, and many agricultural crops, including hops, walnuts, olives, almonds, prunes, grapes, cherries, and many other industries in my own district, besides an untold number of industries throughout the United States.

The tariff on hops had been reduced from 24 cents to 12 cents a pound and Czechoslovakian hops from behind the iron curtain wrecked the hop market in this country. Olive oil from the Mediterranean, where labor is paid $1 a day as against $1 an hour in California, had completely ruined that industry. The Waltham Watch Co., a hundred-year-old firm, had just closed its doors, throwing 1,231 employees out of work on 1 day's notice.

In June of last year I appeared before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor to give testimony in order to stop the negotiation that was being planned for the reduction of tariff on dry wines. Vineyard labor costs in the United States an average of from $8 to $9 per day, while comparable labor in France ranges from a low of $1.84 up to $2.50 a day in harvest periods. Seventy-two cents to a dollar per day in Spain and Portugal, and from $1.12 to $1.26 per day, plus a quart of wine in Italy. It costs $105.18 to farm 1 acre of grapes in California, while the average cost in foreign countries is $26.56. Therefore, if the grape growers and the manufacturers of wine are to survive in this country they must have adequate tariff protection.

I could name many other industries that were folding up at that time because of the effect of the reciprocal trade agreements entered into. The constant threat to American agriculture and industry of the present unrealistic tariff law administered according to the whims of international theorists can only mean disaster to our American way of life. The United States of America became great because of individual initiative which had the protection of an adequate and proper protective tariff system that permitted our economy to develop and expand, and is responsible for the high standard attained for the farmers, labor, and industry.

Only a few months ago hearings were being held at the request of organized labor here in Washington, protesting the reduction of tariffs which were closing American factories and throwing men out of employment. Millions of men at that time were out of a job. Then came June of 1950 and another war. Must we continue indefinitely to depend upon war bailing us out economically with the sacrifice of thousands of our young men and the hardship that goes with it? I say that we should solve our economic problems in a realistic manner. We continue to win the wars and lose the peace. I believe it our duty to write into the reciprocal trade agreement the peril point and the escape clause in order to lend stability to our agriculture and industry.

I would like to quote from a letter I received today from Ray B. Wiser, president of the California Farm Bureau Federation:

> We also recommend that any extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act should carry a provision setting definite minima beyond which tariffs could not be lowered. These minima should be set by an investigating agency after careful review of all the pertinent facts.
> It is apparent that the whole mechanism of tariff rate determination is now geared to accomplish reductions in tariff rates. It is our belief that by legislation or policy, provision should be effected whereby adequate consideration can be given to agricultural industry requests for tariff increases where such industries are hard hit by increasing imports.

I also have word from the almond growers of California that imports of almonds in the past 60 days have been greater than any like period during the past 25 years. It is estimated that 5,000,000 pounds of shelled almonds, together with those produced in this country, will serve the American market. Already this season the imports exceed 7,240,000 pounds, and unless curtailed will reach eighteen to twenty million pounds. This will spell ruin to this industry.

Without a doubt many other industries in this country are facing the same problem. I am thoroughly in agreement with the principle involved in the Reciprocal Trade Act. It is fine in principle, but its application, however, has proven disastrous to many of the industries throughout the length and breadth of our country, and the attitude of those who have been effecting our agreements for the past 20 years is that industry must be sacrificed in order to pacify producers in other countries.

I have introduced H. R. 2194 to restore the peril point and the escape clause to our foreign trade agreements. I expect to have ready for introduction the principles of my bill to be amended into the pending bill. I cannot see how we can continue to maintain our American standard and our American wage scales and continue to purchase competing articles from foreign countries where their labor costs are so greatly below ours.

The application of the tariff law has not been reciprocal. It is a one-way, downhill, twisting road, with supers sloped the wrong way, and at every turn we lose one of our important industries, or one of our American agricultural producers.

I plead with you to amend this bill to provide for the peril point and the escape clause to give some semblance of protection to our American workingman and our American industries.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. TOLLEFSON].

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, I doubt that there are many Members of the House who are not in accord with the theory or the principles of the reciprocal-trade legislation. The controversy over the subject deals chiefly with the administration of the legislation and the results which have been brought about because of that administration. It seems to me, therefore, that the legislation should contain some provisions which are designed to correct in some measure the administrative errors. Along with other Members of the House I believe amongst those provisions should be one dealing with the so-called peril point.

A number of domestic industries have been seriously injured because of the almost utter disregard had for their welfare in the lowering of tariffs on the imports of competing foreign products. I should like to point out one such industry to the Members of the House, namely, the Pacific Northwest fishing industry. Permit me to refer to one or two segments of it.

For instance, the halibut industry in the North Pacific normally employs 559 vessels and 3,084 fishermen, and products of that fleet grossed $34,000,000 in 1948; the North Pacific otter trawler industry—excluding vessels operated from California—normally employs 300 vessels and 1,350 men and produced a gross of $3,667,100 in 1948.

This important segment of our national economy is now in trouble because of imports of vitamin A from Japan—which cut 1950 liver prices to one-fourth of the 1948 level—and imports of groundfish fillets from Canada and Iceland at prices so low that they have undermined the United States market to such an extent that Washington and Oregon vessels faced with United States costs no longer can compete in the market.

Cod fillets produced by United States fishermen cost raw fish dealers from 20 to 24 cents a pound under present-day costs—while similar fillets imported from Canada and Iceland sell in the same market for from 18 to 21 cents a pound. This differential in price resulting from lower costs for foreign fishermen closes out our markets to our own fishermen. I cite the case of the Eardley Fish & Fillet Co., of Seattle, as an example of the damage done to local fishing industry as a result of imports. This company had 32 vessels under contract in 1947 and employed 70 to 80 people in its plants at that time. Today, only six vessels are being used and shore workers number only 30 to 35. And, whereas in 1947 the 32 vessels were operating without limit, the vessels now are limited to 2,000 pounds each—while the same vessels were averaging from 60,000 pounds to 100,000 pounds each in 1947.

Imports of vitamin A and groundfish in the halibut and otter-trawl fishing industry—including the allied shark industry—have destroyed the full-time jobs of 200 soupfin shark drift netters—destroyed the off-season employment of 450 halibut fishermen—reduced the incomes of 3,000 halibut and shark fishermen by $3,200,000 annually and have overburdened the already overcrowded halibut industry by the addition of 50 boats and 300 men from other branches of the fishing industry, and destroyed 586 jobs in the otter-trawl industry and reduced the incomes of those employed in that field.

The only remedies suggested by Government officials have been to increase imports, reduce exports, continue to send money to other countries to give them funds to pay for United States goods and provide cash benefits for those hurt by increased imports. It is my view that the best long-range solution is to limit imports to a fair percentage of domestic consumption and then allow our economy to adjust itself to this policy. The payments of benefits to those hurt by unlimited imports is an unsatisfactory remedy. We remember the difficulty encountered by OPA in the fish business during the war and the difficulties of subsidy payments would be 10 times as great.

The Northwest fishing industry is being injured mostly in the vitamin-A field by imports from Japan. The market for vitamin A produced by Northwest fisheries is the entire United States, while that area's fillet market generally is limited to the western half of the country. One Seattle firm that formerly obtained its bottom fillets from fishing vessels at Seattle now buy their supplies from British Columbia where a big fillet industry has been developed.

Fishing is also a vital part of the Alaskan economy and now is being seriously threatened by foreign-fish imports in the United States. Fishing generally supports the Alaskan economy; without it, Alaska would be severely injured. The otter-trawl industry normally employs about 1,500 men—employment in that industry now is down to 800 men. This employment drop represents about a 40-percent decrease in employment in that branch of the industry and is a fair example of the situation in the entire industry.

A peril-point provision in the pending legislation could be the means by which some protection would be afforded to the Pacific Northwest fisheries. The fishing industry is an old and important segment of our national economy and should not be permitted to be destroyed. I sincerely trust that the House will see fit to support the peril-point amendment which will be offered under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BEAMER].

Mr. BEAMER. Mr. Chairman, the interest of the laboring men prompts me to take the floor in their behalf. In this very important measure we must have two considerations: One, academic, and the other practical. From the theoretical point of view the chances are that all of us are agreed that a reciprocal trade agreement honestly and fairly administered might have equal results on all member parties. Unfortunately, however, and especially from reports received from my own district, it has not been fairly administered and the result is that it has endangered the opportunities of laboring men to feel secure in their present employment.

This brings us to the serious consideration of the very practical aspect of this measure. The working men and women should be considered as one of the very important factors because they are entitled to continue in their employment and this cannot be accomplished if cheap foreign imports will close the factories in which they are employed.

Speaking for just one industry in my district in Indiana, I would like to refer to the clay tile group. There is a very serious threat to the American tile industry. This industry is not large but there are 37 manufacturing plants in this country that employ approximately 9,000 people and represent an invested capital of around $35,000,000. These plants are located in 12 States and raw materials come from 22 States. In addition, tile is distributed through some 4,500 tile contractors to consumers in every State in the Union. In all, the industry provides employment for some 30,000 people and makes possible higher living standards for millions of Americans.

Now the deplorable condition that has developed in this one particular industry is illustrated by the fact that the imports of clay tile in this country are increasing by leaps and bounds. Two thousand four hundred and three percent more foreign tile was imported from low-wage countries in the first quarter of 1950 than in the first quarter of 1949. To place this in actual figures, from all countries the 12 months of 1949 showed an import of 424,000 square feet. In the first 10 months of 1950 this import had climbed rapidly to 1,135,000 square feet. Now these tiles are the kind that are used in making more practical and modern bathrooms, floors, and for similar purposes in the building industry. Thus you can see that this is a very considerable figure.

If this practice continues the very existence of the American tile industry is threatened. The fact of the matter is that the best grade of tile is made in these United States and the quality of the tile imported from abroad is far inferior to the product which is demanded by the American consuming public.

One of the largest consumers is the United States Government itself and, by this very process, our own Government faces a loss of the only reliable source of supply of genuine ceramic floor and wall tile of high quality due to these unwise tariff policies. In this particular industry, which is semiskilled, 70 percent of the cost of making tile is direct labor costs. Thus it is very evident that the high wages which the workingmen in this country enjoy would make it impossible for any manufacturer to compete with foreign imports.

The letters that have been coming to me are from the employees in the factories rather than from the management. These laboring folks are very much concerned and worried about their future. They have seen the manner in which these cheap foreign ceramic tile imports have reduced the sale of the products of their own factory and they can envision the time when they will be forced to abandon their years of experience and training and seek another livelihood.

Another glaring danger in the lack of protection to this specific industry is indicated by the effect which the devaluation of the British pound sterling produced upon the sale of tile. Following the devaluation of the British pound sterling in terms of the dollar in September 1949, imports consisting largely of British glazed wall tiles increased immediately and have continued to represent the major competition. Export prices of British glazed wall tiles in terms of dollars declined about 30 to 35 percent through the devaluation of the pound sterling.

These are only a few of the conditions that have caused the people in one of the large cities in my district to become alarmed and to write so many letters of protest. To substantiate these statements, Mr. Chairman, under unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, I include therein certain letters:

ANDERSON, IND., January 26, 1951.

Hon. JOHN V. BEAMER,
Congressman, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BEAMER: As I understand it, the House Ways and Means Committee is now holding hearings in reference to lowering the tariffs of foreign countries. This will, of course, vitally affect the tile industry, in which I am employed.

I am opposed to any reduction in tariffs on tile coming into the United States from foreign countries.

Having heard that the foreign-made tile is not the high quality tile made in the United States, it will not only affect the tile manufacturers here and employees but also the consumer.

I sincerely hope that you will do everything in your power to prevent this lower tariff on imports idea.

Sincerely,

MARJORIE ROBERTSON.

ANDERSON, IND., January 26, 1951.

Hon. JOHN V. BEAMER,
Congressman, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BEAMER: I would like to take this time to write you in regard to the problem of the possibility of lowering the tariff rates on imports to the United States from foreign countries, such as England, Spain, Italy, etc.

If the tariff is lowered, it will very definitely affect the smaller industries, such as the manufacture of tile, and since I am employed by a tile concern, it is of great interest to me.

I urge you to do everything in your power to see that this tariff is not lowered, but raised.

Sincerely,

FLORENCE POORE.

ANDERSON, IND., January 25, 1951.

Hon. JOHN BEAMER,
Congressman, Fifth District of Indiana, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BEAMER: Although there is much discussion in regard to foreign affairs and national defense, there is one thing that I would like to call your attention to that will affect us eventually, and that is the low tariff on imports of foreign tile. Tile is coming into this country and sold at a price much cheaper than the American manufacturer can make it. This foreign tile coming from England, Spain, Italy, and Belgium is not the high-quality tile that is made in this country.

On just a plain visual inspection the foreign tile may appear to look as good as American-made tile, but after the foreign tile is installed, it is apt to craze (check), and not hold up nearly as well as the American tile. If we permit this foreign tile to come in and take the place of a higher quality tile, it will have a tendency to reduce our output of tile from the American factories, and thus reduce work for the American people. Although this has not been much of a factor in the past 4 or 5 years, if we allow this tile to come in with a low tariff rate, it will have a damaging effect upon our own country. The low-priced foreign tile will force the tile manufacturer to reduce his prices in order to meet this competition even though his quality is much superior to the foreign product. By reducing his prices, it will reduce profits or wages, or will gradually have to go out of business.

The tile business is a necessity to the American people and to all manufacturers. The engineers in the tile industry do develop some basic ideas in regard to the manufacture of tile and the silicate industries. These ideas are exchanged with men in the refractory, the dinnerware, and the brick industries. A number of times the refractory men obtained information from the other silicate industries in order to make better refractories so that it is possible to process iron, steel, copper, etc., through the melting furnaces at a cheaper rate. In other words, they can make refractories that will last longer.

Therefore, I would urge you to do everything in your power to see that the tariff on tile is increased, namely: (1) To protect one of the small American industries; (2) to insure a higher wage for the people working in this industry; (3) to insure that the American people will get a better product by not allowing the foreign inferior product to replace the American product; and (4) to insure the build-up of more technical information for general use in all industries in order that we may have a higher standard of living.

Sincerely yours,

EARL E. BALDAUF.

NATIONAL TILE & MANUFACTURING CO.,
Anderson, Ind., January 26, 1951.

Hon. JOHN V. BEAMER,
Congressman, Fifth District, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Mr. Louis S. Jones has called my attention to a letter from you under date of January 18 in reply to one from him in which you ask that he supply you additional information in reference to imports of clay tile from low-wage countries under present tariff rates and its effect upon the tile industry in this country.

Mr. Jones has asked me to send you some material on the subject which I am very glad to enclose herewith.

These so-called reciprocal trade agreements seem to be formulated upon the basis that they are helpful to foreign countries without consideration of the harm they bring about here in the United States. As an example, such a reciprocal arrangement was made with Mexico a few years ago—this was repealed in December 1950—that established a duty of 10 cents per square foot on tile coming from that country to the United States. Mexico reciprocated by establishing a duty of 40 cents per square foot plus an additional 40 percent of the value of all American tile shipped to Mexico which arrangement effectively cut off shipment of any tile to that country from here and permitted tile made by the very cheap Mexican labor to be sold here at prices much lower than domestic production cost.

Imports of clay tile into this country at this time are increasing by leaps and bounds. Two thousand four hundred and three percent more foreign tile was imported from low-wage countries in the first quarter of 1950 than in the first quarter of 1949. Continuation of this practice threatens the very existence of the American tile industry which, as a matter of fact, is the only reliable source of supply for this material in the entire world. Other countries supply the United States only with special items in large demand leaving the more difficult and unprofitable items to be supplied by domestic manufacturers.

The American consumer, largest of whom is the United States Government itself, faces the loss of the only reliable source of supply of genuine ceramic floor and wall tile, due to these unwise tariff policies. Since as much as 70 percent of the cost of making tile is direct labor cost, every increase of foreign imports means a direct threat to the tile industry in this country and to the jobs of 7,000 Americans employed in tile manufacturing plants.

I enclose herewith a very comprehensive study of this situation prepared by the Tile Council of America. I believe you will receive another similar booklet being mailed about this time by the Anderson Chamber of Commerce to its members.

I assure you we will appreciate any effort you make to bring about higher, rather than lower, tariffs on clay tile.

I hope you and Mrs. Beamer are becoming acclimated to your new surroundings in Washington, and with best wishes to you both, I remain,

Sincerely,

R. H. ALEXANDER,
President.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 11 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, the New Deal tariff policy, known under the nice-sounding name "reciprocal trade agreements" has been in effect during the past 16 years. If it were not for the Korean war and the Nation's rearmament program now getting under way, we would have a greater unemployment problem on our hands today than the Nation had back in the boondoggling and leaf-raking days of the 1930's. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act expires in June. It is now before the House for consideration and action. Should it be extended for another 3-year period?

Mr. Chairman, the tremendous imports that are flooding our markets today have already dealt damaging body blows to the following American industries: Fishing, glassware, pottery, jeweled-watch, fur, glove, and textile. Large imports of these manufactured goods are flooding our markets and destroying the jobs of American factory workers.

The fallacy of importing millions of dollars' worth of goods when we have surpluses of our own seems not to have penetrated the minds of our "do-gooders" who have control of our imports. We import millions of bushels of potatoes while destroying and dumping millions of bushels of our own. We import millions of dozens of fresh eggs—and millions of pounds of dried eggs—yet our own surplus of eggs is so large that it has become a public scandal. We import millions of pounds of beef and pork, millions of bushels of wheat, corn, barley, and oats, and at the same time force the American taxpayer to dig deep in his pockets to pay the cost of supporting the prices of these same products that our own farmers raise. At the present time our Federal Government owns or controls through price-support operations over half the total feed grain stocks in the entire United States.

How can we maintain high wages for American workmen and high living standards for American people when we permit goods manufactured by foreign workmen working for low wages, and farm products raised by farmers who for centuries have been living like serfs, to flood our markets and destroy the jobs upon which our workers depend?

Mr. Chairman, the results of the reciprocal trade agreements and other tariff concessions should be reexamined. The administration has been risking, almost inviting, the bankruptcy of important American businesses in order to build up the foreign trade of other countries. We have been courting unemployment for millions of American working people. We have been playing right into the hands of other nations—at the expense of our own.

At one time or another during the past half century some 50 American corporations have made jeweled watches. Today only two of them are operating, the Elgin and the Hamilton, the other 48 jeweled-watch companies have been run out of business by the Swiss watch importations.

Recently union officials joined with glass manufacturers of New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio in presenting to Members of Congress the troubles of the glass industry of America. Employment in plants making better-grade glassware is now only 30 to 50 percent of normal, and thousands of men are out of work. The reason? The recent flood of foreign glassware into American markets at prices much lower than the labor cost of producing similar ware in this country. Reciprocal trade agreements reducing tariffs on glassware, and special arrangements made by Mr. Hoffman under the European recovery program, are blamed for the situation. Incidentally much of the glassware now reaching American markets from abroad is made behind the iron curtain. Leaders of American labor and industry are becoming increasingly aware of the grave dangers of the administration's free-trade program—and it is about time.

Mr. Chairman, when first created by the Congress the United States Tariff Commission was a bipartisan, expert, nonpolitical, fact-finding body set up as an agent of the Congress, and responsible to the Congress. In 1934, when the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was passed, the Tariff Commission was subordinated to and buried in the executive department, and from then on ceased to be an agent of the Congress. The Eightieth Congress, in extending the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, placed a provision in the law—the peril-point provision—that in effect reestablished the United States Tariff Commission as an agent of the Congress, but provided that the Commission make a report to the President for his guidance in making future trade agreements. If for any reason he disregarded the findings of the Tariff Commission as to peril points, then the President would be required to make available to the Congress the Tariff Commission's report, along with his reasons for disregarding the recommendations of the Commission as to peril points.

This action of the Eightieth Congress was repealed by the Eighty-first Congress, so once again the United States Tariff Commission became the agent of the executive department, subject to the political decisions of the President, and dictated to by the State Department—a State Department more interested in the welfare of other governments and other peoples than it is in our own Government and our own people.

Mr. Chairman, the United States adopted its reciprocal-trade program in 1934. The program has been in operation 16 years. Its objective is to reduce or remove world trade barriers and permit the free flow of goods between countries, thereby removing one of the principal causes of war. That is an excellent objective, a very worthy purpose. How has it worked out? Testimony given before the Ways and Means Committee at recent hearings brought out the following very disappointing facts:

First. After 16 years, world trade barriers are greater today than ever before.

Second. We have experienced World War II, and the world today is in greater fear of war than when the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was adopted.

Third. American industries are being injured, American workers have lost their jobs, even though the full impact of the program upon our American industries has not as yet fully materialized.

Mr. Chairman, Dr. Clair Wilcox, a former Director of the Office of International Trade Policy of the State Department, and one of the best posted men in America on our foreign trade program, made the following statement before the United States Chamber of Commerce Institute on June 15, 1948:

> The trade of the world today is more tightly regimented than it ever has been before in history, in time of peace. The tariff is the old-fashioned method of restricting trade. It is the mildest method of restricting trade that exists at the present time. As a matter of fact, a nation that confines trade restriction to the use of a tariff today can be said to be pursuing a liberal trade policy.

The June 1948 monthly letter of the National City Bank of New York contained the following statement:

> Foreign producers criticize our protective duties on certain articles. Nevertheless, the United States market generally is freer of access today than practically any other market in the world.

Mr. Chairman, embargoes, quotas, preferences, import license restrictions, currency manipulations, subsidies, state trading, and other restrictive trade devices have been adopted by foreign nations to control the movement of trade. They are much more restrictive than simple tariff barriers. Our feeble tariff barriers are as nothing when compared with the trade barriers set up by governments that have entered into reciprocal trade agreements with us.

Mr. Chairman, we built up a watch industry in the United States that did give employment to scores of thousands of workers. These workers were paid a reasonably high wage that enabled them to live decently upon a standard of living that is the highest in the world. Switzerland, under our reciprocal trade agreements program, has been dumping millions of watches on our American market at far less than it costs to manufacture them here. This has forced our factories either to go out of business or to go on part-time production. What is the difference between importing cheap labor to compete with our American labor—which our immigration laws forbid—and importing the products of cheap labor to compete with the product of our factories—which our reciprocal trade program permits—thereby robbing our factory workers of their jobs?

Mr. Chairman, since 1941, when we entered the war, a total of 75,000,000 Swiss watches have been imported. During the last 6 years, 1945–51, an average of more than 9,000,000 Swiss watches were imported each year. This importation of Swiss watches under our reciprocal trade agreement with Switzerland has seriously damaged our American watch industry.

Mr. Chairman, after 16 years of experimentation with reciprocal trade agreements, it is time for us to stop, look, and listen; it is time for us to analyze, to weigh, and to measure the results of the reciprocal-trade program before we extend it for three more years, without the safeguards that were placed in it by the 1948 act. A careful analysis of the results of our 16 years' experience convinces me of the following:

First. The program has not contributed to international good will.

Second. The program has not removed nor reduced world trade barriers with the exception of our own.

Third. The program has not prevented war nor removed the threat of war.

Fourth. The program has already damaged some American industries and thrown thousands of American workmen out of work, even though the impact of the program upon our economy has not as yet fully materialized.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of H. R. 1612 without proper and necessary safeguards being incorporated in the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the trade agreements program is a program sponsored by the United States since 1934 to expand international trade by reducing international trade barriers.

The program is premised upon the American conception of a dynamic and constantly growing economy. It attempts to establish trading conditions for the world in which free private competition can stimulate the production of more and more goods at constantly lower prices as has happened so successfully in the United States.

Initially the program consisted of a series of negotiations between the United States and one other country in which reciprocal trade agreements were concluded providing for either the freezing or reduction of tariff rates on a number of individual commodities on the part of one country for equivalent concessions on the part of the other. Up to the outbreak of World War II, some 20 countries had concluded such trade agreements with the United States. More were added in the Western Hemisphere during the war.

In the realization that there would be need for drastic action to expand trade after the war, the program was adopted to permit quicker and more extensive action. Instead of negotiating with one country at a time, we negotiated with 22 simultaneously, the result being the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, concluded at Geneva in 1947 and covering at one stroke barriers to over half the world's trade. Tariffs were reduced on some goods; preferences were reduced on others; undertakings were made on still others not to raise tariffs; and wherever preferences existed it was agreed that they would not be increased. All agreed also to create no new preferences and it was generally agreed that quotas would be outlawed as soon as conditions permit.

As a result of further negotiations carried on at Annecy, France, in 1949 and of the current negotiations at Torquay, England, 39 countries have or soon will become contracting parties to the general agreement. A number of countries having prewar bilateral agreements with the United States have joined the general agreement and in such cases the old agreements have been either superceded or terminated. There are still, however, 14 bilateral agreements in effect in addition to the general agreement.

These agreements represent a very substantial achievement in reducing world-trade barriers both between the United States and other countries and between these other countries themselves. Despite the fact that World War II, its aftermath, and now rearmament have seriously distorted world trade, the program has been successful in holding trade barriers to a much lower level than would otherwise have been possible.

The program is considered a significant symbol of American economic leadership throughout the free world. It is recognized as a concrete example of intelligent American self-interest and the cornerstone of our foreign economic policy.

The relationship between the trade-agreements program and the United Nations:

Although the trade-agreements program is older than the United Nations, it is entirely consistent with the aims and policies of the UN.

The United Nations and its specialized agencies represent an effort to create the international institutions necessary for a free and prosperous world.

The United Nations already has specialized agencies in the fields of foreign exchange, banking, health, food and agriculture, labor, and aviation. It does not, however, have a specialized agency in the vital field of trade, and thus there exists a large gap in its structure. To some extent this gap is filled by the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

We are committed to unfaltering support of the United Nations. We have participated in the building and establishment of the International Monetary Fund to deal with the problems of international exchange. The purpose of the fund is to promote by international action reasonable stability and convertibility of currencies. Clearly, trade must be brought into balance if currencies are ever to be and remain stable. Regulation of exchange controls is futile if nations are free to use quantitative restrictions instead. To solve the problems of international trade, international cooperation with respect to exchange controls and currency valuation must go hand in hand with international cooperation with respect to other forms of trade barriers and the expansion of demand in international trade.

We have participated in the creation and operation of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, another organ of the UN. We also are interested in encouraging United States private investment abroad. Clearly, loans cannot be repaid or earnings on investments received if international trade is not fostered and freed.

The trade-agreements program by reducing the barriers to world trade is helping the specialized agencies and the UN itself in the work of building a more prosperous world. The periodic meetings of the parties to the GATT provide a forum for the discussion and solution of trade problems. It is to be hoped that this work and that of the UN can be brought into closer relationship as experience develops.

The relationship of trade-agreements program to our commercial treaty program.

Both the trade-agreements program and our commercial treaty programs are efforts to expand international trade. This requires (a) that more goods be produced; (b) that there be more demand for goods; and (c) that it be easier to exchange goods.

Our commercial treaty program helps stimulate production by encouraging investment through agreement with other countries on the treatment they would give our investors and businessmen and vice versa.

The trade-agreements program helps make it easier to exchange goods by lowering the trade barriers and improving world trading conditions.

The relationship of the trade-agreements program to the European recovery program.

The trade-agreements program is a complement to the European recovery program, a short-term measure to assist Western European countries to produce in greater amounts and to give them time to become going concerns in the world economy. This assistance toward recovery, important as it is will be ineffectual unless world trade continues to expand to the point where all the recipient countries are able to sell their own goods and services to each other and to the outside world in sufficient amounts to pay for the imports they need and desire.

Consequently, in American self-interest, the long-run trading policies of the United States and the rest of the world must provide the best possible conditions for a full revival of international trade. The maze of restrictions, bilateralism, and discriminations must be eliminated so that trade may flow more freely. To help accomplish this result is the purpose and function of the trade agreements program. The full implementation of the trade agreements program will help Western Europe to stay on its feet after American financial aid ends, and make it more likely that the original American investment in Europe will pay future dividends in terms of expanding economies and allies able to improve their living standards and to pay for their own self defense.

The relationship of the trade-agreements program to the point 4 program.

Both the trade-agreements program and the point 4 program will contribute to the development of underdeveloped countries.

Point 4 is a program by which the United States will make available to other countries know-how and skills that will help them to develop their resources on a sound basis. It is also designed to help promote the flow of capital to productive work in underdeveloped countries.

The trade-agreements program helps in this process in two ways: (a) by helping to create world trading conditions in which it will be easier for the underdeveloped countries to get things they need and sell things they produce; and (b), by recognizing in the general agreement on tariffs and trade that the special circumstances of underdeveloped countries may require some deviations from the general rules which the contracting parties have agreed to follow in order to foster new industries.

The purpose of the point 4 program is to stimulate production in countries where an increase in production is most needed. It is a direct approach to the problem of low productivity in these countries. However, an increased capacity to produce is not enough. Larger markets are required to absorb the increase. The trade-agreements program by reducing barriers to trade can help to widen the markets, thus buttressing the point 4 program at a very vital point.

The relationship of the trade-agreements program to European economic integration: European integration is completely consistent with the trade-agreements program and the program can help the European countries in working toward integration.

The purpose of European integration is to create a large area in Europe in which there are a minimum of trade barriers and in which the competitive forces of the market place can operate as freely as possible.

The purpose of the trade-agreements program is to help get down trade barriers and release competitive forces over as wide a part of the world as possible.

The end objectives are thus completely consistent.

The general agreement on tariffs and trade clearly recognizes in its provisions about customs unions and free trade areas that it may be possible for certain groups of countries to go further than others in eliminating barriers between themselves, and that this process is desirable if it is a genuine step in the creation of wider markets and not just a way of giving preferential treatment in special cases, or of raising higher barriers against other countries.

Thus, any genuine steps toward real economic integration of Europe are consistent with the specific terms of the general agreement.

Moreover, by creating a wider acceptance of liberal trading rules all over the world, the trade-agreements program is helping to establish the kind of world trading conditions in which the process of genuine economic integration in Europe could go forward faster and have a better chance of sticking.

Specifically, Europe's problem is not just one of developing a larger and freer market inside Europe itself. Integration alone cannot solve the problem of European recovery. Densely populated and dependent upon overseas areas for raw materials and food, Europe can at best achieve no more through integration than an increased productive capacity and an increased ability to export. There still remains the problem of finding overseas markets for the expanded output. The trade-agreements program can help obtain for Europe better access to these markets.

The relationship between the trade agreements program and the customs simplification bill:

Both the trade-agreements program and the customs simplification bill are designed to expand international trade by reducing trade barriers.

The customs simplification bill is primarily concerned with indirect barriers to trade known as customs red tape which some times are more burdensome to trade than tariff duties themselves. The bill proposes a number of changes in our custom administrative and internal revenue laws but would make no changes in tariff rates as such.

The trade-agreements program, on the other hand, is designed to expand trade by reducing tariffs as well as other trade barriers. Under the program, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade has been negotiated and put into provisional effect by 31 of the leading trading countries of the world. Passage of the customs simplification bill would enable the United States to make fully effective certain principles set forth in the agreement and thus make it possible for us to press for reforms in customs procedures in foreign countries.

The relationship of the trade-agreements program to the North Atlantic Treaty program and to our national security:

The task of creating defense against aggression is not exclusively a military task. The ability of the United States and other free nations to resist aggression is fundamentally dependent upon the maintenance of our joint economic strength and upon our taking measures to promote the growth of this strength.

In essence, the North Atlantic Treaty states that an armed attack against one or more of the parties to this treaty shall be considered an attack against them all. This undertaking presently necessitates accelerated defense programs in the United States and the other member countries. Production for defense, when conducted on a large scale, means greatly increased economic activity. There is greater employment, and more money comes into circulation, creating a larger total demand for goods and strong inflationary pressures. To the extent that the trade-agreements program has been successful in achieving tariff reductions, thereby increasing United States imports, it will add to the supply of goods and help to restrain the inflationary pressures we shall encounter.

The North Atlantic Treaty also requires the parties to eliminate conflict in their international economic policies and to encourage economic collaboration among themselves. Valuable as has been the contribution of the general agreement toward the reduction of world tariff barriers, many will argue that the general agreement made an even more important contribution by providing a forum where the world's major trading nations can come together and discuss their trade problems. Among its members, the general agreement can count all but two of the signatories to the North Atlantic Treaty—Iceland and Portugal.

The North Atlantic Treaty is a part of our program of collective security. Our own national security depends not only upon our participation in such collective measures but also upon our building up our individual strength. Although we possess the greatest industrial plant in the world, we would actually be able to produce very few of the present-day marvels of machinery if we were unable to import certain essential raw materials. In fact, without imports many products which are part and parcel of the American standard of living, such as radios and automobiles, at their present state of perfection, would be unobtainable. The steel used in making jet engines must have added to it small amounts of certain metals which do not exist in the United States in adequate quantities. Today, when our need for such materials is great, we can count on a full measure of cooperation from countries which have recognized our good faith through our leadership in the world trade field.

Mr. Chairman, over the past months many questions have been propounded concerning the theory and operation of the trade-agreements program in addition to those which I have already discussed.

During the remainder of my time I desire to state some of these questions and to suggest what appear to me to be logical answers.

What can be done under the trade-agreements program about all these bilateral agreements we see countries everywhere signing? Are not they quite inconsistent with the GATT?

The trade-agreements program is designed to help remove the conditions which cause most of these bilateral agreements, and in the general agreement there are provisions designed to prevent those that are purely protective or discriminatory.

Bilateral agreements are a symptom of the kind of world trading and economic conditions which the trade-agreement program is intended to help improve. The usual reason why countries enter into bilateral agreements is because their currencies are not convertible, because they do not have enough goods to sell to earn all the foreign currencies they may need, and because other countries' currencies are not convertible. So they make these agreements to be sure that if they send their goods to another country they will get back goods in return and not just currency that they cannot use.

The trade-agreements program contributes to this problem of restoring currency convertibility by helping to make it easier for countries to exchange their goods with each other. As unnecessary restrictions on international trade are cleared away, allowing it to expand on a multilateral basis, the balance-of-payments position of countries all over the world will tend to improve and there will be far less incentive to use bilateral agreements.

There are some cases in which bilateral agreements have highly protective elements in them and make it possible to dispose of goods which are too costly to compete freely on world markets. Agreements of this character are contrary to the provisions of the GATT.

Why are not the present import promotion efforts adequate to enable other countries to earn dollars without any further tariff tampering?

Export promotion plans in other countries and import promotion programs within the United States can help foreign exporters to learn about the

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

American market; they can teach exporters what sorts of products sell well here, and how to package them; and they can make the American public better acquainted with other countries' goods. They can also provide incentives to sell in the United States such as the Netherlands plan. They cannot, however, overcome the basic price problem which arises from the fact that the tariff rate must be added to the cost of foreign goods sold within this market. Reductions in the United States tariff can help foreign exporters to compete in this country just as reductions in foreign tariff barriers can help the American exporter to compete abroad.

Where is the peace this program was going to bring?

It has never been contended that the trade agreements program would insure peace. It would be unreasonable to expect the program to meet all the problems raised by aggressive communism. However, the facts are that an expanding world economy is an indispensable factor in the maintenance of the political stability of the countries of the free world, that a high and expanding level of international trade is of vital importance in increasing world production and world living standards and that the trade agreements program is a real assurance that the United States will exert, commensurate with its importance, leadership and influence in expanding international trade.

The trade agreements program, by removing barriers to international trade, has strengthened the economy of the free world and has been a factor in the increased economic efficiency of Western Europe. The rising living standards and growing military potential of the countries of Western Europe can in some part be attributed to the effect and influence of American leadership in liberating and expanding world trade.

In the long run, it will be the economic and social conditions which will determine how the millions in Asia and throughout the world will choose sides in the struggle between freedom and totalitarianism. If we are to create the situations of economic and political strength, which will successfully check Russian expansion and ultimately assure peace, we must not only arm ourselves and our allies but also continue programs such as the trade agreements program which effectively demonstrates America's belief in an expanding and more prosperous world.

Most foreign countries with which we have signed trade agreements require that they be approved by their parliaments. Why should our Congress not pass on these trade agreements?

Under the parliamentary form of government the executive and legislative branches have a different relationship from that of the two branches in the United States. The executive in such a government has practical certainty of legislative approval for what it does—otherwise "the government would fall." The evidence of this is that in no case has the parliamentary or legislative body of the other country failed to ratify a trade agreement after its negotiation by the executive. In this country the legislative branch can and frequently does fail to ratify treaties and other acts of the Executive.

More importantly, none of the legislative bodies of the countries with which we have made agreements had granted to their executives in advance, the specific authority to negotiate trade agreements, hedged and qualified by standards and guides and limitations. This specific prior authority has been granted to the President by the United States Congress in the Trade Agreements Act.

Why can criteria not be adopted by the trade agreement organization or written into the Trade Agreements Act by Congress for determining the extent by which tariff rates should be cut?

The trade agreement organization does have criteria for determining the extent by which tariff rates shall be cut. These criteria are the degree of competitiveness of the domestic and imported article—what particular types and grades of the commodity meet in competition; in what areas does the competition exist—is it centralized in one locality or well dispersed; what is the extent of the competitive impact; cost of production, cost trends, prices and wages; seasonal factors (to what extent the products compete in different seasons and to what extent these seasons overlap); questions of raw materials and sources of supply; extent to which the United States market is of vital importance to a particular foreign country or countries; domestic consumption and the extent it has increased or decreased; and foreign control of prices and markets. All of these factors are carefully weighed.

The weight to be given any of these factors varies immensely from product to product. It would obviously be almost impossible to write all these criteria into the act. If such an attempt were made, the result would be much too rigid and inflexible for practical administration.

Under the Constitution treaties do not become effective until ratified by the Senate. Why should these trade treaties not be submitted to the Senate for ratification as required by the Constitution?

The question has been carefully and thoroughly studied by the Congress time and again. The conclusion each time has been that there is neither legal nor practical warrant for requiring Senate ratification, as treaties, of the individual agreements. These agreements are concluded under a prior grant of authority from Congress, with clear and adequate standards and principles for the guidance of the Executive.

On the practical side of the question history has demonstrated that reciprocal-trade agreements affecting tariffs are almost never ratified by the Senate because of the pressures brought to bear on the Members of that body by interests seeking tariff protection. Numerous Senators have themselves declared that they do not wish to return to the log-rolling involved in general tariff rate making by a legislative body. It is, moreover, much more difficult to negotiate with foreign countries for concessions on American products if there is no certainty that concessions which we offer can actually be made. Under such circumstances foreign countries would be far less willing to grant us concessions for which we are asking.

Why object to an amendment providing for judicial review of failure to withdraw or modify concessions under the escape clause upon the complaint of domestic producers?

There is nothing for the court to review. The Supreme Court has stated categorically that "no one has a legal right to the maintenance of an existing rate or duty"—Norwegian Nitrogen Co. v. United States (288 U. S. 294) and Bush & Co. v. United States (310 U. S. 371)).

The individual citizen is entitled to his day in court through procedures whereby he has an adequate opportunity to present his case for or against tariff protection. He is assured of this. Thus, during congressional revision of the tariff, domestic producers, importers, and others present their views to the appropriate congressional committees. But such an individual may not institute litigation in the courts in case Congress fails to adopt his views and either raise or lower duties as the case may be. This is also so in cases where tariff changes have been entrusted to an administrative agency. For example, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to impose additional duties under section 303 of the Tariff Act upon a finding that goods are being imported under a subsidy, and under the Antidumping Act of 1921, upon a finding of dumping. Under section 336 of the Tariff Act—the so-called flexible tariff—the President is authorized, after investigation and report by the Tariff Commission, to increase or decrease duties in order to equalize the differences in the costs of production of the domestic and imported goods. The purpose of each of these provisions is to provide protection for domestic producers who might be injured by imports, but in no case is provision made for judicial review of failure to increase duties on complaint of a domestic industry that it is being injured by imports under conditions of dumping, subsidization, or lower cost of production.

Here, as in section 336 cases, the individual gets his day in court by the right given him under the Trade Agreements Act to present his case for or against tariff reductions in trade agreements to the interdepartmental trade agreements organization through the Committee for Reciprocity Information. In addition, the President has established in Executive Order No. 10082 a procedure under which the Tariff Commission makes investigations whether articles are being imported under trade agreement concessions in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers of like or similar articles, and if it so finds, to recommend to the President for his consideration in the light of the public interest the withdrawal or modification of the concession.

The determination of what constitutes injury to a domestic producer as well as whether it is in the national interest to afford relief by withdrawing or modifying a trade agreement concession are matters peculiarly suitable for determination by an administrative agency having regard to all the relevant circumstances in the particular case, rather than a matter for judicial determination or review. Increased imports, the trend of imports as compared with domestic production, price and cost trends, conditions of supply and demand, changes in production, employment, wages, and profits are some of the factors to be taken into consideration in particular cases, but no one criterion or set of criteria can be laid down to determine injury to a domestic producer in all circumstances.

The procedure under Executive Order No. 10082 for investigation by the Tariff Commission of alleged injury by domestic producers, and giving the responsibility to the President for taking action upon its recommendations "in the light of the public interest," is, in the light of experience in tariff matters, a wholly satisfactory procedure that will on the one hand provide adequate protection for well-founded complaints and will, on the other hand, permit trade agreements negotiations to be continued.

Why is the publication of peril points undesirable?

First. Publication of peril points is undesirable in the first place because it would immediately indicate to the other countries with which we had negotiated how much further we had been willing to go. It would give away any future bargaining position on the products in question and cause some friction and hostility with the countries which we had out-bargained.

Second. It has often been so that the United States had no intention of lowering a rate to an extent anywhere approaching a conceivable peril point. Publication of peril points would thus give a wrong impression to foreign countries of what our actual negotiating position had really been.

Third. Publication of peril points would give the impression, erroneous to be sure, that there is an exact and scientific way of establishing them in the first place.

Fourth. Publication of peril points would create a rigid limit on all future action under the program even when conditions had so changed as to make the original limits more meaningless than they were at first.

Why is a 3-year renewal of the Trade Agreements Act needed? Why not limit renewal to 1 year?

All past renewals of the Trade Agreements Act have, until the 1-year extension in 1948 by the Eightieth Congress, been for periods of 3 years except for the 2-year renewal agreed to in 1943 when we were actively engaged in World War II. The 3-year period has proved satisfactory and there is no need to change unless it is intended to kill the program.

Renewal for only 1 year could lead foreign countries to feel that we are vacillating on a basic foreign policy issue. It would be an indication that there is little continuity assured for the trade-agreements program. It would expose the entire program to short-term political considerations and would not create the essential basis of confidence which is a prerequisite to continued participation by other countries in the general agreement and in our whole program to expand world trade.

It is a waste of time and energy to have renewals every year. The basic purpose, the well-established procedures and the underlying philosophy of the program have been exhaustively reviewed in six renewals. Public understanding and public support has been widespread and consistent. No new departures from the way the program has been administered in the past are envisioned. There are many other vital matters which require the attention and consideration of both the executive branch and the Congress. A 1-year renewal would be difficult to justify to the American public and to the free world.

Why should not Congress restore to American producers the right to litigate matters arising out of the trade agreements which is denied them under the present act?

It is assumed that reference is being made to section 516 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, under which a domestic producer has the privilege of intervening in transactions between an importer and the Government to which he is not a party, and to the fact that the provisions of this section do not apply to products on which tariffs have been reduced in trade agreements.

The Supreme Court has held that no one has a legal right to the maintenance of any particular rate of duty.

Experience has proved that this section, which invests certain private interests with extraordinary privileges, has resulted in delays in entry of thousands of items and has proved to be a serious obstruction to American businessmen attempting to do a legitimate import business.

Why is not the Tariff Commission as a Commission represented on the Trade Agreements Committee?

First. The staff of the Commission does function fully before the Trade Agreements Committee and on its subcommittees.

Second. Whether the representative of the Tariff Commission should participate in decisions of the Trade Agreements Committee only after he has received the approval of his position from the majority of the Tariff Commissioners, is of course for the Commission to decide.

Third. The procedure which has been developed over 17 years has worked well. The representative of the Tariff Commission obviously knows the views of his colleagues although he does not get a formal vote. Furthermore, the representative of the Tariff Commission has not been a single individual or from a single party. In the 1947 Geneva negotiations four commissioners were involved over the 7 months' period of the negotiations—two from each party. In both the Annecy and Torquay negotiations only a Republican commissioner has been present.

Why should an entire industry rather than a single producer have to demonstrate injury before a tariff concession can be withdrawn?

Any industry consisting of a number of producers will undoubtedly experience different degrees of efficiency in the production of the commodity concerned by the different producers in that industry. Some producers will be highly efficient, producing at relatively low cost and being able to put their product on the market at a price not only lower than that of their domestic competitors but also lower than that at which any foreign supplier could profitably sell. Other producers may be grossly inefficient, manufacturing at high costs and unable, without special protection, to meet either domestic or foreign competition. Other producers, perhaps constituting the bulk of the enterprises in the industry, will fall somewhere in between these extremes.

While present policy is to avoid tariff cuts which would cause or threaten serious injury to the industry as a whole, it hardly seems reasonable to avoid reducing tariffs where a few individual high-cost producers may be hurt but where the bulk of the industry remains healthy and strong and able to take on all comers without any special assistance. In these circumstances to protect even the inefficient high-cost producers by maintaining high tariffs is grossly to penalize the domestic consumer without sufficiently significant gains in domestic production and employment. The domestic consumer will be forced to pay exorbitant prices merely to protect a selected few.

It should not be assumed from the foregoing argument that tariff cuts will necessarily injure even a particular producer. It may merely force that producer to become more efficient and eliminate wasteful practices in which he had previously indulged at the expense of the American consumer.

The United States has the highest standard of living in the world, due to our system of protective tariffs. Do you favor reducing our tariffs and forcing our labor to compete with the cheap labor of foreign countries such as India, China, et cetera?

The height of the United States standard of living is not due to a high protective tariff system. Tariff reductions such as those which have been made under the trade-agreements program have not forced United States labor to compete with the low-standard labor of foreign countries such as India, China, and the rest.

The United States standard of living is based upon many things much more important than protective tariffs. These include vast natural resources, ingenuity, know-how, and enterprise on the part of American industry, agriculture, and traders, adequate capital and a generally vigorous domestic economy. Our foreign trade has been an important contributing factor to this situation. Our exports have made jobs and buying power in this country; our imports have supplied necessary materials for maintaining our industries and innumerable commodities which go into our standards of living.

Only a small proportion of the people of the United States who are engaged in gainful occupations could be affected by competition from foreign goods even if their tariff protection were withdrawn. They are far outnumbered by American producers who depend upon and benefit from our foreign trade, including imports. This applies especially to industries which are on an export basis, which are and have been successfully meeting competition from everywhere in the world and selling American goods in countries with far lower wage rates and living standards than those of the United States. Wages in these industries range generally much higher than wages in highly protected industries and the number of people who have jobs in them is far greater.

If we help backward nations to build their own industrial plants, do we (a) lose them as markets for our manufactured goods, (b) strengthen them as competitors in the world market, at our cost, and (c) tend to destroy the technological advantages we now have over other nations?

In helping underdeveloped countries to build their own industrial plants the American economy benefits and does not suffer if the industries established abroad are efficient and well suited to the countries in which they are set up. On the other hand, if economic conditions in the country in question are not adapted to the new industry neither this country nor the other benefits from its establishment.

To be economically efficient an industry in any country must have adequate access to raw materials, capable manpower and management, enough capital, and access to a sufficiently wide market with buying power. If it does not have these things it will either fail or be afforded "protection" through high tariffs or other means by its government. In that case the market is narrowed for efficient industries in the same line in other countries; the cost of the product is higher for the consumers in the country where the industry is located; and the volume of production and consumption are reduced. Everybody loses.

However, if a new industry does have the necessary advantages, it creates employment and buying power in the country where it is established and increases the demand for other imported products. That may mean a shift in the character of imports, but it also means an increase in the total market for imports. Even if a newly established industry does compete with us in the world market for certain products it enlarges the market for other of our exports. These advantages offset the possible disadvantages of sharing our capital and technological knowledge with other countries.

United States trade with the highly industrialized countries is and always has been far larger and more profitable than our trade with underdeveloped countries. It will continue to be so if the foreign industrialization is on a sound economic basis.

Have the trade agreements been used to help big business at the expense of small business?

No; trade agreements do not favor big business at the expense of small business.

It is not the size of a business, but its efficiency and adaptation to economic realities, that determine whether it can stay in business as far as competition with imports is concerned. The little fellow's market is almost invariably the domestic market. Exports by other industries, large or small, put men in jobs and give them buying power which makes them better customers in the domestic market for the products of either big or little concerns.

Trade agreements directly improve and enlarge foreign markets for all United States export products—whether made by large or small American businesses. This is true of many individual items such as filing cases, shoe polish, incubators, and so on. It is even more strikingly true in the case of agriculture—in which, probably, are engaged more American individuals and small operators than in any other industry. Whether a particular bushel of wheat, pound of tobacco, bale of cotton, or box of apples actually is sold abroad makes no difference in the fact that export sales of these commodities help to maintain the prices and markets for every grower of every unit produced. A major result of the trade agreements program has been the reduction of foreign barriers against American agricultural products.

Assuming that lower tariffs open foreign markets for American manufactured products, is this result achieved at the expense of American agriculture?

No. Proportionately, American farm exports have benefited more from reduction of foreign tariffs than have manufactured products. Foreign countries have provided concessions affecting over 65 percent of our agricultural exports, compared with only 40 percent of our nonagricultural exports. Among the agricultural products where substantial tariff and trade concessions have been made are leaf tobacco, wheat and wheat flour, canned and dried fruits, apples, pears, grapes, lard and pork, dairy products, and canned asparagus. Many countries have agreed to keep cotton on the free list. Furthermore, several major agricultural enterprises, such as the growing of cotton, tobacco, and wheat, usually export larger percentages of their production than do manufacturing enterprises.

Outstanding benefits for agriculture, obtained through trade agreements, have included reductions or eliminations of numerous tariff preferences on farm products. These preferences are extended by some British countries to the products of other British countries but denied to United States farm products. Removal or reduction of these preferences puts American farm products in better competitive position with British products in the markets of the United Kingdom, Australia, Canada, and some of the British colonies. Some of them apply to such important United States farm products as wheat, pork and lard, and fruits, among others. For example, before January 1, 1948, apples from the United States imported into the United Kingdom from August 16 to April 15 each year, paid a duty of 3 shillings per hundredweight, while Canadian apples entered free. In the Geneva negotiations free entry into the United Kingdom for United States apples was obtained. In the 1939 agreement with the United Kingdom, the United Kingdom tariff preference on Empire wheat—6 cents a bushel—was eliminated.

In the Geneva agreement French and other tariffs on American wheat were sharply reduced. There were substantial reductions in foreign tariffs on American canned milk, dried eggs, tobacco, and cigarettes; all kinds of fresh, canned, and dried fruits; and many kinds of fresh, canned, and dried vegetables.

As important as foreign tariff cuts on American agricultural exports is the indirect gain to American farmers whose best customers in the domestic market have jobs in industries making manufactured goods which demand export markets. Foreign concessions on American manufactured products mean more job holders in American industry—more paying customers in the domestic market for American farm products—especially fresh fruits, vegetables, meats, and dairy products.

Tariff reductions from 1934 through January 1, 1950, averaged 50 percent for agricultural products and 53 percent for nonagricultural products. In 1947, average tariff duties for products actually imported and on which duties were paid were 20.6 percent for agricultural and 18.2 percent for nonagricultural products. This calculation, however, excludes tariff rates which were such as to prohibit imports.

Dutiable agricultural imports subject to tariff concessions including bindings of present rates from 1934 to the present amounted to 94.6 percent of total dutiable agricultural imports based on 1947 import statistics. Dutiable nonagricultural imports subject to concessions amounted to 96.7 percent of total dutiable nonagricultural imports.

A quota may limit imports far more than a tariff, yet it cannot be calculated quantitatively in the same way as average tariff rates. This particularly affects the comparison of agricultural and nonagricultural average tariff rates, since most of the quotas are applied to agricultural products. • • • In view of these quotas, it is only possible to conclude that the average restriction on imports appears to have been reduced less for agricultural than for nonagricultural products. In other words in negotiating the agreements the State Department and other Government representatives have been particularly conscious of agriculture and while negotiating approximately equivalent tariff cuts have provided safeguards through quotas which have reduced the effect of the tariff cut. How serious has been the decline in United States exports and what have been the principal causes?

United States exports have been declining consistently for the past 4 years.

	United States exports	Decline from previous year
1947	$14,252,000
1948	12,494,000	$1,758,000
1949	11,885,000	609,000
1950 (computed on the basis of 11 months)	10,000,000	1,885,000

The principal reason for this decline is, of course, the recovery from World War II and its aftermath on the part of many foreign countries which enabled them to either produce some of the goods they had been buying from the United States or buy these goods from some other country.

However, an appreciable portion of the decline in United States exports is accounted for by the fact that foreign countries prevented their citizens from buying United States goods because we were not buying sufficient goods from them to provide the necessary dollars. In other words, despite the large grants under the European Recovery Program during this period which supplied billions of dollars, most countries found it necessary to restrict their purchases from the United States because the United States was not buying from them. United States exporters and United States workers employed in export industries suffered heavily during this period because the country as a whole had still not learned that if we want to sell we must buy.

In view of the shortage of goods, why bother about trade agreements?

There will, of course, be goods to import. When people say there won't be any goods to import, they are merely loosely suggesting that compared with the present availability of goods there will be a shortage of many commodities in the future.

It is true, of course, that we are likely to experience increasing shortages of many commodities in the future. It is precisely under such circumstances, however, that lower tariffs may make a significant contribution. For, to the extent that lower tariffs increase the volume of imports into the United States, or decrease the costs of such imports in our domestic markets, they will contribute to restraining the antiinflationary pressures with which we have to deal. Lower tariffs may thus help materially in meeting our shortage problems.

Furthermore, the trade agreements program in which the United States is now engaged involves not only reduced tariffs on our part but also reduced tariffs on the part of a great many other countries, including most of the countries of Western Europe. Such lower tariffs promote economic cooperation among these countries and stimulate their productivity—objectives we have labored hard to achieve. Under present circumstances where the free world is mobilizing to meet the threat of aggression measures strengthening the economic capacity of ourselves and countries friendly to us are ever more important.

We have heard a great deal about the dollar gap and the need for increasing our imports. Now that the dollar gap has disappeared, why should we bother about trade agreements? Are we not more likely to be concerned about keeping our exports high enough to pay for our imports, rather than the other way around?

In the first place, it is a misconception to believe that the dollar gap problem has disappeaed. Despite the large increase in imports, chiefly raw materials for stockpiling and defense purposes, United States exports are still larger than imports at the present time. For the first 11 months of 1950 our exports were running at an annual rate of $10,000,000,000 and imports at $8,700,000,000. In fact, in only 2 months of the 11 of 1950 for which data are available did our imports exceed our exports. These were August and October. In November our exports again exceeded our imports by $127,000,000, or by $108,000,000 more than our imports had exceeded our exports in the preceding month. As the defense effort of the western democracies intensifies, the demands for goods from the United States are likely to increase while the capacity of other countries to export to us is likely to decline.

Our exports are still limited by controls imposed as the result of shortages of dollars. As these controls are lifted, the demand for our exports which they have restrained will be released.

Why should we endanger the home market which accounts for over 90 percent of our sales in order to take care of our exports which amount to less than 10 percent of our sales?

Although it is true that only about 10 percent of our total national production of all kinds of goods goes into exports, that 10 percent can make the difference between profit and loss for the national economy, just as a 10-percent share of its total trade can make the difference between success or failure for a given business or firm. The 10-percent ratio, furthermore, applies to the national total. There are much larger percentages for many of our most important and prosperous industries, such as the machine-tool industry, manufacture of agricultural machinery, trucks, and other products. The same thing is true about major agricultural enterprises, such as the production of cotton, wheat, tobacco, and pork.

There is a further aspect to this question as it is phrased—the implication that foreign trade endangers the domestic market. The fact is that foreign trade benefits and enlarges the domestic market. Exports provide jobs and buying power for American producers of export products, making them better customers in the domestic market for all kinds of American goods. Imports come into the United States only when and because American industry or consumers want them and need them and can buy them to better advantage than they can buy domestic products. Such imports cannot be said to endanger the home market.

The State Department usually contends that we should increase our imports so as to enable other countries to pay for our exports to them. Why should we not export just enough to pay for our imports?

The total prosperity of the United States would be considerably greater if both exports and imports were at the highest possible level rather than at a low level.

If we want to maintain our present high standard of living in the United States, we must maintain high levels of employment and of business activity. In order to do this, it is essential that we maintain exports at the highest possible levels. Every section of the United States produces quantities of goods seeking world outlets. New England supplies textiles, fine machinery, and hardware. The Middle Atlantic States export electrical goods, manufactures of metal, and medicinals. The South has greater supplies of cotton and cotton cloth, tobacco, lumber, and rayon manufactures than can be consumed within the United States. The Middle West efficiently produces an abundance of corn, pork, lard, dairy products, automobiles, and trucks. The West produces an ever-increasing variety of goods in tremendous volume, including aircraft, petroleum, motion pictures, fruits and vegetables, and merchant vessels. A high level of exports benefits the American economy by providing markets for certain industries seeking essential outlets abroad for their products, and also by giving American consumers the benefit of lower prices made possible through an increased scale of operations.

Of course, people in other countries are also very interested in seeing United States exports maintained at high levels. They look upon this country as the source of many essential items which are either unobtainable elsewhere or are of inferior quality when produced elsewhere. It is well known that foreigners would buy much more from this country if they could afford it.

In short, a high level of United States exports is essential not only to continued high levels of prosperity in this country, but also to supply peoples abroad with the goods without which, in some cases, they would find it difficult even to survive, and without which, in any case, they would be reduced to depressed standards of living.

Have trade agreements created United States jobs or thrown American workmen out of employment?

By stimulating exports of American products in past years and by increasing imports, trade agreements have been directly responsible for creating new jobs. To the extent that trade agreements have enlarged old markets for American goods or secured new markets, to the same extent they have created new jobs for American workers.

It is sometimes said that the additional employment created by exports will be offset by the displacement of workers through an increase in imports.

This line of reasoning is based on the assumption that all imports compete with domestic production, which they do not. A large part of our imports are necessary to maintain existing production or are complementary rather than competitive. Some foreign goods do compete with similar American goods because they sell for less. If we attempt to produce these goods rather than import them, the price will be higher, consumption curtailed, and employment reduced. There is little doubt that the jobs gained by expanding exports will outnumber any jobs lost because of imports. Further expansion of foreign trade diverts labor and capital to more efficient uses and thus should enlarge the return received by both.

As everyone knows, our standard of living and our expanding economy are based largely on more and more efficient methods of production. Increased efficiency has increased wages and lowered prices so that this country is able to maintain a standard of living unequaled by any other country, and at the same time to provide well-paying jobs to an ever-increasing population. International trade is simply another means of producing a greater quantity of goods more efficiently.

The importance of exports as a creator of jobs in the United States has recently been dramatically illustrated. United States exports declined from $14,252,000 in 1947 to $11,685,000 in 1949. This decline in the sales of American goods abroad was accompanied by a decline in employment in this country. It was estimated by the Department of Labor that 2,400,000 Americans in 1947 were directly or indirectly employed in nonagricultural industries in producing goods for export. To this number should be added the many farmers producing cotton, tobacco, wheat, and so forth. In 1949 it was estimated by the Department of Labor that as a result of the decline in exports only 1,700,000 Americans were directly employed in nonagricultural industries producing export goods—a decline of 700,000 job opportunities. Furthermore this decline occurred in industries generally paying the highest wages in the entire United States economy.

If as a result of unforeseen circumstances and of a tariff concession imports do increase so as to threaten serious injury to domestic industry, action can be taken under the escape clause to modify or withdraw any concession to the extent necessary to prevent the injury.

What specific United States industries were affected by the decline in United States exports and to what extent were they affected? What unemployment was caused?

The decline in United States exports which occurred from 1947 through 1949 did seriously affect certain domestic industries. To some extent and in some cases the loss of sales abroad may have been absorbed by greater sales on the domestic market, but generally speaking the period in question was one of declining economic activity. The following statistics may give an approximate picture of what actually happened to some of the job opportunities in several industries:

Industry	Decline in exports 1947–49	Estimated decline in number of jobs attributable to exports 1947–49 [1]

Why has not the program been successful in lowering prices to benefit the public as it has been advertised to do?

One cannot claim that the effect of the trade-agreements program in all cases actually lowered the prices of imported commodities. One can say that the whole effect of tariff reductions is to make possible lower prices of imported products. This is true for two reasons. The removal of high tariff charges by trade agreements removes charges that would normally have been passed on to the consumer. Secondly, lower tariff charges permit greater importation, with resulting lower prices which is especially important in periods of short supply, such as the present.

It is not realistic to have expected the price of imported commodities to have fallen in recent years. Since the beginning of the trade-agreements program, the level of national income and, therefore, the general demand has steadily risen. The outbreak of fighting in Korea and the resultant expanded defense program has reinforced the demand for many commodities. For some of these, especially raw materials such as natural rubber, raw wool, tin, and copper, the supply cannot be increased as rapidly as the new levels of demand warrant, therefore, the prices of these goods rise sharply. These increases in prices, however, for the reasons stated at the outset, do not mean that the trade-agreements program has been ineffective in keeping down the prices of imported commodities, only that other, more basic determinants of prices have outweighed the price-reducing effects of the trade-agreements program.

What has the United States gained under the general agreement?

The United States has gained the following benefits from the general agreement:

First. We have obtained tariff concessions which open up foreign markets for the products of United States industry and agriculture.

Second. We have obtained assurances of nondiscriminatory treatment in the application of tariffs and other trade restrictions against American goods. New tariff preferences discriminating against the United States are prohibited; existing preferences may be continued but not increased.

Third. We have obtained agreement that quotas, the most objectionable barrier to international trade, cannot generally be used. Certain exceptions to this rule have been permitted, such as quotas for balance-of-payments reasons, but the general agreement puts careful limitations on these exceptions and the parties have agreed to drop these restrictions when they are no longer justified under the terms of the agreement.

Fourth. We have also obtained safeguards on the use of internal taxes and other internal measures which are used to discriminate against our products and protect local industries abroad.

Fifth. The general agreement also attacks invisible barriers to international trade. Commitments designed to eliminate unnecessary and unduly complicated customs formalities and arbitrary systems of customs valuation have been secured.

Sixth. We have obtained a safeguard for our domestic industries in cases of possible serious injury from increased imports by the inclusion of an escape clause which allows us to withdraw tariff concessions, suspend other obligations of the agreement if necessary to prevent or remedy the injury. Also, there are provisions in the general agreement which allow us to use import quotas in connection with our domestic farm programs and export and import controls where our national security is involved.

Seventh. Finally, the general agreement has provided us with an international forum for the settlement of trade disputes. Insofar as it establishes a code of fair practices in the international trade field and encourages the settlement of differences by consultation rather than economic retaliation, the general agreement has eliminated a source of friction in international relations.

Does the GATT allow a country to keep itself perpetually in balance-of-payments difficulties so that it could continue to discriminate against us as long as it wanted to?

I presume you are referring to article 12 (3) (b) (i) which says that no contracting party shall be required to withdraw or modify restrictions for balance of payments reasons on the ground that a change in domestic policies would eliminate the balance-of-payments difficulties and thus render unnecessary the restrictions.

I think the answer to your question is that, as a matter of strict legal right, if a country wanted to pursue employment or development policies which would keep itself in balance-of-payments difficulties, the other contracting parties could not object under the agreement. However, the contracting parties also undertake to have regard to the necessity of establishing a sound and lasting equilibrium in their balance of payments, and, in dealing with their employment and development problems, to follow methods which will expand rather than limit international trade.

Moreover, no country can afford to keep itself in balance-of-payments difficulties. To do so means that it must deny its people the right to purchase things they want where they want to buy them. It means that it must deny its people things they want. Therefore, I am convinced that the natural national self-interest of countries will lead them to every effort to get themselves out of balance-of-payments difficulties as rapidly as they can. Certainly the efforts now being made by the OEEC countries to restore their international trade indicate that they are working hard to get out of these difficulties.

Finally, I do not think there is any country, including the United States, which would recognize the right of other countries to question its basic domestic policies.

What authority did we have to enter GATT and are we exceeding that authority?

We believe that the provisions to which we have agreed in the GATT are provisions which the President has authority to agree to under the Trade Agreements Act and his general power in the field of the conduct of foreign relations.

The provisions to which we have agreed were necessary to safeguard the tariff concessions that we obtained at Geneva. Otherwise these tariff concessions could have been nullified. The provisions in GATT are similar to those contained in the earlier bilateral agreements, which were inserted for the same purpose. The main difference is in the fact that GATT is a multilateral agreement rather than a bilateral agreement and the provisions are consequently more elaborate. In addition, world conditions have greatly altered since negotiation of the last bilateral agreement necessitating some further elaboration to meet these specific developments. In essence, however, precedents may be found for almost every general provision of the GATT in the provisions of the prewar agreements.

In some cases the provisions of the GATT differ from our own laws. In these cases we are not fully applying the GATT since it is in effect only provisionally and to the extent not inconsistent with the existing legislation of the parties to it.

There is nothing in the Trade Agreements Act which even suggests that the authority to enter into trade agreements with other countries is limited to merely bilateral agreements. If we have the right to enter into a multilateral agreement, the authority is certainly broad enough to permit us to agree to general provisions which safeguard the concessions obtained in the general agreement.

What happens to the concessions we obtained in the general agreement now that action on ITO has been indefinitely postponed?

The concessions we obtained in the general agreement remain intact for the present. However, under article XXIX of the agreement, the contracting parties agreed to meet to consider whether the agreement should be amended, supplemented, or maintained if the charter of ITO had not entered into force by a certain date.

It appears unlikely at the present time that the contracting parties may wish to terminate the entire agreement under the provisions of article XXIX.

Other countries may, under the provisions of this article, propose modifications to the general agreement. Whether or not these modifications are accepted will depend upon the results of negotiation and the attitudes of the other contracting parties at the time the proposed modifications are made.

Such amendments as may be proposed under this article are not likely to directly affect the actual tariff concessions but may seek to change one or more of the general provisions of the agreement. To the extent that these general provisions safeguard the tariff concessions, such modifications might affect the tariff concessions we have obtained under the agreement.

Is the President trying to get the escape clause in the trade agreements that do not have the clause now?

Yes.

In October 1950, the Swiss agreed to the inclusion of the escape clause in our trade agreement. As a result of the Torquay conference three more countries with which we now have bilaterals will assume the escape-clause obligations, namely, Peru, Turkey, and Uruguay.

Now that it is clear that there will be no large-scale negotiations for accession to the general agreement during the next several years we will be able to move ahead in obtaining the inclusion of the clause in our bilateral agreements. In this connection two points may be made. First, one of our bilaterals, with Argentina, now contains a provision which allows escape in that it provides for termination of the agreement if the Government of either country feels that the other has adopted measures which have the effect of prejudicing the commerce or industry of the country desiring to consult. Second, it should be noted that because of the nature of trade between the United States and certain of the countries with which we still have bilaterals, the inclusion of the escape clause in those agreements is likely to be of greater benefit to the other countries than to the United States—for example, agreements in which we have given primarily duty-free bindings—cocoa, coffee—in return for duty reductions by the other country.

The countries with which we have bilateral agreements not containing the escape clause—assuming accession to the general agreement by Peru, Turkey, and Uruguay—are as follows: Argentina, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, Iran, and Venezuela.

How much remains of the President's authority to reduce rates of duty by 50 percent from their level on January 1, 1945?

Statistically, using 1947 as a basis no reductions have been made in the level of duties prevailing on January 1, 1945, on 37 percent of United States dutiable imports, while on 44 percent of dutiable imports in that year less than 50 percent reduction has been made. The full 50 percent reduction has been made on 19 percent of 1947 dutiable imports. The following table shows the data:

United States dutiable imports for consumption in 1947, total and by extent to which rates have been reduced below Jan. 1, 1945, level

	Millions of dollars	Percent of total
Total dutiable United States imports	2,206	100
Rates reduced below Jan. 1, 1945, level	1,383	63
Reduced full 50 percent	422	19
Reduced less than 50 percent	961	44
Rates not reduced below Jan. 1, 1945, level	[1] 823	37

[1] Also includes products on which the Jan. 1, 1945, rate of duty was bound in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. A list of the principal items on which the duty has not been reduced below the 1945 level is attached.

In using these statistics it should be appreciated that they do not show the amount of bargaining power remaining under the authority nor should they be taken as an indication of the amount of trade on which duties will be reduced 50 percent or less than 50 percent in future negotiations.

The negotiating process is such that a binding of a rate at its existing level whether or not that level has been reduced in past trade agreements is a concession for which other foreign countries may be willing to give concessions in future negotiations. Similarly a small reduction in the tariff on one item may offer greater opportunity for trade expansion than a much larger reduction in the tariff on another item. The relative size of different imports in total United States import trade is also an unreliable measure of the importance of an item since a product which bulks small in our total trade may be of primary importance to the export trade of some smaller country.

On the other hand, the figures indicating how much authority to reduce tariffs has not yet been used cannot be taken as equivalent to an indication of how much usable bargaining power remains. There are items which would not be reduced unless some change were to occur in existing circumstances and conditions, including some which have not been reduced at all up to this point. Others which have been reduced only a little may already be at the lowest point which would be consistent with domestic welfare at the present time or in the foreseeable future.

[1] To be considered at Torquay.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. EVINS].

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman, Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. COOPER, and other members of his committee, the Committee on Ways and Means, have fully and completely presented this measure—so-called the Cordell Hull Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act extension—for our consideration today.

I wholeheartedly support the extension of the Trade Agreements Act as called for in the measure we are now considering. To feel otherwise would be contrary to my deep and abiding belief that the setting up of extreme obstructions to international trade only results in barriers of friendship between nations which can lead to war—and it is likewise my belief that in destroying, so far as it is possible and feasible, barriers of commerce and economic friendship among nations we are promoting and encouraging peaceful relations among the nations of the world.

As is generally known, Mr. Chairman, that great statesman, Judge Hull, of Tennessee, devoted many years of his life to a study of the problems affecting our trade and commerce with other nations and the reciprocal-trade-agreements program was and is the product of his handiwork and statesmanship.

Judge Cordell Hull was and is one of the greatest champions of peace of modern times. It was through the efforts of Secretary of State Cordell Hull that our great country was removed from the realm of the economically isolated and brought into the community of nations. This instrument, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, has fostered peace, trade, and commerce among many nations, regardless of what others say to the contrary. I am pleased to support this measure and to urge its renewed adoption.

I recall some years back when the distinguished chairman, Mr. DOUGHTON, appeared before the committee to urge approval of a previous extension of this act that he said:

> If Cordell Hull in all his long public career ever said or did an unwise thing, I never heard of it.

And the distinguished chairman has enjoyed a long and fruitful friendship and association with Mr. Hull and knows whereof he speaks.

The Congress first approved the Trade Agreements Act more than 17 years ago. The soundness of that program has been proved over and over again by the fact that, with very few changes and alterations, it is today the same program as envisioned by Mr. Hull, its author.

Under the operation of the act, this nation—despite the intervening tragedy and misfortune of a world war—has attained a prosperity never before achieved by any nation on the face of the earth. The contribution to our economic prosperity which has been made possible by this great act cannot be estimated alone in dollars and cents—though the statistics which may be presented show such economic gains to be tremendous. The full estimate of the accomplishments made possible under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act must also be measured in terms of international good will and friendships which our Nation has earned—friendships which have developed into alliances in our military interest.

Mr. Chairman, I speak for the farmers of my district, the manufacturers, and all the people, when I strongly urge the approval of a further extension of the Trade Agreements Act. It has meant so much—it will mean so much more in the future for commerce, for good will and for the prosperity and well being of the people of the United States. I trust this measure will be speedily approved and the Cordell Hull reciprocal trade agreements program extended.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party has always stood for just reciprocal trade agreements, agreements that give reciprocal benefits to both sides. We still are for this doctrine, but we want it to be conducted openly, and with full consideration for the interests of the working people of this country.

The basic and all-important problem to be considered in lowering and adjusting tariffs is the question of what we are doing to our own people and what we are doing to their security and their jobs. World trade should be encouraged, but the reciprocal trade program should be managed in the interests of the American people. In reducing tariffs to help economic prosperity throughout the world we must not take the lining out of the pocketbooks of the American people.

When the reciprocal trade law is extended by Congress it must contain provisions to safeguard and protect the jobs, the homes, and the high living standards of the American workers, male and female. Legislation extending reciprocal trade must contain the peril-point provision to protect American labor and industry.

The Republican Eightieth Congress enacted a Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act which contained the peril point. This gave workers protection against losing their jobs through the importation of competing foreign manufactured goods, either duty free or at such a low tariff rate as to enable the importer to undersell comparable and better made American products.

We all know what happened to many segments of American industry in 1949 and 1950 when the American producers lost the protection of the peril point amendment.

Unemployment was widespread in many sections of the country, all caused by the flood of cheap goods coming from abroad. The watch industry of the United States was practically wiped out. Thousands in the pottery industry, in hat making, in shoe manufacture, in rubber goods, in the textile manufacture, lost their jobs in 1949 and 1950. New England was particularly hard hit by the influx of foreign made goods, and the damage of the administration's cheap and unprotective tariff policy swept across the Nation to the Pacific coast, affecting the lumber, fishing, and fruit and nut industries with their thousands of employees.

There is hardly anyone in the United States who does not want to see Europe, Asia and the other parts of the world restored to the positions they once occupied, and their people again enheartened by hope and faith. American taxpayers through their toil and effort have spent billions of their dollars for the rehabilitation of the war-torn globe. Surely no one can accuse the United States of failing in this objective. But how can the United States help the world unless we ourselves are prosperous? Reciprocal trade legislation which is not reciprocal to the United States could wreck American trade and economy. The administration's management of the reciprocal trade program in 1949 and 1950 proved the dangers to the future of American industry. If the United States is wrecked, to whom then will the rest of the world turn?

The reciprocal trade policy of the administration is filled with fallacies. The United States is engaged in a global fight against communism, and the people have generously put up their money to carry on this battle. But while we are trying to curb the Reds on one hand, we turn around and build up communistic countries with the other. A large percentage of the cheap foreign imports which caused the doors to close on American factories come from countries behind the iron curtain.

This extension of the reciprocal trade law is for 3 years. Under the administration's program for the next 3 years, the workers and manufacturers in foreign lands are to be favored at the expense of a large segment of American industry.

We can continue our world trade program without the menace and fear of unemployment at home. We can do that by adopting the peril-point amendment. This is a simple provision but a most important one to hundreds of thousands of our workers. The peril-point section merely provides that the Tariff Commission must certify to the President tariff reductions which have reached the point where they imperil American jobs and American industry. Then it provides that if the President decides to go ahead and lower the tariff, he must so notify the Congress and explain to the Congress and the American people and those whose jobs will be imperiled the reason why he is taking such action.

Certainly Congress, the people, and above all thousands whose jobs will be threatened, have a right to such information. This is a wise and sound provision that should be restored to the Reciprocal Trade Act.

We are considering a tariff act designed to last for 3 years. None of us knows what these years will bring, peace or war. The administration is most anxious to aid world economic recovery and increase trade with other nations. I ask why the administration is not as anxious to make sure within the next 3 years that goods manufactured by slave labor behind the iron curtain will not cause the collapse of American industries and the loss of employment to our workers?

I understand, of course, that with allocations and controls in effect a reciprocal trade issue right now is academic. We can sell all the goods we can manufacture. But these war conditions may not last. I hope they do not, because they would ultimately bring destruction to all of us. And when this feverish war preparation abates, we may well find that we have legislated ourselves into a situation where factories will close and millions of people will be thrown out of work. We must take the necessary safeguard now.

Why is it too much to ask the President to tell Congress why he is lowering tariffs? Congress, under the Constitution, was entrusted with the establishment of tariffs. It should and must for the benefit of our workers retain control of these constitutional rights.

This is not a partisan fight. It is an American fight. It is a fight that must command the interest of scores of little industrial concerns in New England. It is a fight that must appeal to the coal and pottery workers of West Virginia and Ohio. It is a fight of vital concern to the agricultural sections of the West and the dairy farmers of the North. It is a fight of deep interest to the lumber, fishing, and fruit industries of the west coast. It is a fight of concern to the sugar, cotton, peanut growers, and other industries in the Southland.

Yes; it is an American fight, and what we do here now may well fix the responsibility for the prosperity or lack of prosperity of the American people 2 or 3 years hence.

Hundreds of thousands of American boys and men are being drafted into the armed service to hold back the menace of Communist aggression. These servicemen will need jobs when they come home. We all have the responsibility to see that they have work, and adoption of the peril-point amendment is the best means of assuring them that they will again have jobs at American wages.

It will benefit these men very little if they turn back Communist aggression abroad only to fall victims to economic aggression at home.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 16 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, the demands of today, the uncertainties of the future, make a sound economy a "must" for America. This is no time for economic experiments. To depart too far from sound procedures is to invite disaster.

If we are to be the bulwark of civilization and the protector of world democracy; if we are to succeed in setting up on adequate defense pact for the free nations of the world, we must realize that our armed strength will be no better than the economic strength we can and must put behind our efforts.

In the consideration of H. R. 1612, to provide for extending certain trade agreements, which will expire in June 1951, we are dealing with one of the vital factors of our economy. When we lower import duties, we curtail Government revenues. To say nothing of our loss of purchasing power and the ability of our workingmen to pay a greater part of their income into the Federal Treasury as a tax. An idle man is an economic liability not an asset.

In 1945 and again in 1949, when these trade pacts were up for periodic renewal, I carried on a losing battle on the floor of the House to protect the interests of the industries and the workingmen of my district, particularly those employed in handmade glassware, pottery, and woodworking plants.

West Virginia has suffered more from this legislation than any of the other 48 States. It is the center of the glass and ceramic industry which was among the first to feel the brunt of foreign competition. In the past few years our two most basic industries, coal and crude oil are threatened. Other industries, too, are finding it increasingly difficult to maintain wage levels, working hours, and many other conditions of employment.

I have said and I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I object to the State of West Virginia being made a guinea pig for further experiment. The experiences learned in 16 years since the inception of the reciprocal trade idea in 1934 is such that one is forced to the conclusion that my own State's economy will be destroyed by the extension of the existing act. Particularly, is this true, if the renewal carries the authority to any Government agency to grant further tariff cuts and if the so-called escape clause, now the figment of someone's imagination, is not liberalized and legalized by being written into the language of the basic act itself.

At no time since the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act in 1930, has our Nation, or for that matter, the world itself, functioned under normal conditions. Things were abnormal in the early thirties because of a world depression. They were abnormal in the early forties because of a great world war. They are abnormal in the early fifties because of the dire threat of a third world war. What I want to say, Mr. Chairman, is that the Reciprocal Trade Act has not demonstrated that it is an asset to our national economy. It has never had to meet the impact of normal world competition under normal conditions.

If our national economy is to be a sound economy, we must maintain a favorable trade balance. Our exports must exceed our imports. Only on 2 occasions in the past 16 years, have we approached periods of normalcy. In the years just prior to World War II, we witnessed a sudden increase in foreign imports. American-made goods were in some instances, driven out of the markets. We then had more imports than exports. This was the first test of our reciprocal trade policy. Conditions were rapidly approaching normal. Prewar and wartime defense activities in the late thirties halted this trend and a new cycle of abnormal conditions gripped this country.

Another approach to normal levels, came in mid-1950, only to be again interrupted by the Korean War emergency. It is interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, that in both these instances as we came near to normalcy, we were faced with a gradual shift in our trade balance. In the month of October 1950, we faced an unfavorable trade balance when imports exceeded exports for the first time since 1939.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the Committee's attention to the fact that had we not taken credit for approximately $100,000,000 monthly of exports synthetically created by the use of the Marshall plan funds, we would have encountered an unfavorable trade balance for most of the year. What is the answer when ECA funds stop flowing to Europe? The answer is plain—a continuing trade deficit.

I wish to protest the use of ECA funds as direct aid to foreign industries in modernizing their plants that manufacture goods for import into this country. The extent of this practice cannot be determined at present. Here are two instances as proof of what is going on in the ECA. The first is a project in Germany, where the Glaswerke Ruhr, Essen-Karnap, which produces 20 percent of all hollow glassware in the Republic of Germany. A direct grant of $1,837,000 plus $212,000 in ocean freight has been made from Marshall plan funds. Modern American machinery and equipment is being installed and will be in direct competition with the products of three glass plants in the city of Weston in my district. Two thousand workers are employed in the German plant. Their hourly wage is 31 cents per hour as against an average wage of $1.42 per hour in American plants. This plant is exporting 6,000 tons annually and most of it is intended for the American market.

Another project, also in the field of glass production, is underway in Greece, where a grant of $1,832,000 has been made to the Hellenic Chemical Products Co. This is for the purpose of boosting the output of this plant by 70 percent and a huge surplus above local needs will be available for exports.

Plans are also underway for a similar project to modernize and rehabilitate the French glass industry. How much more of this kind of competition which is made possible by the American tax dollars can our industry endure? I am getting d—— well tired of voting money to create jobs for the workingmen in Europe and in so doing cause unemployment in this country.

England has been able to restore the British pound and to stabilize her economy by exporting double the amount of her imports. If we are to have a sound dollar and a stable economy, we could well follow Britain's policy. Her position in the United Nations Council in opposition to economic sanctions against Red China is in line with her policy of placing economic greed above political obligations. Yet, we go on extending her trade concessions and direct economic aid under the Marshall plan.

Official statistics of the United States Commerce Department for the year 1949 show 12,071,000 pieces of table and art glassware were imported into this country. The total foreign value of these imports was $2,940,400, or a monthly average of 1,006,000 pieces of glassware. Now, let us see what happened in the last half of 1950. For the month of June the total pieces imported jumped to 1,646,000 and by the month of August had leaped again to 2,895,800 pieces. Where did these imports come from? Czechoslovakia and Poland, both of which are behind the iron curtain, were the worst offenders out of a total of 15 countries that import this type of glass into our country.

Typical of this kind of business is the pottery industry. Rates of duty on nearly all of our products have been decreased a full 50 percent below those in the 1930 Tariff Act. The rates in that act were wholly inadequate to enable us to meet foreign competition, as witness the steady and rapid increase in imports of all types of dinnerware from 1931 to 1938. During all those years and before the rate reductions in the British treaty had any effect Japanese china of good quality was selling at retail at less than the cost of production in American factories.

Since then, in spite of our protests, duties on both china and earthernware have been lowered in trade treaties with Great Britain, Mexico, Italy, Czechoslovakia, and France. All such reductions have, of course, applied to our imports from Japan and Germany since the war. The inevitable result has been that imports of dinnerware and fancy goods from all of these countries have increased just as fast as they have been able, with the use of our money, to get productive facilities back into operation.

Just as inevitably did production and employment in American factories show a steady decline from early 1949 to August 1950. Since early in July of last year, evidently as a result of the Korean War, sales of nearly all civilian goods and particularly housewares have increased substantially and the potteries generally have been reasonably busy. It must be admitted that this is an abnormal situation and through our experiences of 1949 and early 1950, we have no delusions of what is going to happen to us when we are really at peace.

Statistics, which I have received from the United States Department of Commerce on household chinaware and kitchen articles and on earthenware and china art and decorative articles, are more alarming. In these two categories, imports for 1949 were 9,392,000 dozen with a foreign value of $14,943,000. The average monthly rate was 773,000 dozen. Let us see what it was in the last half of 1950 when we had more imports of all kinds than we had exports. In October, imports jumped to a total of 1,636,000 dozen. This was 2½ times above the monthly average for 1949.

Total sales of all domestic potteries were $77,500,000 in 1948. In 1949, they were $64,000,000, or a drop of 17 percent. During the same period, imports of competitive products increased 24 percent.

For the first 6 months of 1950, our sales were down more than 25 percent from 1949, and imports were up over 30 percent.

During the last 3 months reported by the United States Department of Commerce, August, September, and October of last year, imports of all dinnerware and fancy goods were 65 percent above the same 3 months of 1949. China dinnerware alone increased nearly 79 percent and art wares increased 72 percent; and practically all of this increase came from Japan and Germany. Without the sudden upsurge of buying by the American public during the past 6 months, it is not hard to see what would be happening to our pottery industry. Because in directly comparable ware, the retail price of the Japanese product is less than one-half the American.

It is interesting to note in this connection, that the British Pottery Board of Trade just recently wrote directly to General MacArthur, urging that he do something to decrease the Japanese exports of china to the United States or increase the prices; or the American market for British china would be ruined.

One other instance in which my State of West Virginia is being harmed in this manner is found in the spring clothespin industry. We have the largest plant of this kind in the world. Let us look at what happened in the year 1950 when the Korean War emergency came on. The country of Sweden is our main competitor. In the year 1949, she imported 614,000 gross of this type clothespin. In the month of October 1950 the rate of imports was 193,000 gross or an annual rate of above 2,000,000 gross.

Highly tempered steel is required in the manufacture of these clothespins. Now that we have frozen steel for essential use, our domestic producers are handicapped and lose their market to Swedish producers. This happened in World War II when imported clothespins sold for 49 cents a gross and it cost 83 cents to manufacture the same article in our plants in my district.

I want to cite another instance where my State's producers are handicapped in the recent freeze order on cobalt. This material is used by glassware producers for coloring. It is grossly unfair to permit the use of this product by foreign producers who are in a positon to take over the American market. These two instances are, I think, a strong argument for the imposition of import quotas so as to protect American producers from the loss of their market.

Another sector of my State's glass industry is now feeling a sudden impact of imports. I now refer to the sheet glass—window glass—industry where we are facing increased imports of Belgium glass as high as 400 percent. Czechoslovakia has in recent months flooded our domestic market with lightweight sheet glass used for scientific and pictorial purposes. Here the imports are 50 percent above the total domestic production of this type of glass.

Coal is king in West Virginia. It is our State's major industry. Our greatest source from which to get taxes for the support of our lesser governmental units. Anything that harms the coal industry harms our economy. The same can be said of the oil industry, another of my State's basic industries. The major part of our oil is independently produced and it is here that we find this industry threatened with extinction by the mounting and uncontrolled imports of crude oil from the Near East, Mexico, and Venezuela. Importations are in excess of 1,000,000 barrels daily. Imports in excess of 450,000 barrels daily causes a curtailment of domestic production. This causes unemployment and a loss of purchasing power of thousands of employees in the industry. Profits are wiped out and a stable sector of our economy crippled with a resulting loss in tax revenues to the Nation and to the several States.

Coal is affected indirectly in that it is losing its markets to cheap residual fuel oil produced from the crude oil that is flooding our markets through import duty concessions granted under these reciprocal trade pacts. For years, my State has enjoyed a lucrative market for coal in New England and on the eastern seaboard. In the year 1948, we sold 21,000,000 tons. As the result of competition from these cheap oil products, our sales in 1949 were down to 13,000,000 tons. In 1950, the trend was still downward. During most of 1950, a large part of our mines were either idle or working on a part-time basis. The Korean War emergency by creating added demand for fuel, has improved this situation, but this is only temporary relief. The basic danger still remains as a threat when the emergency passes and we get back to normal.

We cannot escape the fact that this situation is brought on by the activity of five of our major American oil companies, who hold and operate the concessions abroad. Testimony taken before a House subcommittee of which I was a member, showed that the cost of producing a barrel of crude oil on these concessions in the Near East, was 41 cents per barrel as compared to $2.65 the cost of production in this country. Out of this 41 cents of original cost residual oil represented 17 cents per barrel after the gasoline, lubricating oils and other distillates were removed. This residual oil was sold under contract for $1.60 per barrel. Four barrels of this oil has the same B. t. u. as one ton of West Virginia coal. Now this means that four barrels of oil sold at $1.60 a barrel or $6.40, displaces a ton of coal that cost to produce in our mines in West Virginia, plus transportation costs, a total of $10.95.

It is easy to understand the earnings report of those large oil companies when we see the profit coming from a product that costs 17 cents per barrel, being sold for $1.60 per barrel. Yet, we go ahead with a trade treaty that allows these monopolies to make millions annually while exploiting and controlling the domestic oil industry to the detriment of all independent producers. If we are to extend these trade pacts for another 3 years, then we must in justice to our own producers, find some way to limit these imports.

Mr. Chairman, when the initial Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was adopted in 1934, the administration had the active support of the Nation's three great labor groups and at least a tacit acceptance from the country's leading industries. That situation does not exist today. As a member of a Subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor, taking testimony on the effects on employment in this country as a result of mounting imports of oil from the Near East and Venezuela and Mexico, I heard our reciprocal trade policy roundly denounced by representatives of both the oil industry and the coal industry. They were joined in this denunciation by both the oil workers union and by the United Mine Workers Union.

Only recently, the Nation's largest union group, the American Federation of Labor, at its national convention, Houston, Tex., adopted resolutions of protest against unfair wage and labor conditions as a result of the operation of our Reciprocal Trade Act.

A danger to our basic economy, as well as to our national existence, is found in the so-called favored nations agreement which not only extends concessions granted to one member of the reciprocal family and to other members, but also permits a nonagreement nation to take advantage of our tariff concessions.

As a result of the most-favored-nation principle, reductions in duty and other concessions made by the United States with all countries under the trade-agreement program are automatically extended to Russia, Communist China, and all other Communist-dominated countries. We now have trade agreements with approximately 45 free countries covering literally thousands of imported items, and the benefits of all these concessions contained in these agreements are now benefiting Russia, Communist China, and their satellite iron-curtain countries.

In the case of Russia, for example, approximately 88 percent of its dutiable imports into the United States benefit from reduced rates provided in trade agreements by us with free countries and 92 percent of the tax-free imports from Russia consists of products bound on the free list in trade agreements with free countries.

In the case of Communist China, 72 percent of the dutiable imports into the United States from that country benefit from trade agreement concessions granted by us to free countries, and 75 percent of the duty-free imports of that country benefit from our concessions to the free nations.

In conclusion may I impress upon my colleagues the fact that the so-called escape clause now in use, and which is not a part of the basic Reciprocal Trade Act, is nonworkable and unfair. If we are to renew these trade agreement pacts, it is essential that the act itself spell out in plain English what avenues of relief are available to harassed domestic producers. At present the State Department has abrogated the authority extended the President to provide safeguards by writing into existing reciprocal pacts an embargo on setting up of import quotas on all products except certain agricultural products. In doing this they have acted without the authority of law, and any remedy aimed at relieving any domestic producer injured by the operation of the trade pact must be a part of the basic act itself.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman if his statement is correct that there is no provision in Public Law No. 316 spelling out the escape clause.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no provision in the basic act for an escape clause.

Mr. PERKINS. What cooperation has the gentleman received of the State Department in considering a basic industry such as coal when residual oil is in competition with such a basic industry?

Mr. BAILEY. Well, I have never gone to the State Department with it, but I tried it out in the case of clothespins, and I got a royal brush-off, and I assumed I would get it in regard to oil just the same as I did with clothespins.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I could call the attention of my colleagues to the necessity of abrogating at once the existing trade agreement with Czechoslovakia. No defense can be offered by the Congress for our continuing favor to a Russian satellite nation. I shall, Mr. Chairman, if the opportunity affords, offer amendments aimed at strengthening the escape provisions of this legislation and to direct the President to terminate the existing treaty with Czechoslovakia on the terms and in the manner set forth in the act itself.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to make a few realistic comments in regard to the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Our own position as a Nation and our national security are at stake. It is time that we stop theorizing and take a look at the facts.

The reciprocal trade agreement program was sold to the American public as a program which would promote trade and world peace. In my opinion the trade agreements during the thirties, prevented the recovery of the American price level and kept the United States in a state of depression. With the United States in a depression the world could not get back to a state of prosperity. The poverty created by low prices made it possible for Hitler, and his ally, Mussolini, to lay the groundwork for World War II. Instead of promoting peace the trade agreements promoted war.

In the period following World War II our price level has increased about 80 percent and the hourly wage of our industrial labor has increased in proportion. On the other hand much of the world has come under Soviet influence and England through its socialistic policies and devaluation of the pound has held their wage level to about one-third that of the American worker. This differential in prices is very dangerous to our national security and a policy of free trade without any protection for our national economy is the best aid and comfort that we can give to communism.

Just before the close of the Eighty-first Congress, I made a brief statement as to the need of equity in trade and pointed out that we cannot have peace when one neighbor cheats another—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 96, part 11, pages 15141–15142.

Let us briefly examine our own economy. Our national income is created by our unit production of goods and services times the price per unit. In the last quarter of 1950 our national income was running at a level of $254,000,000,000. At the present time a drop of 10 percent in our price level would mean a loss of $25,000,000,000 in national income.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Under a free-trade policy, Russia by dumping her products on the world market can break our price level and bring about the economic chaos that will destroy our American system from within.

At the present time we are engaged in a program of military preparedness. We find ourselves short of strategic materials—copper, lead, zinc, manganese, tin, and so forth. Why are we short of these products? We are short of these products because we destroyed our own production under a concept that we could import them cheaper from other nations. After World War II, the price of our domestic strategic materials was permitted to drop, and our domestic mines closed by the thousands. They could not compete with cheap foreign labor. Even, at this moment, the administration has not taken definite steps to produce these materials for national defense. Our whole economic structure is being threatened by shortages and our military program is faced with dangerously small stockpiles of these critical materials.

In case of war, Russian submarines can, and no doubt will, prevent the importation of a mighty lot of these materials—just as Hitler did in 1941 and 1942—and without them we would be unable to defend ourselves. The Eightieth Congress passed legislation to provide for the production and development of strategic materials in the United States. The President vetoed the bill. Other attempts have been made to pass similar legislation and such legislation has always been sidetracked because it conflicted with the theories of the reciprocal trade agreements. Because of our we-give-and-you-take trade-agreements policies we have been prevented from producing the very things so vitally needed to defend the United States let alone the jobs and income that could have been created by the production of strategic materials.

Speaking frankly, the result of their operation is clearly that of economic suicide for the United States.

Let me next point to what is taking place under these trade agreements. We find England engaged in an economic war with Argentina. The low-wage level in England requires cheap products if they are to buy from other nations. England at the present time is trying to force Argentina to sell chilled beef for 17 cents per pound. Think of it in comparison with American prices. To bring Argentina to her knees, the British Government has rationed her people to about one-half of a pound of meat per week and the issue threatens the stability of the English Government.

On the other hand, England is making us pay through the nose for rubber and tin, the production and sale of which is controlled by the British Government. This policy of buy cheap and sell high, is the very source of communism and socialism.

We cannot expect to sell American products to Argentina produced with industrial labor at $1.51 per hour and then have other nations buy their meat for 17 cents per pound. They cannot possibly trade with us even though we remove the few tariffs that remain.

Therefore I hope that this Congress will take steps to discontinue the present trade-agreement program and give the world a program which will promote equity of trade. How can we do this? It is not a complicated program. We should notify the rest of the world that we are going to protect our price and wage level at the point of national solvency. Second, that we are willing to trade with any nation in the world and pay them a comparative price for such products as we may need.

For example, if a tractor produced in the United States sells for twice the number of dollars that it sold for in 1925–29, the last period of any semblance of world stability in foreign exchange, then we should stand ready to pay twice the price level for existing imports at that time.

China, India, South American countries, or any other nation does not like to be cheated in trading their products because of currency devaluation or low prices such as England is trying to force Argentina to accept.

As a Member of Congress, I want the American worker to have a good wage in line with the American cost level for goods and services. I am also willing that we agree to pay a comparative price for anything we may need in the way of imports.

During the past year, in the third quarter September to October, our foreign trade was in balance for the first time in many years. What brought about this balance? It was not the trade-agreement program but a price for world raw materials at the American level. Other nations by selling us their products at a proper price level were able to earn their dollars, which we have been forced to donate under the Marshall program mainly because they are forced to sell their commodities at starvation prices.

In my opinion the nations of the world would welcome this kind of program. After centuries of exploitation they would welcome a price for their products that will permit progress, economic development and a higher standard of living.

Had we followed such a policy, our domestic mines would be in production and our stockpile of strategic materials would be ample for our needs. We would not be in a position of shortages which tend to disrupt our domestic economy and force many business institutions to curtail their production even to the point of closing up entirely and throwing our wage earners out of work by the millions, except during periods of war production.

With such a program we could give the world true economic leadership in building a foundation for world peace. A continuance of our present trade agreement policy will continue the exploitation of weaker nations and undermine both our national income and the domestic production we will need in the future to protect our Nation and our American system.

Why permit politics and past mistakes to continue a program that has so utterly failed to achieve any of the glowing promises which its proponents made 15 years ago? A continuation of the program will perpetuate the economic confusion in the United States and the world. To me it is the greatest threat to the future of your Nation and mine.

In closing, I want to repeat again that a drop of 10 percent in our price level means a loss of $25,000,000,000 in income. We cannot afford to risk that loss nor the loss of production through unemployment that would result. We can have national security by tariff protection up to the American cost level and we can buy all the things we need in addition to our own production by paying a price for our imports on a basis of equity with the price of things we wish to sell to other nations.

If we deal fairly with our neighbors in trade relations as I have here suggested, we will make good and lasting friends all over the world, instead of giving them hand-outs which belittles them and will bankrupt America.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the present authority of the President to enter into foreign trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act expires June 12, 1951. If enacted into law, H. R. 1612 will extend the authority of the President for 3 years from the expiration of the present authority. Because of the importance of reciprocal trade as an issue before our Nation, I voted in committee in favor of bringing the bill, H. R. 1612, before the House for consideration, but I do not want anyone to think for one minute that I approve of all the provision of the present law.

I vigorously support the views that the peril-point provisions established by the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948 be reenacted; that certain standards be established by Congress for the guidance of the President in determining relief under the escape clause; that the President be directed to prevent the application of reduced tariffs and other concessions made in trade agreements with the free nations to imports from Russia and Communist China and to imports from any Communist satellite country, including North Korea, which the President finds is part of a conspiracy against the free world, and I believe sincerely that the Eighty-second Congress should not extend any trade-agreement authority of the President more than 2 years as we should leave the extension of authority beyond June 12, 1953, to the Eighty-third Congress.

The determination of the peril point and the furnishing of such information by the Tariff Commission to the President, together with the President's report of any concession going below the peril point and the reasons for going beyond the peril point, all combine to furnish our people with information to which they are most certainly entitled.

I can see no valid objection to the establishment of some standard of safety for the guidance of the President in determining relief under the escape clause. No change in the escape clause is suggested, but the people of the United States affected by the trade agreements have a right through Congress to name standards that are fair and effective guides for the President in the matter of securing relief under the escape clause.

It strikes me as utterly absurd to extend the so-called most-favored-nation treatment to Soviet Russia, Communist China, and the Communist satellite countries at this time. The antagonism of these countries for the United States and their determination to inflict all possible damage on the free world clearly disqualifies them for any reduction in tariff or other concession on imports from those countries. In fact, I personally would go further and deprive any country of such trade advantages if that country persists in supplying strategic and critical materials to Soviet Russia, Communist China, and the Communist satellite countries.

The record of shipments of rubber to the Soviet bloc is of particular interest on this point, and I include here a statement dated January 19, 1951, that I have today received from the State Department. I hope the Members of the House may have time to analyze the fallacious reasoning indulged in by the State Department in support of their surrender to foreign-trade policies of other countries inimical to our defense.

SHIPMENTS OF RUBBER TO THE SOVIET BLOC

JANUARY 19, 1951.

Since statistics concerning shipments of rubber to the Soviet bloc are public information and readily available, the question often is asked why the shipments are not halted. This is a perfectly natural reaction but overlooks very practical problems.

At the present the rubber trade is entirely in private hands in all major producing territories. News stories dealing with shipments of rubber to the Soviet Union frequently are somewhat misleading to their use of the term "British" since there is an implication that the British Government is the exporter of the rubber in question when, as a matter of fact, the shipments are made by private traders.

Although to date the Soviet bloc has bought almost entirely from Malaya, other countries of southern and southeast Asia, any one of which produces sufficient rubber to meet the estimated needs of the Soviet Union and its satellites, remain as potential alternate sources not controlled by the British or any other Western European country.

If either the British or the Malayan Government acted alone to restrict rubber shipments to the Soviet Union, it might only penalize its own trade without causing the Soviet bloc any significant inconvenience. It would be extremely difficult politically for either Government to impose export controls if the only effect of such controls were to drive Soviet and Chinese buyers to other markets. It also is true that controls confined to Malaya would provide Communists there with an opportunity to claim that because of the country's colonial status Malaya was being prevented from participating in the prosperity which Soviet purchases of rubber were bringing to other territories free of foreign control.

Controls imposed unilaterally by Malaya would be difficult to enforce. Each month, on the average, approximately 5,000 long tons of rubber are smuggled from Indonesia to Singapore as a matter of routing to evade Indonesian export taxes, and the direction of smuggling might be reversed if it became profitable to do so. Measures to prevent rubber from reaching the Soviets would require intergovernmental agreements among at least 5 governments which would have to control exports from the major natural rubber markets of the world. Enforcement measures required to make the agreements even moderately effective would include export controls in producing and marketing centers and intensified police activity throughout the rubber-producing territories and their surrounding waters.

It should be pointed out that even if measures of export control should be adopted in all major producing or marketing areas, it still would be extremely difficult in the absence of open hostilities to prevent the USSR and its satellites from receiving natural rubber. The efficacy of such measures in at least certain of the rubber producing areas is a matter for serious doubt. The Soviet bloc purchases not over 10 percent of the world's annual production; and if necessary in the face of control measures by exporting countries, it probably could obtain rubber by a smuggling operation of only moderate size for Southeast Asia.

The Soviet Union itself and, more recently, China have been the principal buyers of natural rubber for the Soviet orbit. Estimated receipts by these countries may be summarized as follows in long tons:

Year	U. S. S. R.	China	Total
1939	30,000	4,586	34,586
1947	35,000	22,188	57,188

Monthly statistics concerning direct shipments of natural rubber from Malaya to the Soviet Union, China, and Hong Kong during 1949 and 1950 are shown in the attached table. Hong Kong is included because much of the rubber it receives is transshipped to China. The figures in the table differ from those shown in the preceding paragraph because there is a time lag of approximately 2 months between shipments from the Far East and imports into the Soviet Union. The lag between shipments from Malaya and receipts by Hong Kong or China is, of course, smaller.

Our ability to secure the strategic and critical materials we need for war from other free nations is today seriously impaired by the continued trade of those free nations with the Communist dominated nations of the world. This impairment of our security is revealed both by the short supply and the abnormally high prices of such materials resulting from the limitless competition furnished by the iron curtain nations in the free world markets.

The Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means state on page 3 of House Report No. 14, to accompany H. R. 1612:

> Today our greatest concern is the maintenance of our national security in cooperation with other nations.

I do not contend that this statement is in error but I do contend that the impact of the most-favored-nation concession upon the national security should not be condoned as it is by the present national administration and the Democrats of the Committee on Ways and Means. The persistence of some free nations in selling strategic and critical materials to iron-curtain nations is not cooperation that will lead to our national security.

Much is made by the Democrats on page 3 of House Report No. 14 of the fact that a representative of the Department of Defense is a member of the Trade Agreements Committee that makes recommendations to the President, but in my opinion the perpetuation of the bottleneck that has long existed in skilled workers of the watchmaking trade, the condition that today exists in the markets of the world in wool, rubber, and tungsten, lead me to believe that the Department of Defense has not been adequately represented on that committee. It is high time that Congress stop writing a blank check, and stop handing over all control and authority in foreign-trade policy making to the President and the Department of State without congressional control or legal standards of any kind. Yardsticks and guides must be placed in the law if we are to build our national security strong enough to guarantee our continued existence as a Nation in this war-torn world. The day of the blank check and the rubber stamp must end or the very existence of our Nation will be seriously jeopardized. The amendments suggested by the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means are all sound steps in the right direction.

The use of the adjective "reciprocal" in this legislation does not prove the existence of reciprocity. In fact, there has been so little reciprocity in our trade agreements throughout the past 16 years that today we as a nation have permitted our own defense self-sufficiency to bog down to a dangerous level. Countless mines have closed; our wool supply and the number of sheep in America have sunk to the lowest level since the end of the Civil War; the Government stockpile of strategic and critical materials was limping along at 38.4 percent at the time the war in Korea broke, and the supply of many essential skills has not been maintained. Domestic production of many strategic and critical materials such as tin, tungsten, and manganese has not been encouraged and all too often has been discouraged by our reciprocal trade program including inadequate tariff rates.

I do not predict disaster for our Nation, but I do charge the present national administration with responsibility not only for our entry into the Korean War without adequate logistical preparation, but I charge them also with complete misunderstanding and lack of comprehension of the impact of our foreign-trade policies upon our Nation's security. The time to change our trade policy is now at hand. Let us either amend the bill before us today or end completely the present authority to bargain away the remaining security we must now conserve if we are to survive.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCULLOCH].

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, the untimely death of Capt. Don S. Gentile, on Sunday afternoon, January 28, 1951, deprived the United States Air Force of one of the most colorful personalities and effective fighter pilots of World War II.

To him belongs the distinction of having destroyed more enemy planes than any other American pilot in the European theater of operations during the late war.

During the early days of World War II his determination for a flying career was undeterred, notwithstanding his inability to meet the requirements of the peacetime cadet training program of the United States Army Air Force, and he volunteered for duty in the Royal Air Force.

After heroic action over Dieppe he was commissioned in the United States Air Force where he made a record that will long be remembered. His superb skill, his daring leadership, and his unswerving devotion to duty distinguish him among the great American aces of World War II.

Although he has finally soared away "into the wild blue yonder" he will be an inspiration forever, to the defenders of freedom everywhere. For his country he, too, gave his last full measure of devotion.

On behalf of the House of Representatives, I express to his devoted wife and three sons, and to his parents, sincere and heartfelt sympathy.

Mr. Chairman, under unanimous consent, I append to my remarks the biography of Captain Gentile as furnished to me by the United States Air Force:

CAPT. DON S. GENTILE

Capt. Don S. Gentile, 30-year-old fighter ace, destroyed 19.80 German planes in the air and 6 on the ground during 3 years' service with the RAF and United States Air Force in Europe.

At one time the leading fighter ace of the United States, he was born in Piqua, Ohio, June 12, 1920. Learning to fly while in high school, he had a total of 300 hours flying time when he became a Royal Air Force cadet in July, 1941.

The following December he was appointed an RAF pilot officer and flew with various RAF squadrons out of England until June 1942, when he joined the famed Eagle Squadron.

On August 1, 1942, during the Dieppe raid, Captain Gentile destroyed his first German aircraft, an FW-190 and a JU-88, within 10 minutes of each other, for which he was awarded the British Distinguished Flying Cross.

The next month he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the United States Army and assigned to the Three Hundred and Thirty-sixth Fighter Squadron, Fourth Fighter Group, of the Eighth Air Force in Europe. At the same time, another young American pilot, Capt. John T. Godfrey, transferred from the RAF to the Air Force. Also assigned to the Three Hundred and Thirty-sixth Fighter Squadron, he became Gentile's wingman and the two formed a combat team which Gen. H. H. Arnold, former commander of the Air Force, praised as the greatest of any war.

Unlike the usual wingman, Godfrey alternated with Gentile as leader and they took turns shooting down planes and protecting each other. Together they destroyed more enemy planes than any other two American fighter pilots, and prompted the remark from Hermann Goering that he "would gladly give two of his best Squadrons for the capture of the Italian Gentile and the Englishman Godfrey."

Referred to by Winston Churchill as Damon and Pythias of the twentieth century, the two aces were sent home together in June 1944 to stress teamwork to the American people. After a series of war-bond tours, they were separated, Gentile being assigned to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, as a test pilot, and Godfrey returning to Europe, where he was shot down by the Germans and taken prisoner. (He was later liberated and returned to the United States.)

During his service with the Air Force in Europe, Captain Gentile, who had 20-10 vision, flew 182 combat missions, totaling 350 combat hours.

Captain Gentile remained at Wright-Patterson AFB, testing conventional type fighters and F-80's, until April 1946, when he received an honorable discharge. In December 1947 he was appointed a captain in the Regular Air Force and assigned to the Training Division at USAF headquarters in Washington, D. C., for work on fighter gunnery projects. He entered the University of Maryland in June 1949 for a 2-year study of military science.

The tall, dark-eyed hero, whom the late President Roosevelt called "Captain Courageous," has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross with one Oak Leaf Cluster, Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross with seven clusters, Air Medal with three clusters, and the Presidential Unit Citation with two clusters. His foreign decorations include the Military Order of Italy, Belgian Croix de Guerre, British Distinguished Flying Cross, British Star, British General Service Decoration, Canadian Volunteer Medal, and the Italian Croce Al Merido di Guerra and Medaglia d'Argenti Al Valor Militaire. He also wears the Eagle Squadron Crest awarded by the King and Queen of England.

He received the honorary degree of Doctor of Aeronautics from Ohio Northern University at Ada in January 1946.

Captain Gentile is survived by his wife, the former Miss Isabella Masdea, of Columbus, Ohio, three sons, Don S. II, Joseph, and Patrick, and his parents.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1612) to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], chairman of the Committee on Rules, may have until midnight tonight to file reports from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what reports does the gentleman want to file?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Illinois did not advise me as to that. He just asked me to obtain this permission for him, to have until midnight tonight to file certain reports from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why is that necessary? We are not going to meet tomorrow, and we have practically no program that I know of on Friday. I cannot see why this permission is necessary. If we do not know what reports the gentleman wants to file, I will have to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations of all matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committee.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places as the committee may determine, whether or not the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, and to take testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by such chairman. The chairman of the committee or any member designated by him may administer oaths to witnesses.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes on Monday next, following the legislative business of the day and any other special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS] is recognized for 2 minutes.

BIPARTISAN TAX CONFERENCE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, when I sat down to breakfast this morning, I picked up a morning paper with one hand and a cup of coffee with the other hand, and nearly choked on the first swig, not due to the quality of the coffee, for Mrs. Gross makes fine coffee, but because of the headlines announcing that President Truman invited members of the House Ways and Means Committee, including the Republicans, to take part in a tax confab at the White House.

According to the paper, it was hoped that this touching love scene would lead to what was called a bipartisan tax policy.

Does not this proposition have a familiar aroma? Whenever the President finds himself in a hole, he talks "bipartisan."

Now, after telling the people he intends to tax them until it hurts, he wants the Republicans to bail him out.

Is not this much like putting the cart before the horse? If not, why did not the President call in Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, and other committees, months and even years ago to consult on administration spending bills and establish, shall we call it, a bipartisan spending policy, inasmuch as increased taxes are necessitated, at least in part, by administration squandering of public funds and debauchery of the currency through Truman inflation?

As obvious as the whole deal is, Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee fell for it, as near as I can ascertain, answering the Truman beck and call, and trod the primrose path to the White House.

By so doing, and for all practical purposes, they identified the Republican Party with the staggering increase in income taxes that will follow. They fell into a booby trap rigged and indeed worthy of the Pendergast school of politics.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1951

(Legislative day of Monday, January 29, 1951)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. F. Norman Van Brunt, associate minister, Foundry Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and Almighty God, who dost bring forth Thy righteousness as the light and Thy judgments as the noonday, in the presence of ageless realities we pause in reverence and, with a deepening sense of obligation as servants of this great people, pray for courage to attempt, power to achieve, and patience to endure.

Grant that with these virtues we, who hold the birthright of democratic traditions, may meet the crisis of our time with avowed faith in it, praying as we work:

Faith of our fathers, we will strive
To win all nations unto Thee,
And through the truth that comes from God
Mankind shall then be truly free.
Faith of our fathers, holy faith!
We will be true to Thee till death.

In Thy name we pray. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A joint resolution of the Senate of the State of California; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Senate Joint Resolution 3

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to declare Solano County, State of California, a critical defense area for the purpose of obtaining financing of housing construction

"Whereas numerous military and naval installations are located in Solano County in the State of California, including the Travis Air Force Base, the Benicia Arsenal, the Overseas Radio Station at Dixon, and those at Mare Island; and

"Whereas the mounting defense activities of the Nation have already caused and will continue to occasion a vast expansion in the activities of these installations; and

"Whereas as a concomitant of such expansion, a serious shortage of housing for the military, naval, and civilian personnel required at these installations has developed; and

"Whereas this situation cannot be rectified without the assistance of the Federal Government: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby memorialized to declare that an acute housing shortage exists in the county of Solano, State of California, which impedes the national defense activities and which cannot be alleviated without Federal assistance; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of California, and to the Federal Housing and Home Finance Administrator."

A joint resolution of the Senate of the State of California; to the Committee on Armed Services:

"Senate Joint Resolution 4

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to provide for military access roads to Travis Air Force Base

"Whereas the Travis Air Force Base is located in Solano County in the State of California; and

"Whereas the mounting defense activities of the Nation have already caused and will continue to occasion a vast expansion in the activities of this installation; and

"Whereas the Travis Air Force Base at present is not adequately provided with means of ingress and egress, especially in conjunction with the State and National highway system: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and Congress of the United States are hereby memorialized to provide for the construction of military access roads leading from the Travis Air Force Base and connecting with the State and Federal highway systems, and especially a military access road connecting with United States Highway Route 40; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

Two joint resolutions of the Senate of the State of California; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Senate Joint Resolution 6

"Joint resolution relating to the All-American Canal project

"Whereas the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 21, 1928 (45 Stat. 1057) authorized the construction of the All-American Canal and made provision for Imperial irrigation district, a political subdivision of the State of California, to assume the care, operation, and maintenance of said canal upon the completion thereof; and

"Whereas said act also granted the right to said district to utilize the power possibilities on said canal, the net proceeds therefrom to be applied against the district's obligation to repay to the Federal Government the construction cost of said canal; and

"Whereas pursuant to the provisions of said act, before any moneys were expended by the Federal Government on or for the construction of said canal, Imperial irrigation district entered into a contract with said Government under date of December 1, 1932, by the terms of which said district was granted the right and required to assume the care, operation, and maintenance of said canal upon the completion thereof and also the right to develop the power possibilities thereon; and

"Whereas the main All-American Canal has been completed and has been in operation for a number of years and the Secretary of the Interior has transferred the care, operation, and maintenance to Imperial irrigation district of all of said main canal except the upper section thereof, being that section from and including the diversion works on the Colorado River at Imperial Dam down to and including the Pilot Knob check and Pilot Knob wasteway; and

"Whereas Imperial irrigation district has proceeded to develop the power possibilities on the section of the All-American Canal which it is operating and in connection therewith has acquired and is operating a complete power system serving the needs of all consumers of electric power in Imperial County and in Coachella Valley, Riverside County, Calif., served with water by the said canal but to date said district has been prevented by certain Federal departments from developing the power possibilities at the Pilot Knob site on said canal, which is the most important and valuable power site to said district on said canal; and

"Whereas over the past years, Imperial irrigation district has requested the Secretary of the Interior to keep faith with the provisions of the Boulder Canyon Project Act and the district's contract of December 1, 1932, and turn over the care, operation, and maintenance of the upper section of said canal to said district and grant permission for said district to develop the Pilot Knob power site (without expense to the United States); and

"Whereas the water treaty between the United States and Mexico dated February 3, 1944, grants to Mexico the right to receive a portion of its water by means of the All-American Canal and Pilot Knob waterway, such water to be carried from the point where the latter empties into the old Alamo Canal to the delivery point on the international boundary; and

"Whereas the amount of such water to be so delivered to Mexico is but a relatively small proportion of the total annual flow of the All-American Canal and need not interfere with the district's operation of the canal nor the development of power at the Pilot Knob site; and

"Whereas the United States does not have the right to the use of any of the capacity of the All-American Canal for such supplying of water to Mexico but Imperial irrigation district does have surplus capacity in said canal down to Pilot Knob which it proposes to use in connection with the development of power at that point; and

"Whereas to remove any question as to possible conflict between said treaty and said district's contract, and also in a spirit of cooperation, said district has, by a proposal submitted to the Secretary of State in December 1947 offered to make available without cost to either the Federal Government or the Mexican Government capacity in the All-American Canal down to the end of the Pilot Knob wasteway and to transport to that point the water necessary to fulfill the requirements of said treaty under rules and regulations therefor to be promulgated by the Federal Government: Provided, That the upper section of said canal is turned over to said district and it is permitted to develop the Pilot Knob power site, as provided for in said district's contract of December 1, 1932; and

"Whereas after concurrence by the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice, the Secretary of State accepted said district's proposal in principle, subject to a clarification of wording, and did so notify said district by letter dated August 4, 1948; and

"Whereas for reasons unknown to this legislature, despite such acceptance the Secretary of State has recently turned the matter over to the Secretary of the Interior to decide who shall operate the upper section of the All-American Canal and the latter has announced that the Bureau of Reclamation will handle such operation, without giving any valid reasons why and in total disregard of the Boulder Canyon Project Act and the district's contract of December 1, 1932; and

"Whereas Imperial irrigation district has already suffered large financial losses caused by the Federal Government's refusal to permit said district to develop the Pilot Knob site and the Nation has lost hundreds of thousands of barrels of fuel oil used to generate power which otherwise would have been supplied by the Pilot Knob plant had the district been permitted to build it, which situation should be remedied without further delay; and

"Whereas this legislature believes that the Federal Government should take every reasonable means to observe and keep faith with the contracts it makes with its people and that this principle is particularly important at this time of world crisis when our form of government is on trial before the world; and

"Whereas this legislature believes in the principle of local control of public works to the greatest extent practicable, subject only to such reasonable rules and regulations by the Federal Government as may be necessary to protect the Government's investment in such works: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of State of the United States be memorialized to uphold the principles of our form of government in its dealings with Imperial irrigation district under the terms of the Boulder Canyon Project Act, the contract with said district of December 1, 1932, and the treaty with Mexico dated February 3, 1944; and be it further

"Resolved, That said two Secretaries be memorialized to proceed under the principles of the proposal made to the Secretary of State by Imperial irrigation district in December 1947, in accordance with the acceptance thereof by said Secretary as stated in letter of August 4, 1948, to said district, to the end that said district be permitted, without further delay, to assume the care, operation, and maintenance of all of the main All-American Canal and to proceed with the development of the power site at Pilot Knob; and be it further

"Resolved, That the attorney general of California, the State engineer, and all other officers of the State of California be and they are hereby directed to use all means within their power to carry out the objectives of this resolution and to assist Imperial irrigation district in accordance therewith; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General of the United States, the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

"Senate Joint Resolution 9

"Joint resolution relative to the rights of the State of California to tide and submerged lands lying along the coast of California

"Whereas there is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States an action entitled "United States v. California" in which a master has been appointed for the purpose, among others, of determining the location of the mean low tide line along the coast of California; and

"Whereas a stipulation was entered into by the Attorney General of the United States and attorney general of California on August 21, 1950, relative to the disposition of rentals, royalties, and other payments received by the State of California from certain leases in the tide and submerged lands along its coast; and

"Whereas a demand has been made by the United States that there be deposited in the Treasury of the United States all moneys received from said leases on the tide and submerged lands along its coast; and

"Whereas the Legislature of California is considering enacting a law, being assembly bill No. 1878 of the 1951 regular session, providing for the transfer of all moneys received from the said leases after October 1, 1950, to the Treasury of the United States as provided in said stipulation: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly). That the Legislature of the State of California declares that the sole purpose of said act, herein referred to as assembly bill No. 1878, is to provide temporarily for the efficient and economical development and production of oil and gas from tide and submerged lands along the coast of California pending final determination of the rights of the State of California in and to said lands; and be it further

"Resolved, That the State of California hereby reasserts its claim to absolute ownership of all such tide and submerged lands and of the minerals and oil and gas therein and expressly reserves all of its rights thereto; and be it further

"Resolved, That nothing in said assembly bill No. 1878 as enacted shall be construed as a waiver or relinquishment of any right or interest now held or claimed by the State of California in or to such lands, minerals, and oil and gas; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby requests and urges the Congress of the United States to enact suitable legislation confirming the ownership of the State of California of said tide and submerged lands and of the minerals and oil and gas therein; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

Two assembly joint resolutions of the State of California; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 3

"Joint resolution relative to the tidelands and submerged lands adjacent to the coastal States

"Whereas until recently it was generally recognized that all of the coastal States owned a belt of land beneath navigable waters adjacent to their coasts; and

"Whereas in 1947 the Supreme Court of the United States held that those lands were not owned by the States and that the Federal Government rather than the States has paramount rights in and power over the 3-mile belt of land; and

"Whereas the effect of the decision of the Supreme Court was to divest the States of valuable oil rights; and

"Whereas State ownership of the 3-mile belt of land is not inconsistent with the Federal control necessary in the conduct of international affairs and Coast Guard activities: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States is respectfully memorialized to enact such legislation as will be necessary to restore the ownership of the 3-mile belt of land beneath navigable water adjacent to the coasts of the coastal States; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative of a coastal State in the Congress of the United States."

"Assembly Joint Resolution 7

"Joint resolution relative to acquisition of land by the United States

"Whereas the United States, acting through its several agencies, acquires land in the several States for public use; and

"Whereas if an owner of the land does not desire to sell it in such an instance, the United States can obtain it by condemnation; and

"Whereas the decisions of the United States to acquire land, administrative in nature, are made by the executive branches of the agencies of the United States and are held to determine public use in the courts of the land; and

"Whereas the owners of the lands, local governmental agencies, and other interested persons and organizations have no voice in those administrative decisions even though they believe the validity of the decisions questionable; and

"Whereas the policy of disregarding opinions of the interested persons and organizations in making the decisions relative to methods and amounts of land to be acquired by the United States is considered undemocratic; and

"Whereas this undemocratic procedure can be avoided by holding hearings to permit the interested persons and organizations to voice any objections or suggestions that they have with regard to each proposed purchase: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States is respectfully memorialized to take such action as is necessary to insure that owners of lands which the United States proposes to acquire, and all interested persons and local governmental agencies, are given an opportunity to express their views on each proposal of the United States to acquire land, at a public hearing held for that purpose after due notice; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 11

"Joint resolution relative to materials and equipment necessary for air-pollution control

"Whereas many of the industrial plants in Los Angeles County are devoted to the production of supplies for the national defense; and

"Whereas the full production of industrial plants in Los Angeles County is necessary during the present national emergency; and

"Whereas it is essential to the health and efficiency of the defense workers that the atmosphere be as free from pollution as possible; and

"Whereas the Los Angeles County Air Pollution Control District is now requiring the construction of installations necessary to reduce the air pollution: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States is respectfully memorialized to take such action as may be necessary to permit the acquisition, uninterrupted by priority or other restrictions, of the required materials and equipment necessary to permit the execution of the requirements of the Los Angeles Air Pollution Control District; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 14

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to take action for protection for civilian injuries or deaths resulting from acts of war

"Whereas the possibility of war is imminent; and

"Whereas it is probable that if such war occurs, the civilian population of this Nation and of this State will be subjected to injury and death resulting from sabotage, bombing, and other acts which are concomitants of modern war; and

"Whereas large numbers of those killed or injured would receive their injuries while performing their usual work in the course of their usual employment; and

"Whereas the possibility exists that such persons or their dependents might successfully assert claims based on the workmen's compensation laws of this State against either the State compensation insurance fund or private workmen's compensation insurance carriers; and

"Whereas should this occur, such fund and such carriers might be bankrupted, leaving the worker who receives industrial injuries without protection; and

"Whereas should this result, it would create untold hardship upon this and other States, their workmen's compensation agencies and private insurance companies and insurers and also upon the workers themselves; and

"Whereas injuries and deaths resulting from such acts of war are properly the concern of the National Government and should not be left to the State of California, which is one of the most vulnerable of all States to probable enemy attack, or to other States similarly situated; and

"Whereas there are several measures pending before the Eighty-second Congress of the United States to provide protection to the States and their people from such eventualities: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, memorialized to take appropriate action to protect the States from eventualities resulting from acts of war as hereinbefore set forth; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of California."

By Mr. MAGNUSON:

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Washington; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"To the Honorable HARRY S. TRUMAN, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

"We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition as follows:

"Whereas the United Nations did create the Republic of Korea; and

"Whereas the Armed Forces of the United States are now engaged in armed combat in Korea, all as a representative of the United Nations; and

"Whereas Communist China has either directly or indirectly sent armies and/or soldiers into Korea and is now openly fighting the United Nations forces in Korea; and

"Whereas the United States has submitted, or is about to submit, to the United Nations a resolution branding Communist China as an aggressor in Korea: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, do support the principles involved in such resolution now submitted, or about to be submitted to the United Nations and do respectfully request Your Excellency to take every appropriate step in support of such resolution branding Communist China as an aggressor in Korea; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, and to each Member of Congress from the State of Washington."

By Mr. MUNDT:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, relating to the inclusion of meat or meat products in any price or rationing controls; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 3

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America not to include meat or meat products in any price or rationing controls

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house concurring therein)—

"Whereas experience has proven that the imposition of price controls on meat has the effect of curtailing production of livestock on the farms and ranches and removes incentive to increase production; and

"Whereas livestock production of all species is on the increase, beef production having increased 36 percent and hog production 50 percent since 1939, and predictions are for more hogs, cattle, and sheep to be produced in 1951 than in the year 1950; and

"Whereas the surest way to control prices is to increase production to meet the demand; and

"Whereas the imposition of ceilings and rationing on meat is an incentive to black marketeers, that many thousands of black marketeers flourished in the slaughtering phase of the meat business during OPA; and

"Whereas during the year 1946 many legitimate packers were practically closed because of inability to purchase livestock at legal prices due to the fact that livestock was being drained off by black marketeers, resulting in bare counters in the meat markets; and

"Whereas many people are now living who have had an intimate knowledge of black-market operations and who are ready and willing to again enter into black-market operations: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of the thirty-second session of the South Dakota Legislature, the House of Representatives concurring therein, do urge and recommend that the Congress of the United States do not permit the inclusion of meat or meat products in any price or rationing controls, and that the Congress of the United States take such steps as may be within its power to prevent the inclusion of meat and meat products in any move to control prices or rationing of commodities; be it further

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota relating to the land to be inundated by the Missouri River development, the appraisal of said land, the people dispossessed and other pertinent matters in relation thereto; to the Committee on Public Works:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 2

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States; His Excellency, the President of the United States, to take action regarding the land to be inundated by the Missouri River development, the appraisal of said land, the people dispossessed, and other pertinent matters in relation thereto

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house concurring therein)—

"Whereas the Missouri River development program will permanently inundate thousands of acres of fertile farm land; and

"Whereas many farm families of long-established residence will be dispossessed; and

"Whereas many other farm acreages will be reduced so greatly that their operation would not be economically sound; and

"Whereas the land involved in this development program is adapted to livestock raising; and

"Whereas livestock raising requires programs extending over a long term of years to provide sufficient feed and equipment for this type of agriculture; and

"Whereas the families affected are required to dispose of their property on a closed or forced market and are required to secure replacements on an open market at a time when it is recognized that farm lands are selling at inflated values: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of the thirty-second session of the South Dakota Legislature, the House of Representatives concurring therein, do memorialize the Congress of the United States to require that in all land appraisals that these facts, including the good will of the people involved, be considered and that the appraisal report of the values of the properties be made available to and be known by all parties in the transaction; and be it further

"Resolved, That the requirement that the money received from the sale of dispossessed land be reinvested in land within 1 year or requiring the payment of income tax be extended so that the parties involved will not be required to purchase land during a period of inflated values; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to His Excellency, the President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, to the chairmen of the Committees on Agriculture of both Houses of Congress, to United States Senator KARL MUNDT, to United States Senator FRANCIS CASE, to Congressman HAROLD O. LOVRE, to Congressman E. Y. BERRY, and to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of Congress."

(The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Public Works.)

HAWKINS POINT AMMUNITION PIER, BALTIMORE—RESOLUTION OF CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. BUTLER of Maryland. Mr. President, recently the Hawkins Point ammunition pier in Baltimore was severely damaged by fire. It is the only pier in Baltimore City on which ammunition may be loaded and unloaded. It is of considerable importance to the defense effort.

On January 22 the City Council of Baltimore adopted a resolution requesting Federal aid in rebuilding this important installation. This matter is of extreme importance to the Nation as well as to the city of Baltimore. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 2558

Resolution relative to the burning of the Hawkins Point ammunition pier

Whereas a very destructive fire totally destroyed the Hawkins Point ammunition pier and either destroyed or damage some important vessels; and

Whereas this is said to be the only pier in Baltimore City on which ammunition may be loaded or unloaded; and

Whereas Baltimore City ranks second in the ports of the country; and

Whereas, under the present circumstances, it is highly desirable that this pier be rebuilt as promptly as possible; and

Whereas it is of great importance in the defense program of the country that these facilities be restored without delay: Therefore be it

Resolved by the City Council of Baltimore, That the United States Congress be and it is hereby requested to appropriate sufficient funds for the prompt rebuilding of the Hawkins Point ammunition pier; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the city council be and he is hereby directed to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, the United States Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Maryland, to Governor McKeldin, and to Mayor D'Alesandro.

ADEQUATE BOXCARS FOR EARLY SHIPMENT OF DURUM GRAIN—CONCURRENT RESOLUTION OF NORTH DAKOTA LEGISLATURE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota relating to the furnishing of adequate boxcars for the early shipment of durum grain.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution F

Concurrent resolution requesting the Interstate Commerce Commission to take such action as may be necessary to insure the furnishing of adequate boxcars for the early shipment of durum grain

Whereas the State of North Dakota produces 85 percent of the durum raised in the United States, and the bulk of such production is in the northerly portion of the State; and

Whereas late summer rains and early snow came before a large portion of such durum could be threshed, with the result that much of such durum contains more than 15 percent moisture; and

Whereas such grain cannot be safely stored on the farm nor in the grain elevators because of the danger of heating and it is necessary that such grain be sent to terminal markets where it can be properly dried and stored; and

Whereas the marketing and shipping of such grain is being prevented by a shortage of boxcars, and if such grain cannot be shipped before warm weather starts, a great deal of such grain will spoil, with great financial loss to the farmers and great loss of human foods; and

Whereas by reason of the aforesaid facts an emergency exists: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the Interstate Commerce Commission be requested to take such action as may be necessary to insure the furnishing of adequate boxcars for the early shipment of such grain; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the North Dakota Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

MILTON RUE,
President pro tempore.
W. J. TROUT,
Secretary of the Senate.
LEO STICKA,
Speaker of the House.
KENNETH L. MORGAN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

FEDERAL FUNDS UNDER HOUSING AND SLUM CLEARANCE ACT—RESOLUTION OF VILLAGE COUNCIL OF ST. LOUIS PARK, MINN.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a certified copy of a resolution adopted by the Village Council of St. Louis Park, Minn., in connection with Federal funds under the Housing and Slum Clearance Act of 1949.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution waiving and assigning village rights to claim Federal grants by the Housing and Slum Clearance Act of 1949

Whereas the Congress of the United States has provided funds for slum clearance to the respective States and their political subdivisions therein; and

Whereas the village council, the governing body of the village of St. Louis Park, Hennepin County, Minn., determines that no slum clearance program is available for said village of St. Louis Park at this time; and

Whereas the neighboring village of Fridley, Anoka County, Minn., has by its governing body determined that it has an extensive slum area requiring considerable Federal financial assistance: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the village council of the village of St. Louis Park, Hennepin County, Minn., That such sums as may be available to the village of St. Louis Park under the above stated program for years of 1949, 1950, 1951, be and the same are hereby, released to the beneficial interests of said village of Fridley, Minn., and the Federal director of the Housing and Home Finance Agency is hereby authorized to make a transfer of said Federal Capital grant funds; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to all persons concerned.

O. B. ERICKSON,
Mayor.

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following reports of a committee were submitted:

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

S. 82. A bill to provide reimbursement of expenses incurred in connection with the burial of those who served in the military forces of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the Armed Forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of the President of the United States, dated July 26, 1941; without amendment (Rept. No. 74); and

H. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution amending section 5012 of the Internal Revenue Code; without amendment (Rept. No. 75).

GRACE ELIZABETH BEVERAGE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report an original resolution, approved unanimously by the committee, and request its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 59) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Grace Elizabeth Beverage, widow of Albion P. Beverage, late an employee of the Senate, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 59), was considered and agreed to.

TEMPORARY PERSONNEL FOR SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably, with the unanimous approval by the committee, Senate Resolution 42, with an amendment, and request its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 42) submitted by Mr. SPARKMAN on January 22, 1951.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I may explain that the committee is in effect a standing committee of the Senate; and it will be noted that the amendment would provide funds to enable the committee to carry on its work until the 30th of June, when this matter will be taken up by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what is the name of the committee?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is the Select Committee on Small Business.

The amendment of the Committee on Rules and Administration was, in line 4, after the word "basis", to strike out "during the Eighty-second Congress" and insert "through June 30, 1951", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That in performing the duties imposed upon it by Senate Resolution 58, agreed to February 20, 1950, the Select Committee on Small Business is authorized to employ on a temporary basis through June 30, 1951, such technical, clerical, and other assistance as it deems advisable. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

EX OFFICIO MEMBERSHIP ON COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS OF MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably, with the unanimous approval of the committee, Senate Resolution 28, with amendments; and I request its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 28) submitted by Mr. BRICKER on January 15, 1951, reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with amendments at the end of the resolution before the word "Joint", to insert "the"; after the word "Energy", to insert "(to be selected by said members)"; and in the last line, before the word "and", to strike out "Development" and insert "For the development", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the table contained in subparagraph 6 (a) of rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Senate Members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy (to be selected by said Members).	"For the development and Utilization of Atomic Energy"

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY FOR STUDY AND SURVEY OF HEALTH INSURANCE PLANS BY COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 39, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 39) submitted by Mr. MURRAY on January 17, 1951, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 273, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to May 26, 1950 (providing for study and survey of health insurance plans in the United States, the activities of State and local governments in the field of health services, and related matters), is hereby continued until March 31, 1951.

TEMPORARY PERSONNEL FOR COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 54, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 54), reported by Mr. O'CONOR from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, on January 29, 1951.

The amendment of the Committee on Rules and Administration was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "on", to strike out "February 1" and insert "January 31."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by subsection (g) (2) (C) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the period ending on January 31, 1952, to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, and such technical, clerical, and other assistants, as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $19,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

INVESTIGATION OF EXPORT POLICIES BY GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES—INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution No. 56. The resolution provides for increasing the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 365, of the Eighty-first Congress, providing for a study and investigation of the administration, execution, and enforcement by Government departments and agencies of the export policies and control regulations of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 56), reported by Mr. O'CONOR from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on January 29, 1951, and reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with amendments, in line 6, after the word "by", to insert "$23,000", and in line 12, after the word

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

"resolution", to strike out "on or before" and insert "through January 31, 1952", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the limitation of expenditures under Senate Resolution 365, Eighty-first Congress (providing for a study and investigation of the administration, execution, and enforcement by Government departments and agencies of the export policies and control regulations of the United States), agreed to December 21, 1950, is hereby increased by $23,000, and such sum together with any unexpended balance of the sum previously authorized to be expended under such resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee and covering obligations incurred under such resolution through January 31, 1952.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

INCREASE OF LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES FOR INVESTIGATION OF ORGANIZED CRIME IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably an original resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 60) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee established by Senate Resolution 202, Eighty-first Congress, agreed to May 3, 1950 (creating a special committee to investigate interstate gambling and racketeering activities), is hereby authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate to carry out the purposes of Senate Resolution 202, Eighty-first Congress, $50,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for the same purposes.

SEC. 2. Section 6 of Senate Resolution 202, Eighty-first Congress, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. The committee shall make an interim report to the Senate on or before February 28, 1951, and a final report to the Senate on or before March 31, 1951, with respect to the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem advisable. All authority conferred by this resolution shall terminate on March 31, 1951."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think we should have an explanation of the resolution. Sometime ago the chairman of the special committee gave out an interview in which it was stated that the special committee was not to be continued. May we hear from the junior Senator from Tennessee in regard to this matter?

Mr. KEFAUVER. This resolution would not continue the committee, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. What would the resolution do?

Mr. HAYDEN. The resolution provides for an extension of time for the committee, so as to enable the committee to make its report; and the resolution provides for an additional sum of money until that time amounting to a total of $50,000. The 31st of March is the final date.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a fixed date, is it?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; it is a fixed date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 60) was considered and agreed to.

S. 736. A bill for the relief of Fidel Arciniega Basterrechea; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, by request of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, I introduce for appropriate reference two bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will be received and appropriately referred.

By Mr. CORDON (by request):

S. 737. A bill to authorize payment of salaries and expenses of officials of the Klamath Tribe; and

S. 738. A bill to provide for a final settlement of individual shares in the tribal estate and assets of the Klamath Indians through voluntary withdrawal from membership in the Klamath Tribe of Indians of Oregon; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. FERGUSON:

S. 739. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Colonial Laundry Co.;

S. 740. A bill for the relief of Albert Walton; and

S. 741. A bill for the relief of Samuel Katz; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOEY:

S. 742. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. MURRAY:

S. 743. A bill to promote the rehabilitation of the landless Indians of Montana, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. MURRAY (for himself and Mr. ECTON):

S. 744. A bill to authorize the leasing of restricted Indian lands in the State of Montana for public, religious, educational, recreational, residential, business, and other purposes requiring the grant of long-term leases; and

S. 745. A bill to transfer to the Indian tribes of Montana control over their tribal funds; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

By Mr. MAGNUSON:

S. 746. A bill to exclude certain lands from becoming a part of the Colville Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

S. 747. A bill for the relief of Florence Elizabeth Ann Coons;

S. 748. A bill to permit Chinese students to remain in this country for a period of 3 years;

S. 749. A bill for the relief of George F. Willis; and

S. 750. A bill for the relief of Edward Chi-Kan Lam; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. MAGNUSON also introduced Senate bill 751, to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon certain claims for basic and overtime compensation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. O'CONOR:

S. 752. A bill authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 753. A bill designating the week beginning with the first Sunday of August of each year as National Vegetable Week; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KILGORE:

S. 754. A bill for the relief of Gerasimos Athanase Haberis; and

S. 755. A bill for the relief of Frank Miller; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 756. A bill for the relief of William E. Gillespie, Jr.; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. KERR:

S. 757. A bill for the relief of John David Logan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 758. A bill to amend section 7 of the Flood Control Act of 1941 relating to the apportionment of moneys received on account of the leasing of lands acquired by the United States for flood-control purposes; to the Committee on Public Works.

By Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina:

S. 759. A bill to extend to screen vehicle contractors benefits accorded star-route contractors with respect to the renewal of contracts and adjustment of contract pay;

S. 760. A bill to provide that the hours of work (exclusive of overtime) in any one calendar day of officers and employees subject to section 604 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945 shall be limited to a period of not more than 10 consecutive hours; and

S. 761. A bill to amend the Classification Act of 1949 to place the position of charwoman working part time in the appropriate grades of the Crafts, Protective, and Custodial Schedule; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. SMITH of New Jersey:

S. 762. A bill for the relief of Alexander Urszu; and

S. 763. A bill for the relief of Henri Suderman; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HILL (for himself, Mr. DOUGLAS, and Mr. AIKEN):

S. 764. A bill to provide for the demonstration of public library service in areas without such service or with inadequate library facilities; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. HOLLAND:

S. 765. A bill for the relief of Raleigh B. Diamond; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOLLAND (for himself and Mr. SMATHERS):

S. 766. A bill to strengthen the common defense by providing a domestic supply of soft fibers from kenaf and ramie; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 767. A bill to provide for the transfer or quitclaim of title to certain lands in Florida; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 768. A bill conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claims of G. T. Elliott, Inc., and M. F. Quinn; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NIXON:

S. 769. A bill to provide for the acquisition of McCornack General Hospital, Pasadena, Calif., by the Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. ECTON:

S. 770. A bill providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States, including the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. DOUGLAS:

S. 771. A bill for the relief of Livius Venetu de Gatterburg; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. GREEN (for himself, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. WILEY, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. FERGUSON, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. THYE, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. BENTON, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. MORSE, Mr. HENNINGS, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. HICKENLOOPER, Mr. LANGER, Mr. HILL, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. KEFAUVER, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. HUNT, and Mr. SMITH of North Carolina) introduced Senate Joint Resolution 27, approving the agreement between the United States and Canada relating to the development of the resources of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin for national security and continental defense of the United States and Canada; providing for making the St. Lawrence seaway self-liquidating; and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. BRICKER introduced Senate Joint Resolution 28, to direct the Federal Communications Commission to make a study of the problem of allocating television frequencies for use by educational institutions for the purpose of nonprofit educational programing, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and appears under a separate heading.)

COMMISSION ON COOPERATIVE INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill which is the same as a bill Representative MANSFIELD, of Montana, and I introduced at the last session of Congress. It provides for a Commission on Cooperative International Relations and for a study of the United States information and educational program and its expansion.

The bill (S. 731) to establish a Commission on Cooperative International Relations, introduced by Mr. MUNDT, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CLAIMS FOR BASIC AND OVERTIME COMPENSATION

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon certain claims for basic and overtime compensation, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement explaining the provisions of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Washington will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 751) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon certain claims for basic and overtime compensation, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The statement presented by Mr. MAGNUSON is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAGNUSON TO ACCOMPANY BILL "TO CONFER JURISDICTION UPON THE COURT OF CLAIMS TO HEAR, DETERMINE, AND RENDER JUDGMENT UPON CERTAIN CLAIMS FOR BASIC AND OVERTIME COMPENSATION"

I have just introduced a bill to waive the 6-year statute of limitations with respect to certain claims of Government employees for overtime compensation. All of these claims arise under section 23 of the act of March 28, 1934, which provided a 40-hour week for wage-board employees of the Federal Government, and overtime at the rate of time and one-half for all hours worked in excess of 40 hours a week.

The wage-board employees of the Federal Government are those engaged in the manual trades and occupations, such as carpenters, painters, electricians, and the like, whose pay is fixed by wage boards on the basis of rates prevailing in private industry. They do not include any employees who are under civil service, who are engaged in administrative or policy-making positions, or whose pay is otherwise fixed by statute. To obtain wage-board employees, the Government must compete with private industry, must also pay wages which are comparable with those paid in private industry, and must provide similar working conditions.

Throughout private industry, the 40-hour week and time and one-half for overtime have prevailed for many years. Accordingly, section 23 of the act of March 28, 1934, provided a 40-hour week and time and one-half for comparable wage-board employees of the Federal Government. The great majority of these employees have been paid on that basis ever since.

Unfortunately, a few isolated groups were mistakenly excluded from the benefits of section 23 by rulings of the Comptroller General. Among these were floating-equipment employees of the Panama Canal, and employees of the Alaska Railroad. In the Townsley case (101 C. Cls. 237; 323 U. S. 557), and the Hearne case (107 C. Cls. 335) the Panama workers established their right to the benefits of section 23.

During the first session of the last Congress, we enacted and the President approved Public Law 440, which waived the statute of limitations with respect to employees of the Alaska Railroad. The test case, which will govern the claims of all employees of the Alaska Railroad, was recently decided by the Court of Claims, which held that these employees were likewise entitled to the benefits of section 23. Because of Public Law 440, all of these employees will now be able to recover the overtime compensation of which they were wrongfully deprived by an erroneous decision of the Comptroller General.

The only other large group of wage-board employees who were deprived of the benefits of section 23, of which we have definite knowledge, were the employees of the Alaska Road Commission. These employees are typical wage-board employees. However, they were deprived of the benefits provided under section 23 by administrative action. About 2 years ago one of these employees made demand on the Department of the Interior for overtime compensation under section 23, and the Solicitor of the Interior Department ruled that he was entitled to recover. Thereafter, several claimants filed claims with the Comptroller General, who likewise ruled that they were entitled to the benefits of section 23. These claims were certified to Congress for appropriations. Apparently because of the pendency of the Alaska Railroad case, however, the House Committee on Appropriations refused to approve an appropriation to pay these claims, and advised the claimants to sue in the Court of Claims. The controlling statute of limitations gives the court jurisdiction to hear only claims which have accrued within 6 years of the date of filing in the court. Practically all of these claims accrued during the early thirties and were terminated by the Federal Employees' Pay Act of 1945, which provided a 40-hour week and time and one-half for practically all Federal employees. The situation with respect to the Alaska Roads Commission employees, therefore, is as follows: Congress will not appropriate funds to pay claims approved by the Comptroller General, but recommends that the claimants sue in the Court of Claims; the Court of Claims cannot hear the claims because of the statute of limitations. It is manifest that here is an injustice, resulting from a procedural statute, which Congress should correct.

The bill I have introduced would correct that injustice. It would simply authorize the Court of Claims to hear these claims, and to award these employees the compensation to which they were clearly entitled. However, the merits of the claims would still have to be decided by the court, and my bill would not compel the court to adjudicate them in favor of the employees. It would simply provide them with their day in court.

Since Congress has already waived the statute with respect to employees of the Alaska Railroad, there is certainly no sound reason why Congress should, by inaction, discriminate against the employees of the Alaska Road Commission.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENT ENTITLED "BASIC DATA RELATING TO ENERGY RESOURCES"

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 61), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That the committee print entitled "Basic Data Relating to Energy Resources," printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, be printed as a Senate document.

REVIEW OF BOOK, THE PURSUIT OF PLENTY

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, over the entire world unrest and wars are tied to the desire of hungry millions for food, clothing, and shelter.

Even inside our own country we are met on every side with shortages which imperil us in peace and in war. Solutions for this besetting problem are sought by scholars, statesmen, and public figures everywhere. The citizens of our own country are deeply concerned as to the future of the resources on which our prosperity depends.

Senators will, therefore, be particularly interested in a very recent study of this most basic of all problems, a book entitled "The Pursuit of Plenty," written by A. G. Mezerik, the author of The Revolt of the South and West, which did so much to clarify the problems of two of our great regions inside this country.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

In The Pursuit of Plenty, Mr. Mezerik has produced a program as well as an analysis which, if adopted, would benefit all of us in the United States and indeed create the conditions for abundance and peace throughout the entire world.

Newspapers, fellow Senators, and leading figures in this country and abroad have already commended the book. My own great interest in the development of the Missouri Valley, which in Mr. Mezerik's mind is so important, has given the book special significance to me. The Pursuit of Plenty is well described in the review written by the eminent professor of economics at Harvard, Mr. Seymour Harris, which recently appeared in the Sunday New York Times.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this review be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the review was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PURSUIT OF PLENTY: THE STORY OF MAN'S EXPANDING DOMAIN (BY A. G. MEZERIK; 203 PAGES; NEW YORK; HARPER & BROS.)

(By Seymour E. Harris)

This is an absorbing, instructive, important, and angry book. Having once opened it, few will find it possible to drop it or dismiss its message. The book is essentially a defense of the rights of the public against those of private interests which block the full development of our resources. In the author's view, we can have both 2,500,000,000 people in the world and a high standard of living.

Man is not outmoded. Research, planning, integration of programs, use of public funds to develop resources that must escape private exploiters——these are the paths to a fuller life for all the people. This is the answer to the Neo-Malthusians who seem to multiply now.

In the opinion of Mezerik, author of The Revolt of South and West, it is necessary to restrain despoilers and obstructionists: Timber barons who by cutting indiscriminately bring floods and erosion; corporations which introduce synthetic scarcities of oil and fertilizers; the utilities which block river development in order to maintain high prices for power; Army engineers who rely on dikes and levees and sandbags, thus corseting the river, instead of attacking the problem at its source (e. g., deforestation); professional economizers who prefer pollution of the air—smog—to purification.

The book is buttressed by facts of great interest which are not easily marshaled. Thus Texas, first in oil and gas, is forty-eighth in the control of pellagra (disease of malnutrition), thirty-eighth in public school systems, forty-seventh in public library systems.

The Missouri Valley development is the author's great interest. Here is an area of 500,000 square miles which contains 90 percent of the phosphate ore in the United States, or one-half the world's supply; a trillion tons of lignite in South Dakota alone (enough to cover the Nation's needs for 6,000 years); 400,000,000,000 tons of lignite and bituminous coal deposits in Montana, and 850,000,000 tons of manganese lining the Missouri River from Pierre, S. Dak., to the Nebraska border; one-half the Nation's wheat and rye and a large part of the livestock. Although power and water are required to maintain and develop this area, the Pick-Sloan plan proposes the development of but one-third of the 25,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours potential.

In his discussion of permanent (renewable) resources awaiting development, Mezerik is especially eloquent. He speaks of wood for sugar and algae of fresh and salt water for additional food; utilization of energy of the sun (the two-trillionth part our planet receives is worth about $2,000,000,000 a minute); synthesization of chlorophyll for plants; the great advances in using solar heat; desalting salt water.

Compare this volume with the statements of the opposition and make up your mind. We owe a great debt to Dewey Anderson, of the Public Affairs Institute, and James Patton, of the Farmers Union, and the Railroad Brotherhood for sponsoring this rich volume.

THE CENTRAL ARIZONA PROJECT

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks in the body of the RECORD a letter dated January 20, 1951, which my colleague from California [Mr. NIXON] and I wrote to the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Oscar L. Chapman, relative to Senate bill 75, dealing with the so-called central Arizona project. The letter requests that certain questions annexed to it be answered. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed a letter written on the same day by my colleague and me to Mr. Frederick J. Lawton, Director, Bureau of the Budget, raising certain questions.

I may say, Mr. President, for the information of the Senate that the bill dealing with this project, the cost of which will run well over $700,000,000 and perhaps over $1,000,000,000, was, as I understand, ordered reported on yesterday or the day before by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs without a hearing.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 20, 1951.

Hon. OSCAR L. CHAPMAN,
Secretary of the Interior,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: We are informed that the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs has requested you to submit a report on the bill S. 75, Eighty-second Congress, first session, which was introduced by Senator MCFARLAND on January 8, 1951, and referred to the committee.

Although differing in some respects, the bill above referred to is substantially the same as a bill, S. 75, which was passed by the Senate on February 21, 1950. It would authorize the so-called Central Arizona project.

The only report on this proposed Central Arizona project by the Department of the Interior is that submitted to the Congress on September 16, 1948 (Project Planning Report No. 3-8b, 4-2, dated December 1947), which was subsequently printed in part in House Document No. 136, Eighty-first Congress, first session. The bill S. 75 now pending and referred to you for report would authorize a project which is different in certain important respects from that presented in the Department's report above referred to.

The reports which you have heretofore submitted on the bill S. 75 pursuant to previous requests, viz: Letter of March 18, 1949, to chairman of Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, and letter of April 20, 1950, to chairman of the House Public Lands Committee, have not presented any facts and figures on the project which the bill would authorize under the terms provided therein. The result is that neither the committee nor the Congress, in considering this legislation, have had the benefit of a feasibility report by the Secretary of the Interior on the project which the bill S. 75 would authorize.

Attached hereto is a list of questions with respect to the proposed central Arizona project. It is respectfully suggested that answers to these questions be incorporated in your report on S. 75, Eighty-second Congress, first session. It is requested in any case that you furnish us with specific answers to the questions sufficiently in advance to the Senate hearings so that we will be fully prepared to discuss the problem before the committee.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND.
RICHARD M. NIXON.

QUESTIONS SUBMITTED BY SENATORS KNOWLAND AND NIXON TO THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR WITH RESPECT TO CENTRAL ARIZONA PROJECT AS PROPOSED TO BE AUTHORIZED BY SENATE BILL 75, EIGHTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION (ACCOMPANYING LETTER OF JANUARY 20, 1951)

1. (a) What features, works, and facilities would be authorized by the bill S. 75, and in what particulars do these differ from those proposed in the Department's report on the central Arizona project (H. Doc. 136, 81st Cong., 1st sess.)? (Specify and describe all features.)

(b) What specific works and facilities would be authorized under the general authorizations provided in the bill, including page 2, lines 12 and 13, and lines 19 to 21, inclusive, and on page 3, lines 5 to 11, inclusive?

2. What are the estimated construction costs (at current prices) of the entire project and the individual units thereof that would be authorized by S. 75?

3. What are the estimated annual costs (at current prices) of operation, maintenance, and reserve for replacement (by units and in total)?

4. What are the estimated allocations of construction costs and of annual costs (by units and functions)?

5. What are the amounts of power output and water supply that would be furnished by the project (by units)?

6. What are the estimated revenues of the project, separately for power, irrigation, municipal water supply, or other sources, and the bases and derivation thereof?

7. What are the financial aspects as to repayment ability of the project? (Please furnish detailed financial analyses.)

8. In the hearings on S. 75 (81st Cong., 1st sess.) before the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Senator MCFARLAND made the following statement (printed hearing, p. 35):

"According to the report, if this water supply is made available for the project, 73,500 of the 105,790 acres formerly irrigated but now idle for lack of irrigation, can be irrigated. In addition to this amount, as shown in table B-5 of the report, it would be possible to sustain irrigation of an additional 152,520 acres which would otherwise have to be retired from irrigation. This would mean a total of 226,020 acres, which would otherwise be compelled to remain forever idle, could be maintained in production by this project."

(a) Does Senator MCFARLAND'S statement correctly and accurately summarize the statements and figures appearing in the report of the Bureau of Reclamation (Project Planning Report No. 3-8b, 4-2, dated December 1947) on the central Arizona project, including tables B-5, B-23, and B-24 and pertinent statements in the text?

(b) Based upon the Bureau's estimates, what is the construction cost of the central Arizona project allocated to irrigation, per acre, on the 226,000 acres of land that would be maintained in production by the project?

9. In accordance with the statements and figures submitted in the report of the Bureau of Reclamation on the central Arizona project, viz, pages C–41 and C–48 of the appendix of the report (not printed) and page 140 of House Document 136 (81st Cong., 1st sess.), what is the reasonable value of general crop farming land in the project area with a full irrigation supply?

10. Based upon the figures set forth in the Bureau's report on the Central Arizona project, which show (table B–24 and p. B–85, appendixes) that water would be made available by the project for the irrigation of 73,000 acres of lands formerly irrigated but now idle for lack of water, in the amount of 418,000 acre-feet, or about 39 percent of a total of 1,070,000 acre-feet a year that would be furnished by the project for irrigation, what is the amount of the project construction cost allocated to irrigation that is attributable to the 73,000 acres, and the corresponding cost per acre?

11. What part of the construction cost allocated to irrigation is to be paid by the irrigators?

12. How much of the construction cost is to be repaid from revenues from sale of commercial power?

13. How much of the cost allocated to irrigation features is to be repaid by the use of the interest component on cost of power features?

14. Under section 5 of the bill, would the same rate for irrigation water be charged to areas now possessing distribution systems as to those areas for which distribution systems must be constructed, or would the farmers for whom distribution systems would be constructed have to pay an additional charge over the $4.75 rate per acre-foot shown in the Secretary's report on the project?

15. Does S. 75 provide for repayment by the farmers of the construction cost of distribution and drainage system under repayment contracts as required by the reclamation law?

16. What is the estimated construction cost, and the annual cost (including amortization, annual carrying charges, operation, maintenance, and replacement reserve and all other costs) in total and per kilowatt-hour, for the power to be used for project pumping delivered at pumping plants?

17. What is the commercial value of the power to be used for project pumping?

18. How is the power to be used for project pumping to be financed or paid for?

19. Without upstream storage for river regulation and sediment control, what is the estimated useful life of the Bridge Canyon Reservoir and power plant?

20. What would be the annual firm power output of Bridge Canyon Power plant, without use of any downstream capacity to firm up Bridge output, and without upstream reservoir storage in operation for river regulation and sediment control?

21. What would be the annual firm power output of the Bridge Canyon Power plant with Glen Canyon Reservoir, as currently proposed, constructed, and in operation?

22. In view of the Secretary's statement that no sediment should be allowed to enter Bridge Canyon Reservoir that can be prevented, and of the recognized dependence of Bridge Canyon Power development upon Glen Canyon Reservoir for sediment control as well as necessary river regulation, should not Glen Canyon Reservoir be constructed and placed in operation concurrently with the Bridge Canyon Dam and power plant?

23. Will you please submit a financial analysis of the irrigation, power, and other features of the project that would be authorized by S. 75, conforming to the recommendations in the report of the President's Water Resources Policy Commission?

24. Will you please state the amendments to S. 75 which would be required to bring it into conformity with the recommendations of the President's Water Resources Policy Commission?

JANUARY 20, 1951.

Mr. FREDERICK J. LAWTON,
Director, Bureau of the Budget,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LAWTON: On January 8, 1951, a bill, S. 75 (82d Cong., 1st sess.), was introduced in the Senate, which would authorize the so-called Central Arizona project. This is substantially the same as the bill, S. 75, which at last year's session of Congress passed the Senate but failed to receive favorable action in the House Public Lands Committee.

We are informed that the chairman of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee has requested the Secretary of the Interior for a report on this bill. It is presumed that the Secretary's report, before transmittal, will be referred to you for consideration and comment.

The most recent communication of the Bureau of the Budget with respect to S. 75 and the Central Arizona project appears to be your letter of April 19, 1950, to the chairman of the House Public Lands Committee. In that letter, you state:

"The Budget Director has commented on the Central Arizona project in previous letters: To the Secretary of the Interior, on February 4, 1949; to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, on February 11, 1949; and to the Secretary of the Interior, on April 20, 1949. Copies of these letters are attached for convenient reference. These letters raised two main questions about the project.

"The first question raised was whether there is enough water in the Colorado River, available for use in Arizona, to satisfy the needs of this project on a permanent basis. The President has stated many times that he would like to see a definitive settlement of the rights of the various States to waters of the Colorado River system, in order that decisions on projects to be developed in the public interest may be made on a firm basis with respect to water rights. The President consistently has indicated his unwillingness to take any position favorable to authorization of the Central Arizona project until settlement of the water-rights controversy has been brought about.

"S. 75, in its present form, is intended to provide one means by which this controversy might be settled. I am unable to express to the committee at this time any views concerning the efficacy of the bill for this purpose.

"The second question raised in the previous letters of the Budget Director, particularly the letter of February 4, 1949, related to the economic feasibility of the project as outlined in the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

"S. 75, as passed by the Senate, would authorize a project which is different in certain respects from that outlined in the Secretary of the Interior's report on the central Arizona project. The bill provides for a tunnel and canal between Bridge Canyon and Cunningham Wash, and emits authorization for construction of a dam at the bluff site on the San Juan River. It omits certain nonreimbursable cost allocations. Taking these changes into account, the comments on economic feasibility made in the previous letters of the Budget Director still apply to the project which would be authorized by S. 75."

The Budget Director's letter of February 4, 1949, contains the following statement:

"From an examination of the report, of the comments of the affected States, and of the remarks of other interested Federal agencies, it is apparent that there are a number of important questions and unresolved issues connected with the proposed central Arizona project. The provision of adequate water supply, if found to be available, is admittedly a high-cost venture which is justified in the report essentially on the basis of an urgent need to eliminate the threat of a serious disruption of the area's economy. Even so, the life of certain major parts of the project is appreciably less than the recommended 78-year pay-out period. The work could be authorized only with a modification of existing law or as an exception thereto. Furthermore, there is no assurance that there will exist the 'extremely important element' of a substantial quantity of Colorado River water available for diversion to central Arizona for irrigation and other purposes.

"The foregoing summary and the project report have been reviewed by the President. He has instructed me to advise you that authorization of the improvement is not in accord with his program at this time and that he again recommends that measures be taken to bring about prompt settlement of the water-rights controversy."

It would be greatly appreciated if you would inform us whether the views of the Bureau of the Budget, as expressed in the foregoing, still apply to the project proposed to be authorized by the pending bill, S. 75.

In your letter of April 19, 1950, to the chairman of the House Public Lands Committee, you also refer to the President's Water Resources Policy Commission and the president's position in his budget message to the Congress in January 1950 as affecting authorization of projects involving basic policy questions. Will you please advise us whether, in your opinion, the report of the President's Water Resources Policy Commission changes the views of the Bureau of the Budget in regard to economic feasibility of the central Arizona project as proposed to be authorized by S. 75 (82d Cong., 1st sess.).

There is enclosed a copy of our letter to the Secretary of the Interior, stating several questions with respect to this project. We suggest that the subject matter of these questions be covered in the Department's report on S. 75. Whether that is done or not, we request that the Secretary furnish us with specific answers to these questions. It would seem appropriate that his reply be routed through the Bureau of the Budget, in view of the previous connection of your office with this problem.

You will note that some of our questions are intended to bring about a presentation of the project which accords with the recommendations of the President's Water Resources Policy Commission. Consideration of S. 75 by the Congress would appear to be premature until the recommendations of that Commission can be translated into legislative proposals and the policy questions determined on a Nation-wide basis instead of by piecemeal project legislation, as was so well pointed out in the President's budget message of a year ago.

We would appreciate an early reply to our letter so that we will be fully prepared to discuss the problem before the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND.
RICHARD M. NIXON.

Mr. KNOWLAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have included in the RECORD, at the point where appear the prior insertions made by me today in regard to the central Arizona project, a copy of a letter which I addressed so the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, enclosing copies of correspondence which my colleague the junior Senator from California [Mr. NIXON] and I addressed to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget with respect to Senate bill 75. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at the same point in the RECORD a copy of Senate Joint Resolution No. 1, passed by the Legislature of the State of California, in regard to this matter.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 30, 1951.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: I am enclosing copies of correspondence which Senator NIXON and I have directed to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget with respect to S. 75.

I would appreciate it if the committee would withhold scheduling hearings on this bill until replies to the attached correspondence are received and Senator NIXON and I have had the opportunity to study the answers. As you know, California and Nevada feel that a Supreme Court decision should be rendered, interpreting certain of the basic documents affecting the Colorado River, before Congress takes any action to authorize a project which will cost hundreds of millions of dollars and where the question of water rights of all of the parties concerned are not crystal clear.

With best personal regards,

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND.

Senate Joint Resolution 1

Joint resolution relating to the central Arizona project

Whereas there is pending before the Congress of the United States a bill which would authorize construction of the central Arizona reclamation project; and

Whereas no provision is made for payment by the project of any part of the interest on the national debt, which would be incurred to construct the project; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior has reported that he estimates the cost of the project at $708,000,000 and the time for the recovery of the principal at 75 years and, therefore, that the project would cost the taxpayers of the United States for interest alone, at 2½ percent per annum, in excess of $2,000,000,000; and

Whereas the taxpayers of California would be required to pay in excess of $172,000,000 of such interest; and

Whereas the central Arizona project is designed to provide irrigation at exorbitant cost to grow common field crops, with the result that additional taxes would be required to pay Government subsidies on such crops and such project would not, therefore, enhance the national welfare; and

Whereas the central Arizona project would require the use of 1,500,000,000 kilowatt-hours of hydroelectric power annually (the equivalent to the use of 2,500,000 barrels of fuel oil) to pump irrigation water to a height of 1,000 feet, and such use would be an economic waste of an urgently needed public resource; and

Whereas the construction cost of the irrigation features of the project alone would be many times the value of the land, when irrigated and the irrigators would not repay any part of such construction cost; and

Whereas such central Arizona project is, therefore, economically unsound; and

Whereas sufficient water for such central Arizona project could be secured only by diverting to that project water now needed to serve authorized and existing projects in the lower basin of the Colorado River; and

Whereas the diversion of water from such existing projects would jeopardize the water supply of over 4,000,000 residents of California, who, in reliance on their contracts for water executed by the United States Government, have invested more than $500,000,000 to provide facilities to enable them to use their share of water and power from the Colorado River; and

Whereas the rights of California to the use of Colorado River water have been established by prior appropriations and by contracts with the Secretary of the Interior under the Boulder Canyon Project Act, and the Secretary of the Interior has declared that "If the contentions of California are correct, there will be no dependable water supply available from the Colorado River for this diversion": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to refuse passage of any bill authorizing the central Arizona project as proposed; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to adopt legislation consenting to the joinder of the United States in an interstate suit in the Supreme Court for the determination of the water rights of the States of the lower basin of the Colorado River; and be it further

Resolved, That the Colorado River Board of California and all other agencies and officers of the State of California are directed to use all means within their power to carry out the objectives of this resolution; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President, to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States to the chairmen of appropriate congressional committees, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States.

CONTRIBUTION OF KANSAS TO LEADERSHIP OF AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, today Members of the Senate had an opportunity to get first-hand information regarding the European situation from a former Kansan, Gen. Dwight Eisenhower. General Eisenhower is not only a great soldier, a great diplomat and statesman, but he is also an outstanding educator.

The State of Kansas is proud to have been able to furnish recently Presidents for three leading universities of our Nation. Gen. Dwight Eisenhower is president of Columbia University; Dr. Milton Eisenhower is president of Penn State, and last week Cornell University came to Kansas and selected the chancelor of Kansas University, Deane Mallot, for president of their great school.

I think, also, I should mention that these three outstanding presidents were reared in the same city, Abilene, Kans.

It is only natural that we in Kansas regret to see these outstanding men leave our State, but we are proud that we as a State are able to give the Nation this type of leadership.

Columbia University, Penn State, and Cornell are to be congratulated on the wisdom shown in selecting such clear-thinking men, with high principles based on a sound spiritual background. In Kansas we produce this type of leadership.

The rugged pioneers of New England who settled in Kansas helped to give our State a great heritage of indomitable faith. The free open spaces filled with the Kansas ozone still produce such rugged individuals.

We Kansans are proud to have been able to preserve through these many years the culture and leadership of the New England fathers.

Now we are honored to send back to this same section of the country men who will revitalize and reemphasize those principles which will keep this Nation a land of free men with vision, courage, and character.

IMPROVEMENT IN GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTING—STATEMENT BY THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE, THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT, AND THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, one of the most vital requirements for the future administration of the Federal Government, if it is to cope successfully with all the vast problems confronting it, is an improvement in the handling of its finances.

It is a pleasure to report that great progress has been made on one front in this field, under a joint program of the General Accounting Office, the Treasury Department, and the Bureau of the Budget to improve accounting in the Federal Government.

A joint statement detailing some of the progress already made in this respect is contained in the attached statement, which I ask unanimous consent to have included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren, Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder, and Budget Director Frederick J. Lawton, meeting today, discussed major accomplishments under their joint program to improve the Government's accounting. Policies and objectives of the program, carried on since December 1947, are embodied in the new Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950. The officials said this act authorizes the most fundamental kind of improvements in the Government's budgeting, accounting, financial reporting, and auditing. The President cited it as the most important legislation in the budget and accounting field since the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921.

Accounting improvement and red-tape cutting under the program have been greatly accelerated by this and other legislation, such as the Post Office Department Financial Control Act of 1950. Mr. Warren called attention to abolition of GAO's Accounting and Bookkeeping Division last month, with an annual saving of nearly $1,000,000 in GAO alone. The Postal Accounts Division of GAO was abolished last November 15, and its accounting work for the Post Office Department turned over to the Department. "The GAO should never have been given those duties in the first place," said Mr. Warren. He has set up a Postal Audit Division to audit the Department. Review of GAO's organization and operations is continuing in the light of the joint program and the new accounting law.

Mr. Warren stated that he and Mr. Snyder had issued their first joint regulation under the new accounting act. It simplifies accounting for repayments to appropriations, eliminating warrants previously issued by the Treasury and countersigned by GAO. This not only saves paper work but avoids weeks of delay in making collections available for disbursement. All other phases of the warrant system are under examination for possible simplification.

Mr. Warren emphasized expansion of comprehensive on-the-site GAO audits with broader coverage, more effective results, less paper work, and reduced flow of documents into Washington. He named 16 agencies, in addition to Government corporations, for which comprehensive audits have been undertaken. These are in addition to hundreds of other on-the-site audits of vouchers and other fiscal documents. The central receipt and appropriation accounts of the Government, under recent arrangements, are being audited where the accounts are maintained in the Treasury Department.

Mr. Snyder stated the Treasury Department and the GAO are collaborating in a top-to-bottom review of Treasury accounting. This is aimed at providing the Department with the best possible system of accounting and internal control and means of producing central financial reports for the Government as required by the new accounting law. Agreement on the underlying principles is an important factor in consistency, proper disclosure, and increased understandability and usefulness of these reports.

Mr. Lawton stated that Budget-Treasury regulations dealing with apportionments and status reports on each appropriation have been completely revised.

Duplication and conflicts in reporting have been eliminated by revision of this regulation and related GAO requirements. He announced virtual completion of a joint review of agency budgeting and accounting practices undertaken at the request of the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. He also pointed out that through accounting improvements better financial information is becoming available for evaluating budget estimates and appraising performance under agency programs.

The three officials stressed that the key to lasting improvement is the cooperative work being done with all Federal agencies in improving their accounting. A report of results to date cites "truly remarkable progress" in work with 40 agencies or major subdivisions. Numerous examples of improvements are listed, including reductions in accounting costs. For the first time in law each agency is now responsible for establishing and maintaining adequate systems of accounting and internal control for its own operations.

Mr. Warren, Mr. Snyder, and Mr. Lawton cautioned, however, that the greatest value of the program lies not so much in economizing in accounting itself as in contributing to more efficient and economical management through better accounting results. They summed up progress under the program in this statement: "The improvements in accounting in individual agencies and in the Government as a whole being achieved under the joint program are basic to the President's program for the improvement of management in the executive branch. Likewise, progress under the program is providing a basis for improvement in service to the Congress by establishing a generally more reliable foundation of financial information for legislative action and an improved structure for control of the public funds."

REPORTS BY THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—STATEMENT BY SENATOR BYRD

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement regarding reports issued by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A report by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures today suggested combined action by the National Security Resources Board, the Bureau of the Budget, and Congress to conserve the use of civilian manpower by the Federal Government.

In support of this proposal the report, entitled "Federal Civilian Employment, 1950," presents facts and figures, including hitherto unavailable breakdown of Federal personnel by localities and agencies, with the following conclusions:

1. A post-World War II plateau of Federal civilian employment numbering nearly 2,000,000, with duty stations in every county of the Nation except one (Armstrong County, S. Dak.), has now become the base for post-Korean outbreak increases which, by the end of the first quarter of the fiscal year 1951 (September 1950, 90 days after Korea), were averaging more than 1,000 a day.

Unless there is a checkrein requirement for more efficient use of manpower in the Federal Government, efforts will be made by executive branch agencies to accelerate this rate of civilian employment increase for the foreseeable future. (Estimates cited by Civil Service Commissioner Frances Perkins in speech prepared for delivery October 19, 1950, at Roosevelt College, Chicago.)

Semi-war-economy demands for industrial production and the preparedness build-up requirements for Armed Forces, already have resulted in official indications that the bottom of the manpower barrel is in sight. (Statement on employment by Secretary of Commerce Sawyer, November 3, 1950.)

FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT AND COSTS

2. Original budget estimates for fiscal year 1951 (beginning last July 1) were based on calculations that Federal civilian payrolls for the current year would cost $6,700,000,000, but by the end of the first quarter in September they were running at an annual rate of approximately $7,500,000,000.

By the end of the current fiscal year, next June 30, the Federal payrolls, reflecting pay increases since 1945, will be running at an annual rate in excess of the World War II peak of $8,300,000,000. If World War II peak civilian employment were reached by the Federal Government, payrolls in the executive branch would cost $13,000,000,000.

FEDERAL MANPOWER AND SECURITY

3. Congress, in the National Security Act of 1947, anticipated the recurrence of need for conservation and coordination to meet civilian and military requirements under military emergency and war economy conditions and establish the National Security Resources Board with this as its primary concern.

It is fundamental to the purpose of the National Security Resources Board that it be informed as to the military requirements. Under current and foreseeable conditions, the Board is concerned with civilian manpower—its potential supply and the potential requirement for it; its most effective mobilization and its maximum utilization.

Under current and foreseeable conditions, the Board is concerned with Federal departments and agencies—with unifying their activities pertaining to production, procurement, distribution, or transportation of military or civilian supplies, materials, and products.

Under current and foreseeable conditions, the Board is concerned with the civilian economy—its adjustment to war needs and conditions.

In brief, the National Security Resources Board, under the law and under current and foreseeable conditions, must be cognizant of the requirements for the most efficient use of manpower, adjustment of the civilian economy, and the principal activities of the Federal Government for which civilian employment is used; and therefore it should be the most competent agency to determine the need and justification for increased Federal civilian employment and its relative priority.

FEDERAL MANPOWER AND EFFICIENCY

4. Close surveillance over the activities, proposals, and practices of Federal departments and agencies with respect to the matters which are of concern to the National Security Resources Board should be an effective and constructive approach to determining what is currently essential, to the registration of changed or changing conditions, to stimulating efficiency in operations, and to signifying other developments.

The findings of the National Security Resources Board in connection with activities, proposals, and practices of Federal departments and agencies should be additional evidence on which the Director of the Budget, under the Appropriations Act recently passed, could act to reduce expenditures whenever possible through changes in requirements, greater efficiency of operations, and other developments.

This would be in the interest of national security at any time, but it would be especially desirable when the solvency of the Nation is the object of sinister attack by its potential, if not actual, military adversary.

The purpose of the report is to be helpful to legislative committees of Congress and agencies of the executive branch which, in the current semi-war-economy and preparedness build-up, are concerned with vigilance against nonessential Federal civilian employment and the conservation of the Nation's manpower through most effective use and distribution to assure the required armed force and vital industrial production.

Facts developed by the report are in three parts: (1) Pre-Korea, (2) Post-Korea, and (3) In prospect.

Pre-Korea facts show Federal civilian employment in the period just prior to the outbreak in Korea by (a) over-all coverage; (b) post-World War II low; (c) assignment inside and outside continental United States; (d) category, distinguishing between those employed for industrial-type work and those employed for clerical, professional, and other nonindustrial work; and (e) spread throughout the country—areas of concentration, degree of dispersal, and extent to which various agencies and departments were decentralized or engaged in field activities—and by payroll costs.

Post-Korea facts show increases in Federal civilian employment by major groups and categories as of September 1950—90 days after the outbreak in Korea— and increase in payroll costs as of the same date.

In-prospect facts show (a) an estimate of Federal employment increases in prospect incident to the current semi-war-economy and preparedness policies and programs and others; (b) an official estimate of the manpower situation; (c) a calculation of Federal civilian payroll costs in terms of prospective increases; and (d) statutes already enacted and administrative interpretations already made which could be invoked as measures for more efficient use of manpower by the Federal Government, and its conservation through maximum productive utilization, with reduction in cost.

In the course of developing the pre-Korea facts the report for the first time compiled reports by Federal agencies on their civilian employment in all of the localities of the Nation. These figures were officially reported by the various agencies of the Government, but in many instances the information was not available at the departmental level in Washington. Under the circumstances, latest available reports were accepted from the field to save money and time. While the locality figures do not add to a firm total due to variations in reporting dates, they may be regarded as guides to employment density during the period immediately preceding the Korean outbreak.

The Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures is composed of Members of the House and Senate appropriations and tax committees from the legislative branch, and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Budget representing revenue and spending agencies of the executive branch. In individual views the representatives of the executive branch concurred in the facts presented in the report, but declined to concur in the recommendations.

A report by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures today called for complete and regular reports of all real property owned and occupied by executive branch departments and agencies to centralized government-wide records, and for control and allocation of office space, at least in emergencies, by a single agency.

The purpose of the report, entitled "Federal Office Space 1950" is to be "helpful to committees of Congress and departments and agencies of the executive branch, which, in the current semi-war-economy and preparedness build-up, are concerned with the conservation of office and related-use space and its cost through maximum utilization and effective distribution."

Facts and findings contained in the report, indicating the level and expanse to which Federal agencies occupied office and related-use space prior to the outbreak in Korea; indicating Federal rent and utilities costs; and pointing up the fact that this post-World-War II plateau has now become the base from which increases are rising in response to the new demands, may be summarized as follows:

1. Executive branch departments and agencies of the Federal Government before the outbreak in Korea were occupying at least a quarter of a billion square feet of office and related-use space spread out through virtually every community in continental United States.

2. The area of office space reported to centralized Government-wide records before the impact of the outbreak in Korea would average more than the office space area of an Empire State Building for each State. And more space was excluded from the centralized Government-wide records of the General Services Administration than was reported to them—the result of major exceptions made in Reorganization Plan 18 of July 1, 1950, providing for centralization of Federal space records and control.

3. As the second quarter of fiscal year 1951 began, 90 days after the outbreak in Korea, the General Services Administration was finding difficulty in supplying demands which had already developed at that time. In the face of increasing demands for office and related-use space under the current semi-war economy and preparedness build-up policies and programs, the General Services Administration, as of November 1950, found space in federally owned buildings outside of Washington to be practically nonexistent; that good privately owned space with few exceptions was not to be had in any large or moderate-sized cities, and that practically all space in first-class office buildings under construction has been spoken for by private interests.

4. Prices for rent were found to be mounting with no sign of leveling off.

5. Information on the cost of rents and utilities for the Federal Government on a centralized Government-wide basis was just as inadequate as it was for the office and related-use space itself, but apparently the Government before the outbreak in Korea was spending more than $100,000,000 for rent—office space and otherwise—and utilities, exclusive of $90,000,000 in Military Establishment expenditures for these items.

6. Even under ordinary conditions, and especially under emergency and preparation for emergency conditions, centralization of records and control of office and related-use space is inadequate to assume conservation through allocation on the basis of need, requirement of efficient use, or economy in acquisition and maintenance.

FEDERAL SPACE BY METROPOLITAN AREAS

Facts developed by the report were in three parts: (1) "Pre-Korea," (2) "Post-Korea," and (3) "In Prospect."

In developing the pre-Korea facts the report presents a breakdown by metropolitan areas all over the United States insofar as possible from centralized Government-wide records. However inadequate information precluded such a breakdown of space occupied by Federal agencies on military reservations, special purpose reservations such as veterans' facilities, scientific laboratories, etc., and much of the space occupied by the post office.

Post-Korea facts developed by the report indicate: (1) The supply and demand situation with respect to acquisition of additional space for office and related purposes as of November 1950; (2) the cost situation with respect to property being rented by the Federal Government as of the same date; and (3) the increased level of Federal civilian employment as of the beginning of the second quarter of fiscal year 1951 (October 1950) 3 months after the outbreak in Korea.

In prospect facts developed by the report indicate: (1) The probable increase in demands for office and related use space incident to the current semiwar-economy and preparedness policies and programs, as well as other policies and programs; (2) the rising cost of rentals to the Federal Government; and (3) the rising level of Federal employment, which in some measure is related to requirements for office and related-use space.

The Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures is composed of members of the House and Senate appropriations and tax committees from the legislative branch, and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget representing revenue and spending agencies in the executive branch. In individual views the Secretary of the Treasury concurred in the facts presented in the report, but declined to concur in the recommendations. The Director of the Budget concurred in the facts and found the recommendations to be sound. In a letter expressing additional views General Services Administrator Jess Larson went further than the report to advocate centralized control and allocation of space at all times rather than in emergency periods only.

A VOLUNTEER FREEDOM ARMY

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes to comment on the proposal which has been made for establishing a volunteer freedom army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Virginia may proceed.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, it is my hope that our State Department and our Defense Department will give serious consideration to two bills introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and six of his colleagues to utilize foreign anti-Communist volunteers in the building of our defensive army in Western Europe. One of them is simply a modification of the existing law which I supported when it was passed. It extends the program from the present terminal date of 1953 to 1955 and increases the authorized ceiling from 2,500 to 25,000 men. That group will be very carefully selected men competent to be officers and noncommissioned officers and after 5 years of honorable service in our army abroad will be eligible for American citizenship. Members of that group can be used in any assignment designed to promote the best interests of the United States.

The second bill authorizes the creation of a volunteer freedom group of 250,000 men. They will be recruited for wartime service only and perhaps for use in Europe only. They would not have the same privileges of pay or status as those in the first bill. When it is recalled that a private in the French Army is paid about 3 cents a day and the pay in all European armies is notoriously low, the tremendous savings to us in the recruiting of the proposed volunteer freedom corps of 250,000 men is apparent. In fact, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] proposes that the limit be fixed at a million men. Many believe that more than a million volunteers could be secured from the satellite countries.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] when he introduced these two bills stated:

> One vital element of the struggle for existence in which we are now engaged relates to the question of who does the fighting. It is made especially acute by the fact that our opponent fights without expending his own manpower. We Americans, on the other hand, have been required to shed the blood of our own young manhood in order to combat those who fight at our opponent's bidding. One of the most urgent questions of our time is therefore: How long we can tolerate an arrangement in which we, in terms of manpower, can never win, and they, in the same terms, can never lose?

Of course, it must not be assumed that the adoption of the above plan would relieve us of the necessity of training our own boys, but I am firmly convinced that in a joint effort to defend the freedom of democratic nations our major contribution should be a powerful Navy, a powerful Air Force, and a productive capacity which we know cannot be met by the Soviets even though they control some 800,000,000 people of the world. In terms of material things we are by far the richest people in the world but our greatest treasure is our manpower.

VOLUNTEER FREEDOM CORPS AND THE DRAFT

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Soviet use of satellite troops and the impending presentation of the bill for compulsory military service and training are two events which have brought the matter of enlisting aliens in the United States Army once again to the fore.

I have received many queries from Senators and others in the past few weeks reflecting their keen interest in this subject. It is pertinent, therefore, to give a review of the history of this topic and give a clear idea as to just what results can and what results cannot be expected to flow from it.

The first legislation proposed on this subject since World War II was the bill which I proposed in November 1947 authorizing the enlistment of aliens in the United States Army. The Senate, by a vote of 43 to 33, incorporated this proposal as an amendment to the 1948 Selective Service Act, but it was dropped in conference. In August 1949 the Senate again approved a similar bill authorizing the enlistment of 25,000 aliens, providing eligibility for American ctizenship at the end of a 5-year enlistment. These men were to be very carefully selected and would be, it was hoped, material for noncommissioned and commissioned officers. It was the plan to take these young men and train them as artillerymen, tankmen, and infantrymen so that with their professional knowledge, and their knowledge of languages and customs, they would be able to integrate and regiment the mass of stateless anti-Communist young men in the event of war. The figure in this Senate-approved bill was reduced by the House to 2,500 from 25,000 and last June 1950 it was signed by the President.

This proposal was always completely nonpolitical and nonpartisan. The cosponsor with me was Representative PHILIP PHILBIN, of Massachusetts, a Democrat, and the bill was signed by the President. It was strongly supported by the Chief of Staff of the Army, General Collins, who appeared before both the Senate and the House Armed Services Committees to testify for it.

On January 8, at this session of the Eighty-second Congress, a group of Senators from both parties, including the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], and myself, introduced two bills. The first is S. 239, which would expand the category under the Lodge-Philbin Act from 2,500 to 25,000 men. This same group also sponsored another bill, S. 238, which would set up a Volunteer Freedom Corps of 250,000 men, to be enlisted abroad, to train abroad, to serve abroad, and to be discharged abroad, whose enlistment would be for only 2 years, and who would not have the citizen privilege, except by being selected for inclusion in the first category under the Lodge-Philbin Act. Of course, in that event they would have the citizen privilege. The men who would be selected for the Volunteer Freedom Corps obviously would be more hastily enlisted and could not be so carefully screened.

On January 22 the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] introduced a bill, S. 609, which is identical in language with many parts of the bills introduced by our group of Senators on January 8. However, differences do exist, and the provisions of the bill introduced by the Senator from Colorado do not seem so good or so satisfactory as those in the bill which the group of Senators, mentioned by me, have sponsored. I should like to point out some of the differences. The principal differences between our bill and that of the Senator from Colorado are as follows:

First. The Johnson bill provides for 1,000,000 men, all in one category. Our proposal, based upon the existing authorization of 2,500 men, would expand the officer category to 25,000, and would have a Volunteer Freedom Corps, serving only abroad, without citizenship privileges, and a 2-year enlistment of 250,000 men. We do not propose the figure of 250,000 because we think there are only 250,000 eligible men. We think there are 2,000,000 anti-Communist stateless young men in Europe. However, we do not provide for a milion, or 2,000,000, because the administration has not yet been able to take in even the 2,500 which the law now permits, apparently due to some doubt concerning the effect of the McCarran Act on the Lodge-Philbin Act. Moreover, there is no point in having a huge unorganized and unassimilated mass of young men, which would inevitably result if we did not first create the officer leadership.

In World War II the German Army, and this is an interesting and little-known chapter of World War II, had the services of a very able anti-Communist Russian general, General Vlasov. There were several million anti-Communist Russians available for service in the German Army, but General Vlasov could take only a small number of them because there was not a sufficient number of qualified German officers available to integrate and organize them.

Another reason for not enlisting more than 250,000 men in the United States Army is that there is a real psychological value in having many of these young men join the proposed European army. The reason for having 250,000 in the United States Army as soon as possible is that the United States Army is very much a going concern, whereas the European army, as distinct from the Atlantic army, is still only on paper. It should be possible, however, by next year to have a European army which was sufficiently well established to take many of these young men, and this might be more in accord with the long-range interests of the United States.

Second. The legislation proposed by us sets no limit on nationality. It is based on the principle that the United States should be enabled to accept the services of any anti-Communist young man, whether he is a Chinese Nationalist or a Chinese guerrilla in the Far East, or whether he is an anti-Communist stateless Slav in Europe. We do not care what his nationality is provided he meets the other requirements. The bill of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], on the other hand, is limited to Germans, Poles, and Czechs.

The provision with respect to the Germans is of particular interest. I understand that it is not practical because there is pending a revision of the German penal code which would make it a penal offense to solicit a German to join a foreign army. Certainly, the Germans have made it very clear, and the news coming from Europe has made it very clear, that in the building of the Atlantic army the Germans must be taken in on the basis of equality. General Eisenhower this morning called it "earned equality," and he said he did not want to have any unwilling soldiers in his command. This principle has been accepted even by nations which have had a very unhappy relationship with the Germans. The Germans would regard a proposal to put them into a foreign army as an attempt to make second-class citizens of them. There seems to be no doubt that good results cannot be obtained from the Germans on any basis other than that of equality. To do otherwise would bring about the exact type of resistance which we are now trying to overcome.

The limitation in the Johnson bill to only three nationalities also very drastically restricts its use as a possible vehicle for setting up an underground among satellite nations. Certainly one vital purpose of this type of legislation is to afford encouragement and help to all those who are now yearning for freedom and to assist the democratic element behind the iron curtain.

Our bill does not look to a military contribution only. The young men could make a very effective political contribution. To limit the bill to the three nationalities proposed in the Johnson bill would very much restrict the opportunity for accomplishment of such a purpose.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I presume it would be appropriate to incorporate in the Senator's remarks at this point the report of General Eisenhower to the effect that the question of equality for Germans should be considered as vital. Such consideration certainly is not contemplated in the Johnson proposal, for it would seem to prescribe a very definite limitation in that respect.

Mr. LODGE. I think the able Senator from Maine is entirely right. He has put his finger on what I regard as an important weakness in the Johnson bill.

Third. The age limit in both bills is the same.

Fourth. Our bill provides for single men with no dependents but the bill of the Senator from Colorado authorizes married men and dependents which I think adds a great many needless complications. The provisions for single men was not in my original bill in the Eightieth Congress. It was inserted by the Senate Armed Services Committee in the last Congress, after careful consideration, for reasons which I thought were sound.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Fifth. The prize of citizenship in our bill is only for a highly selected group, including transferees from the Volunteer Freedom Corps to this more special class. Under the bill of the Senator from Colorado it is for all, including their families. The bill of the Senator from Colorado, on the other hand, provides that no one shall be enlisted "until it has been determined after careful investigation that such persons will render loyal service to the United States, and will not constitute a questionable risk from the standpoint of national security."

This provision seems to me effectively to nullify the Johnson bill. We could not hope to enlist a large number of troops abroad if we had to first make a careful screening of every individual. Even the United States Army does not make a security check on every man in the Army, for the very simple reason that such a task would be impossible. Yet, certainly, a person should not be admitted to citizenship without a careful screening. The proper course is to screen those in the first category, whom we hope to make into noncommissioned and commissioned officers, and to whom we intend to give citizenship. At the same time we should give an opportunity to the outstanding young men in the other class to get into the first, or top, group. Then we should set up the relatively unscreened mass of the Voluntary Freedom Corps abroad, and keep it abroad.

Sixth. The enlistment period in our bill is for 5 years for the officer group, and 2 years for the Volunteer Freedom Corps, whereas in the Johnson bill there is only one classification, and it is for 5 years for everyone.

Seventh. Our bill requires the concurrence of the State Department, whereas the Johnson bill does not contain such requirement for the enlistment program. Obviously it would be necessary to have the cooperation of the State Department, because there could be no greater interference with the foreign policy of a sovereign state than to start enlisting its manpower in our Army. Large questions of foreign policy are involved. It would be impossible to do what we propose to do without the cooperation of the State Department. In fairness it should be stated that delay in the administration of the Lodge-Philbin law is not because of any dilatoriness on the part of the State Department, but is being caused by the Justice Department. The State Department has already approved the program.

Eighth. In our bill pay in the Volunteer Freedom Corps is at the discretion of the Secretary of the Army, and cannot exceed the pay of United States citizens. Under the Johnson bill it is the same as for United States citizens. I do not think we need to pay such men compensation nearly so high as we pay our own citizens, and I do not think we should.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is true that practically all the other armies in the world, particularly European armies, have very much lower pay scales than we have in this country. From their point of view they are entirely accustomed to a very different standard of pay than that which has developed in this country under our conditions.

Mr. LODGE. There is no question that that is true. Of course, the pay of a soldier is a reflection of and is integrated into the whole civilization and society from which he springs. In my opinion, the argument for paying the men in the Volunteer Freedom Corps the same as United States citizens is not a sound plan. I think the Senator from Maine is absolutely correct.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think we might say that it is not typical of the prudence which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] himself usually exhibits in these matters. That is why I feel rather confident that he may concur with our viewpoint, that it is unnecessary and extravagant.

Mr. LODGE. I am sorry that the able Senator from Colorado is not present in the Chamber, because he could contribute a great deal to this debate. He has always been so willing to be influenced by good arguments and facts that he might come around to the point made by the Senator from Maine. I think it is quite likely that he would.

Ninth. Our bill authorizes citizen-appointees, while Senator JOHNSON's does not. We include citizen-appointees because, as I have already said, we consider that this legislation is not solely of military value, but that it has great political possibilities. It might be extremely desirable to take in a prominent civilian political leader—a man who is above military age, let us say—of one of the iron curtain countries in order to use his experience, knowledge, and planning ability. This proposed legislation provides the only way to feed him and maintain him while we are getting the benefit of his services. These services, incidentally, can mean a great deal and pay big dividends, both in saving our money and, what is more important, in saving our lives. If we can accomplish something big politically in one of these areas, we may avoid the expenses, in money and in human lives, of a military campaign later.

Tenth. Summary discharge authority in our legislation is specifically granted which is not the case in the Johnson bill.

Eleventh. The jurisdiction of the Articles of War is specifically mentioned, which is not the case in the Johnson bill.

That concludes the comparison between the various bills.

There is naturally keen interest in the effect which this proposed legislation will have on pending draft legislation. There is no doubt that, if we had enacted legislation of this character in 1947, we would by this time have a splendid corps of young officers and noncommissioned officers who would know all the Slavic languages and who would be professional soldiers besides. We would thus be able today to organize a Volunteer Freedom Corps abroad, and we might, therefore, be in a position today to deduct the number of men in that Volunteer Freedom Corps from the number of men which it is required to draft now. But we did not pass this proposed legislation in 1947. All we did was to authorize a mere 2,500 in June 1950 and we have not yet taken in one man under the authority of that legislation. The whole scheme is therefore still only on paper. So at present, there is no deduction which can be made and none of the measures providing for enlisting alien soldiers in the United States Army can be regarded as a substitute for drafting and training our own manpower. Such measures can be and will be a great help to our own manpower which is in the service in the event there should be an all-out war, because they would, of course, share in carrying the load.

But we can and should get started now in enlisting aliens, and, if we do get started now and all goes well, it is quite likely that in a year or two we will have a force in being which will enable us to make deductions from the total to be raised here in this country and which certainly will be a very big help when it comes to curtailing the American load of combat in case full-scale war breaks out.

I have requested that the Armed Services Committee set these bills down for hearings as soon as possible and that the affected departments make their reports promptly. This is a vital matter which has been delayed far too long. It is extraordinary that we read every day in the newspapers about the loss of American lives in Korea and yet we allow proposed legislation such as this to languish. I hope Senators who feel as I do will let me know and help to get something done. I ask unanimous consent to have printed after my remarks, an editorial from Life magazine which shows, in a particularly forceful fashion, the far-reaching implications of this project.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Life magazine of October 2, 1950]

AN ARMY OF THE FREE

GUARANTY OF WELCOME

In our editorial we comment on Senator LODGE, JR.'s proposal to create a voluntary army of the free out of the thousands of young anti-Communist refugees from East European countries inside the iron curtain. Would such an army be welcomed by the exiled leaders of East European democracies?

Says Stanislaw Mikolajczyk, former Premier of Poland, in his The Rape of Poland: "I believe the time will come when * * * a planned offensive, strengthened by truth, righteousness, and a faith in victory, will intensify a current of freedom that will push back the waves of communism and meet the mighty longing for freedom that lies in the hearts of * * * people living under the yoke of Red fascism. The counterwave can, and must, break down the prison bars, not only of the nations behind the iron curtain, but also of the enslaved peoples of the Soviet Union itself."

Says Ferenc Nagy, former Prime Minister of Hungary, in The Struggle Behind the Iron Curtain: "In reenforcing and marshaling the strength of Western Europe, it must be clearly recognized that a defensive policy against the Soviet Union's dynamic thrust is destined to defeat; only a policy intent on liberation and designed to insure an ultimately united Europe could successfully confront the Soviet Union."

This ought to be enough to show that the Lodge proposal would have a wonderfully reviving effect on the exiled East European democratic leaders who have been living practically without hope ever since the day the world was carved in two by short-sighted men at Yalta.

ANTI-COMMUNIST REFUGEES SHOULD BE WELCOMED TO ITS RANKS

It has taken a long time for the Western World to wake up to the fact that 190,000,000 Russians and some 600,000,000 serfs in the Soviet satellite states are organized, not for peace, not even for static defense, but for violently aggressive war.

The sudden shock of the realization that a tremendous avalanche of crude manpower could be thrown at a moment's notice against the free world has caused a flurry of excited stock taking. Secretary of State Dean Acheson has set forth a plan for designated armed forces on UN call in each UN country outside the Soviet orbit. Winston Churchill, among others, has called for some 60 divisions to defend Europe.

It is a burdensome thing to raise 60 divisions in an industrial economy that must keep strong to avoid trouble from local Communists. But with all the old Western Allies—England, France, the Low Countries, the United States—contributing, the job can be done. Moreover, a 60-division minimum can be supplemented by permitting Germany and Japan to raise divisions for their own defense.

The very fact that western civilization is at last talking of defending itself is a vastly encouraging thing. But there is one shortcoming that must be eliminated from the official attitudes toward rearmament—and that is the tendency to think of defense in purely static terms. It is good to think of Americans and Englishmen, Frenchmen and west Germans, all contributing to the defense of freedom. But if France and Germany, for instance, are really to be free, the defense of Europe cannot forever rest on an arbitrary line somewhere along the river Elbe.

What is really needed to dramatize and inspire the unity of the west is an army of the free that will include thousands of young men from countries inside the iron curtain who wish to rescue their homelands from the grip of a terrible tyranny. None of the official plans for a western army contemplates the use of freedom-loving Poles and Czechs, Lithuanians, and Hungarians. But one man has a plan for forging an army out of the violently anti-Communist refugees from iron-curtain lands. That man is HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR., the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Lodge plan is to enlist under the United States flag a voluntary army from among the million or more potential soldiers who are refugees from the east European satellite states. The political and propaganda value of such an army would be incalculably great. Raised by voluntary means, it would truly dramatize the idea of free devotion to a cause. With such an army in existence, the Voice of America would really begin to speak to the enslaved populations of Poland and Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Rumania.

The problems involved in the voluntary recruitment of an international legion to serve under the American—or the UN—flag are no doubt considerable. But there would be plus factors working to mitigate the difficulties of training, officering and integration. To begin with, the potential soldiers who are refugees from iron-curtain lands hate Stalin with a fierce and bitter hatred. All of them speak one or more of the languages of central and eastern Europe—Polish, German, Czech, Slovak, Lithuanian, Hungarian, Rumanian, or Bulgarian.

Since they are people who have known the horrors of Soviet occupation from close up, they would fight to the death to keep Stalin from catching up with them in their new western homes or billets. But since they are also people who have been deprived of their old homes in the east, they are the very people the western democracies need to carry the war against Stalin once he has started his eventual great retreat to the legitimate Russian borders.

An army of the free raised by voluntary enlistment from among the displaced nationals of Central and Eastern Europe would be extremely effective in promoting the ultimate defection from Russia of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria. Such an army, raised in time to provide it with officers who come up from its own ranks, would eventually go home to the enduring cheers of thousands of oppressed people who don't want to fight for communism. No Polish, Rumanian, or other satellite troops fighting under Russian officers could oppose such an army with any real conviction in their hearts.

The Lodge idea for raising a voluntary army of the free has had a brief mention on this page before (Life, August 14). A year ago the Senate passed a bill authorizing the enlistment of aliens in the United States Army, with a promise of citizenship after 5 years' service. LODGE hoped originally to get the figure for enlistment set at 25,000, but Congress ultimately trimmed the number down to a paltry 2,500. On September 14 of this year the Senator from Massachusetts returned to the subject. He still wants to see the United States enlist 25,000 aliens under the American banner. But he also would like to have the United States Army authorized to enlist up to 250,000 aliens for 2 years' overseas service in a voluntary freedom corps. That would be a beginning toward organizing a voluntary army of the free from among those with the greatest stake in the overthrow of communism. Eventually, as it must be seen, the Lodge idea can be applied to Asia as well as to Eastern Europe. Only free Chinese armies can reconquer China for freedom.

Why is it that the Senator from Massachusetts has had such meager support for his idea? In the American Revolution the Colonials enlisted the voluntary aid of men named Lafayette, Kosciusko, von Steuben, and so on. They were professional soldiers, but they were also amateurs (i. e., lovers) of freedom. Freedom is a banner that knows no boundaries. It attracts ardent souls everywhere, as Americans have recognized in the past. When the Lodge idea finds lodgment (no pun intended) in the popular imagination, as it must do once journalism has performed its proper function, we look to see United States citizens take it to their hearts in a way that is in keeping with their own American past.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wish to express my very profound appreciation, which I think will be shared by many other Senators as they give study to this problem, for the work which the Senator from Massachusetts has done in his long study of this subject over many years. As we cut our international eye teeth we come to realize that we are now a very definite part of the world. The contribution which legislation of the character to which the Senator from Massachusetts has given such careful study and consideration can make is profound and significant.

I wish to say also that I am satisfied that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], with whom we have cooperated in similar matters, and for whom we have such high regard—I am sorry I could not see him before the subject came up for discussion today—will welcome the material which has been developed and will appreciate the considerations which have affected the formulation of this proposed legislation. The Senator from Maine looks forward with confidence to the wholehearted cooperation of the Senator from Colorado in developing sound and practical legislation which will make available the tremendous potential in the free world of individuals who, for a variety of reasons, perhaps, are not able to contribute in any other way to the great objective of liberty-loving citizens everywhere.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator from Maine for his very kind observations about me. He himself has a great deal of imagination with respect to the relationships which the United States has with the rest of the world. He realizes that it no longer does any good to think in the old-fashioned, formalized, dry-as-dust fashion. We must be imaginative and do things differently, using the services of human beings.

I am very grateful to the Senator from Maine for his observation.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I should like to commend the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts for presenting to the Senate today this clear explanation of a well-thought-out piece of legislation. Frankly, I think that it offers a very practical way in which we can approach the type of aid and assistance which the enlarged world responsibility we are assuming places on our doorstep.

I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts that I desire to associate myself with him in this most important piece of legislation. I am hopeful that we can see its enactment very soon in this session.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator from Kansas. I appreciate his offer of help. I know that it will mean a great deal.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I am today introducing a joint resolution to approve the agreement between the United States and Canada, relating to the development of the resources of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin for national strength and security and the continental defense of the United States and Canada, and providing for making the St. Lawrence seaway self-liquidating. I introduce the joint resolution not only for myself, but on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], my colleague the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 27) approving the agreement between the United States and Canada relating to the development of the resources of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin for national security and continental defense of the United States and Canada; providing for making the St. Lawrence seaway self-liquidating; and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. GREEN (for himself and other Senators), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project is a matter of great urgency and I am pleased indeed that, this early in the new Congress, there are so many Senators ready to join with me in offering proposed legislation whose adoption will make the construction possible. Senators who have joined in introducing this joint resolution come from both sides of the aisle and many sections of the country, and include some of the most experienced and wisest Members of this body. We who now offer this joint resolution do so with the conviction that the course of events has after many years made the benefits of the dual-purpose project so apparent, even to the most skeptical, and has so increased the urgency of our realizing those benefits, that the proposal will receive the congressional approval which it has so long and so vainly merited. For we have arrived, Mr. President, at a stage where, in addition to its basic advantages in the fields of both transportation and power, the dual-purpose project must be built as a strategic requirement of our national security and the continental defense of the United States and Canada.

The joint resolution seeks the approval, with certain exceptions and qualifying provisions, of the agreement entered into March 21, 1941, by the Governments of the United States and Canada. Some of the modifications are necessary on constitutional grounds, and others, in order to assure appropriate policy with regard to seaway tolls and power allocation. In all these the joint resolution introduced today follows closely the language of joint resolutions in both the Eightieth and Eighty-first Congresses, with appropriate changes to reflect the fact that the Niagara Treaty has now been signed and ratified.

The original purpose of the agreement—and of the underlying proposal, which had its origin long before 1941—is, by completing the work begun by nature eons ago, to open up the Great Lakes to ocean-going ships and simultaneously to harness the power of the St. Lawrence for the generation of electricity. Both these purposes have long been firmly grounded in the facts of geography and of the industrial development of the North American Continent. Both these purposes have become justified as each passing year has demonstrated how our growing economy demands the great advantages of transportation and power which the dual-purpose project can confer. And both these purposes have been heavily underscored by our experience in the recent war and by the requirements of mobilization today.

These considerations were very fully developed in the course of hearings before a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, during the Eightieth Congress, and before the House Public Works Committee last spring. In brief, the dual-purpose project would in effect add 4,000 miles to our coast line, giving the port cities and shipyards of the Great Lakes access to the Atlantic, and would provide a magnificent block of power—700,000 kilowatts of dependable generating capacity—in a region that for years has suffered chronic shortage. These benefits to the United States would be matched by those to Canada, in whose industrial and military strength we ourselves have a direct interest.

With respect to the power, there is no doubt whatever that it is needed, that it can be supplied at exceedingly low cost, and that the New York-New England region will, indeed, require over the coming decade several times as much additional power as can be provided even by this magnificent development.

With respect to transportation, controversy lingers, not untouched by the special interests of competing systems of transportation. Even here, however, the case has become so strong that all reasonable men must, I think, concede its basic merits.

Conservative estimates of the traffic which the seaway would carry have been prepared by transportation experts in the Department of Commerce. These indicate that under a reasonable and realistic schedule of tolls, such as is contemplated by the joint resolution, the investment in the seaway can be completely amortized in about 50 years. Such a period is, of course, far shorter than the expected life of the works themselves, so that the seaway could be deemed self-liquidating even if these estimates of traffic were further reduced in the interest of ultraconservatism.

The importance of the seaway does not rest, however, entirely upon its manifest value as an element in our national transportation and power systems, together with the additional fact that it can be put on a solid commercial basis. Equally important under present circumstances is the fact that only by construction of the seaway can we assure ourselves of a safe and efficient route for the importation of iron ore.

Because the huge reserves on Lake Superior are now, after 50 years of mining, approaching exhaustion, we must in the years ahead depend more and more upon imported ores. There are tremendous reserves of high-grade ore in South America and these are being developed by United States interests. To bring this ore to our shores, however, involves a transit of from 1,400 to 2,000 miles through sea lanes which, as we found during the recent war, are the natural habitat of hostile submarines. The protection of ore shipments would put a high and unnecessary burden on the Navy. In Labrador and Quebec, however, on this continent and not too far inland from the gulf of the St. Lawrence, lie great deposits of high-grade ore, development of which is now under way. Like the Mesabi ore, this ore lies near the surface and is readily mined. After it has been brought to the St. Lawrence, its transportation through the seaway to the steel mills on the Great Lakes will be vastly safer than any other alternative route of importation.

When these facts were entered in the record last spring, the prospect was that by 1960 our steel industry would have a capacity of 110,000,000 ingot-tons. To operate at this capacity would require 124,000,000 tons of ore a year, of which about 25,000,000 tons would have to be imported.

Since the outbreak of war in Korea this prospect has been shortened. We now expect this capacity of 110,000,000 ingot tons to be reached some time in 1952 rather than in 1960. Although no one can now speak with any assurance about the latter year, this is roughly the outlook. In order to meet our full requirements of steel the capacity should probably be expanded by that time to about 125,000,000 tons. Such capacity will be provided, of course, only if the iron ore which it would require can in fact be obtained. This is a very large accomplishment because, in addition to the requirements imposed by the increase of capacity, there is the further fact that supplies of scrap cannot proportionately be expanded. As a result, still further iron ore will be needed to make good the deficiency of scrap. In consequence of both these factors, steel capacity of 125,000,000 ingot tons in 1960 would require roughly 160,000,000 tons of ore. Of this total, about 70,000,000 tons would have to be imported, almost all of it being from the new sources now being developed. We thus face a growing dependence on foreign sources, which by the end of the decade will probably be called on to supply more than 40 percent of our total requirements. We also face the need to bring as much as possible of this imported ore over a protected route rather than on ocean routes more open to attack. That is what makes it urgent that the seaway be begun at once.

Mobilization has increased the importance of the power phase of the project as well. Even prior to mobilization it was estimated that by 1960 there would be needed in the St. Lawrence region, in addition to plants already planned, nearly four times as much electricity as can be furnished by this project. Under mobilization, sharp increases are necessary in the production of aluminum and magnesium, of ferro-alloys, explosives, and chemicals, and of other products whose manufacture requires large amounts of cheap electric power. Both for transportation and for power, therefore, the St. Lawrence dual-purpose project is more urgently needed than ever before. It should be delayed no longer.

Mr. President, the joint resolution to approve the St. Lawrence seaway and power project deserves to be considered promptly and fully. I intend to press for early hearings on the measure so that the record, already voluminous, may be brought up to date and the Senate be made fully aware both of the importance and of the urgency of this great international dual-purpose project for the economic and military strength of our country and this entire continent. On the basis of the full record, I am confident Senators will vote to approve the 1941 agreement and thereby open the way for this dream of half a century to be translated into a solid achievement to strengthen and safeguard our country in peace and war.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement on the joint resolution which has been introduced today by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] approving the St. Lawrence agreements and the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be associated with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and many other Members of this body from all sections of the country in sponsoring the joint resolution for the authorization of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project.

It has been one of my fondest dreams for 20 years to see this great dual-purpose project, with all its vast benefits for the Nation and for New York State, become a reality. During all the years when I was Governor of New York State, before that and since, I consistently and vigorously supported this undertaking.

It is now a source of great satisfaction for me, as a Member of the Senate, to cosponsor this proposed legislation. In the months ahead I shall do everything within my power to bring to the attention of the Senate the great benefits of this proposal.

So far as New York State is concerned, both the seaway and the power project offer great benefits. In this present period of our national history when our very survival depends upon the mobilization of all our resources and the development of all our potentials for the strengthening of our country and of the free world, it is inconceivable that the proposed legislation on this subject will not be speedily enacted.

The rights of New York State are adequately protected in the joint resolution. After the power project is completed it will be turned over to the State of New York under terms of sale which will recompense the Federal Government for its expenditures and will at the same time assure to the people of New York State, of the New England States, and perhaps other areas within economic transmission distance of the St. Lawrence power project, a new source of badly needed power at one-half the cost of equivalent steam-generated power.

This will be a blessing, not only to the people of New York and to the people of the Nation, but will reduce the cost of defense items and commodities manufactured with the use of this power. One such commodity, of course, is aluminum. It will make available to the United States and Canada 13,000,000,000 additional kilowatts of power annually—cheap hydroelectric power—making use of the energies of the waters of the St. Lawrence in the International Rapids section.

We can develop 2,200,000 horsepower from this project, the largest quantity of undeveloped waterpower in North America, except for the contiguous Niagara development. The St. Lawrence project will develop more power than any existing power project in America, with the exception of the Grand Coulee Dam. The Niagara project, of course, promises even greater power than the Grand Coulee.

Market studies show that the power from the St. Lawrence, as well as that from the Niagara, can be readily absorbed. Indeed, all this power will be absolutely required by the national mobilization effort both in the United States and Canada. Should we fail to develop this power, and waste the potentialities which are thus available to us, we will be guilty of the most arrant kind of wastefulness. Failure to use the potentialities of the seaway would be equally wasteful.

The seaway will reduce the growing congestion at our east-coast ports, will extend our coast line for a distance of 4,000 miles, and will permit vast areas of our interior to contribute more adequately to the national effort by linking these areas more directly with the foreign sources of raw materials and the foreign ports to which the sinews of increasing strength must be brought.

Actual construction—digging and dredging—will be required over a distance of 114 miles, both in the United States and Canada. Much of this work has already been done, as in the Welland Canal, although this canal will need to be deepened. This is a major undertaking, but it is an essential one.

I have every confidence that the joint resolution will be approved at this session of Congress. I cannot see how it can longer be delayed. Once the joint resolution is approved, we can and should proceed speedily with this undertaking.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 2 minutes to comment on the necessity for the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] has today introduced a joint resolution for the approval of that project.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I call attention to a copy of the November 11 issue of Business Week. On page 136 there is a story of the development of hydroelectric power on the Volga River in Russia. They are planning to construct two plants, one in Kuibyshev and one near Stalingrad. The yearly production of these two plants will total 20,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours, almost twice as much as the power to be developed by the St. Lawrence project, and nearly twice as much as the power developed at the Tennessee River dams. The Russian Government is initiating these now, for completion in 1955 and 1956.

Mr. President, there are two things to be noted about this program: First, the importance attached by the Russian Government to hydroelectric power; and, second, the time schedule they have set up. The construction of these plants will be going on during the next 5 or 6 years. It proves, Mr. President, that the Russians have a long-range program for the development of their industrial might. They know that in the long run it is the productive capacity of nations that wins in the crucial struggle for survival.

In this country we are in the habit of thinking of defense production in terms of deduction from civilian output. The mobilization program will last a long time. We must set our sights at least a decade ahead, in undertaking the necessary developments to add to the strength of our Nation. I can think of no sound foreign or military policy that disregards the fundamental fact that our survival as a nation and the defense of western civilization depends upon the productive capacity of the United States and Canada.

It is for this reason that I urge all my colleagues—particularly my neighbors from New England and New York—to consider earnestly and speedily the St. Lawrence seaway as a means of removing the limitations upon the productive capacity of Canada and the northeastern and middlewestern parts of the United States. This program is necessary for the expansion of the steel industry, the aluminum industry, and other defense establishments. It is important for the growth of population and production in Canada, which is of vital interest in our continental defense.

I urge that approval of this great development, which could conceivably mean the difference between victory and defeat for democratic government, be given without further delay.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a statement which I have prepared relative to the introduction today of the new Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway joint resolution, of which I am proud to be a cosponsor. I ask unanimous consent that the text of this statement be printed in the body of the RECORD, together with certain matters attached to my statement.

There being no objection, the statement and attached papers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

WE MUST COMPLETE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY NOW

I have today joined in cosponsoring a joint resolution to authorize the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway project.

I take this step fully conscious of the significance of international developments which place upon this country the necessity of preparing for a long struggle for survival against forces of barbarism which have been let loose upon the world by Communist ideology.

We are preparing for a struggle that may well last 10 years or 20 years or more. Our preparation must be undertaken in terms of the total strengthening of our people, our resources, our technology, and our productive capacity.

In entering this long period of mobilization, we must consider the resources and the welfare of our good neighbor and ally, Canada, as well as those of the United States. Why? Because these two countries constitute the bastion of defense of western civilization. Without their help, the European front would crumble.

The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence project is designed to strengthen this country and Canada by providing low-cost, labor-saving transportation and low-cost, labor-saving hydroelectric power for defense industries. In addition, it will open up new sources of raw materials absolutely essential for industry, particularly iron ore. It will also safeguard our shipping from enemy submarine attack on the high seas.

In considering the St. Lawrence seaway project, Congress in actual fact, is confronted with a major issue of strategy—namely, whether (a) we should develop our resources within the continental limits of North America in order to permit us to produce the weapons of defense for our Armed Forces and our allies abroad; or (b) whether we should expose our supply lines to enemy action on the high seas.

On this major issue all Americans—whether they live in the East or West or South—should support the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence development as a means of making North America an atomic-age arsenal of democracy.

NO POSTPONEMENT JUSTIFIED

I full well realize that the opponents of the seaway will say:

"Now is not the time to build this great project."

Well, Mr. President, according to the opposition, 1925 was not the right time, nor 1930, nor 1935, nor in fact is any year the appropriate time in their mind. In other words, they do not seek to postpone this project, they seek to kill it. A year from now they will have another reason for suggesting postponement; 5 years from now they will raise more phony objections. They will issue more base appeals to the most selfish interests of particular groups and regions.

There has been enough stalling, enough delays, enough pigeonholing, enough repetitious prolonged hearings. The case for the seaway is as solid as Gibraltar. It has been built for many years, it stands undisputed and unrefuted. The seaway has been praised by every American President since 1920, by countless Members of Congress, by outstanding leaders of business, agriculture, and Government, and, yes, by our highest military and naval experts.

SINFUL TO WASTE THIS RESOURCE

It is an absolute sin for us to continue to waste this precious resource. It is utterly fantastic to build up Continental Europe's transportation arteries and hydroelectric power and to fail to do so here in our own blessed continent.

I appeal most earnestly to all those groups which have opposed us in the past to cease their opposition and join with us for this great national endeavor.

AN ANSWER TO SPURIOUS OPPOSITION

I speak on the basis of having fought for this project ever since my entrance to the Senate. During the Republican Eightieth Congress it was my pleasure to serve as chairman of the subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which considered the seaway proposal. We heard testimony from the highest officials of the United States Government, including our former President, the Honorable Herbert Hoover. The opposition has contended that somehow there is some socialistic feature to this proposal, but that contention is seen as absolutely ridiculous when one reviews the list of conservative leaders of America who have endorsed the seaway.

The opposition has contended that the seaway would be particularly vulnerable to enemy attack, but obviously it is no more vulnerable than a TVA dam or the city of Washington, or the Hanford, Wash., plutonium plant or a hunderd other targets. Obviously if America has sufficient radar protection, sufficient interceptor planes, sufficient guided missiles, and the other weapons necessary for modern defense, we will be adequate to defend this and other targets. On the other hand, if we are not adequately defended, then not only the seaway but every other target on this continent will be hit.

It is absolutely nonsensical to infer that we must be weak in order not to set up possible targets for attack. If one were to follow that line of reasoning we might just as well close down the city of Pittsburgh because obviously the steel mills are an inviting target.

The opposition will contend, too, that the seaway will divert manpower and materials. Well, Mr. President, when one considers the fact that actual construction of the project will take quite a few years and when one prorates the cost in manpower and materials over the construction period, it turns out that the seaway is just a drop in the bucket compared to other great construction projects which will be initiated.

THE REAL ISSUE

Let us cut behind the masquerade. Let us get beyond the ridiculous phony arguments which are constantly raised. The seaway issue boils down to a fight between certain selfish railroad interests and certain selfish port interests on the one hand versus the people of the United States—present and future generations—on the other hand. Throughout the 1948 fight, we saw this issue very clearly and I stated it on the floor of the Senate. Who is to persevere? Who is to succeed in this struggle? A few selfish, blind, obstinate men of the same type who have opposed every single advance in transportation? Or will the American people succeed and persevere? The same sort of fantastic jibberish which has been spewed against the seaway was spewed against the Panama Canal back in the early part of this century. They said it would never be used or they contradicted themselves and said that it would be used so much that it would harm native American labor. They said it would be a hard installation to defend. They said that it was extravagant. They said that our budget could not stand that sort of expenditure. Well, history has rendered the verdict and has shown that this fearmongering was completely baseless.

And so I appeal to the highest judgment and reason of those of my colleagues who according to their own convictions may not in the past have seen the same way I have on this issue. I appeal to them as the honest, conscientious legislators which I know them to be. I appeal moreover, to the groups in the respective States which have heretofore opposed us and respectfully urge them in the cause of patriotism to cease their activities.

I attach for printing at this point in the body of the RECORD certain materials relating to the seaway as received from my State.

[From the Milwaukee Journal of January 26, 1951]

SOO TONNAGE HIGHER IN 1950—THIRD HIGHEST IN PEACE

SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.—Freight shipped through the American and Canadian Soo locks in 1950 totaled 106,196,562 tons, an increase of 11 percent compared with 1949.

United States engineers said Thursday that the tonnage for the 1950 Great Lakes shipping season was the third highest for peacetime. It was exceeded by the 115,000,000 tons shipped through the docks in 1948 and the 110,000,000 tons in 1947.

An all-time record of 120,000,000 tons was set in the war year of 1942.

Iron ore down-bound through the locks in 1950 totaled 79,976,650 tons and accounted for the major share of the freight. Other leading products included 5,704,496 tons of wheat and 2,380,535 tons of other grain, 63,201 tons of flour, 301,976 tons of general merchandise, 443,120 tons of pulpwood, 163,204 tons of manufactured iron and steel, 122,356 tons of scrap iron, 58,084 tons of stone and gravel, and 750 tons of lumber.

The bulk of the westbound cargo consisted of 13,301,019 tons of soft coal. Other totals were 1,508,624 tons of stone and gravel, 826,093 tons of petroleum products, 524,946 tons of general merchandise, 295,504 tons of hard coal, 81,108 tons of manufactured iron and steel, 75,599 tons of automobiles, and 46,956 tons of salt.

RESOLUTION OF ALUMINUM WORKERS UNION NO. 19489 IN MANITOWOC, WIS.

Whereas the Great Lakes region has the greatest concentration of steel manufacturing and the greatest reservoir of skilled workmen in the world; and

Whereas the boats and other seacraft that are so abundantly built in this area must of necessity be limited in size because of the fact that there is no outlet to the ocean sufficiently large and deep enough to float ocean-going vessels; and

Whereas experience during the last war indicated that it was necessary to raise the facilities on the Great Lakes for the construction of combat service and ocean vessels for the armed services; and

Whereas the larger vessels had to be floated to the open sea via the Mississippi River system with the aid of pontoons fitted at great expense of time, manpower, and material; and

Whereas the interior of the North American continent is in great need of better low-cost ocean shipping facilities; and

Whereas the industrial area of the Great Lakes suffered critical power shortages in both World Wars I and II, and larger shortages are anticipated in the case of another war; and

Whereas the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project would be a large factor in helping to solve the problems that now confront us: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Aluminum Workers Union No. 19489 in regular meeting assembled request our representatives in the Congress of the United States to work for and seek early enactment of the St. Lawrence seaway power project; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY,

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Honorable JOSEPH MCCARTHY, and the Honorable JOHN BYRNES.

EXCERPTS FROM PAMPHLET PUBLISHED BY WISCONSIN STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR

NOW, MORE THAN EVER BEFORE, WE NEED THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

"The nation that provides lines of communication from its best protected or least vulnerable inner reaches to its coasts, best insures its security in wartimes." (Milwaukee Journal editorial.)

For defense

"When considered along with support activities that are vital to national defense, such as industrial production, power development, transportation, and so forth, the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway project commands a high priority.

"Experience during the last war indicated that it was necessary to use the facilities on the Great Lakes to their maximum capacity for the construction of small boat and bulk-type lake carriers. Insofar as facilities were available, they were used for construction of combat service and ocean vessels for the armed services. Vessels constructed in the Great Lakes shipyards designed for ocean service were routed to the open sea via the existing 14-foot St. Lawrence channel which limited the size of those which could be built in the St. Lawrence area or, with the aid of pontoons fitted at the expense of time, manpower, and materials, had to be floated to the Gulf of Mexico via the Mississippi River system.

"The provision of additional transportation facilities would remove to some extent, in time of emergency, the strain on existing transportation facilities. A saving in manpower and speedier delivery to points of destination would be effected by loading at Great Lakes ports for final discharges.

"For the above reasons, therefore, the project has the approval and strong support of the Department of Defense. Accordingly, I urge its favorable consideration." (Frank Pace, Jr., Secretary of the Army.)

For conservation

"Construction of the proposed St. Lawrence seaway and power project is needed to assure a high grade, rapidly expansible iron ore supply from nearby foreign sources—ore which in an emergency could be moved to existing consuming centers over routes inside the continent. It is needed to provide substantial, additional quantities of electric power, and to augment the capacity and flexibility of our transportation system.

"Special importance attaches to the availability of the seaway for the importation of iron ore. Within a very few years our steel industry, basic to a strong national economy in both peace and war, will be regularly importing ores to meet a substantial proportion of its peacetime needs. The seaway would provide the most economical route for the importation of ore * * * need to supplement and conserve our dwindling Lake Superior ore supplies.

"The project would furnish large quantities of additional power to an important industrial area which suffered critical shortages in both World Wars I and II. In the absence of the power project, correspondingly large or larger power shortages are anticipated in this area in case of another war. The avoidance of such shortage is vital." (National Security Resources Board.)

For low-cost transportation

"The development of the navigation and power resources of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence system has been envisioned for half a century by the United States and Canada as a joint international enterprise. It is frequently said that the St. Lawrence seaway will add a fourth coastline to the United States.

"It will indubitably open the interior of the North American Continent to ocean shipping and will harness 2,200,000 horsepower of hydroelectric energy now running unused into the Atlantic Ocean.

"Those parts of the United States and Canada served by the Great-Lakes-St. Lawrence system are not only great in population, but are great in agricultural and industrial resources.

"The seaway will furnish an important new trade route for the United States and Canada. It should go far to aid in achieving our mutual objectives of expanded foreign trade, full employment and a healthy merchant marine. The full economies of mass transportation can be achieved by bringing deep-water shipping into the Great Lakes." (Daniel W. Hoan, former mayor of Milwaukee.)

For progress

"The St. Lawrence seaway and power project has from the time it was first proposed offered this Nation a magnificent opportunity for economic progress. As the true strength and promise of our economy have become more fully realized, the importance of this dual-purpose project has grown in proportion. Without it we shall continue our neglect of a great source of economic strength and a vitally important factor in our national security. With it, the entire country will benefit, not least some of those who are most concerned lest it somehow infringe upon their immediate interests.

"The plain fact of the matter is that this is a big and powerful country and it has got that way not only by possessing great resources, but by knowing how to use them. Those who would have us turn our back on opportunities such as the St. Lawrence seaway and power project now offers us would have us turn our back on the very thing that has made America great and the only thing on which we dare base the continuation of our national strength and our national security." (Hon. Charles Sawyer, Secretary of Commerce.)

For expansion

"Development of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project jointly by the United States and Canada would give to the world a shining symbol of international cooperation. It would be an enduring example of the ability of two great nations not only to live side by side peacefully, but also to develop harmoniously their natural resources.

"The joint development of a great foreign-trade route by two nations for the express purpose of sharing the benefits of new commerce would be a landmark in the history of international relations.

"The seaway would be an important factor in expanding world trade and promoting friendly commercial relations. It would strongly reinforce the Bretton Woods Agreement and the economic objectives of the United Nations.

"If we are to succeed in developing a new era of peace and mutual understanding between nations, there could be no better beginning than the immediate undertaking of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project." (Great Lakes Harbors Association.)

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD a statement I have prepared on the St. Lawrence seaway and power project.

There being no objection, the statement of Mr. DOUGLAS was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT

Senator PAUL H. DOUGLAS, Democrat, of Illinois, who joined as a cosponsor of the bill for the St. Lawrence seaway and power project, introduced in the Senate today by Senator THEODORE F. GREEN, Democrat, of Rhode Island, presented the following statement to the Senate in support of the measure:

"I have joined in supporting the St. Lawrence seaway and power project for the following reasons:

"1. We must be prepared to defend freedom and resist Communist aggression over a considerable period of time and make our plans in terms of at least 10 or 15 years. Therefore, we must select for development those natural resources which will make the maximum contribution to our power, navigation, and other defense needs in that period. I believe the St. Lawrence project essential by that test.

"2. The St. Lawrence seaway project is necessary in order to maintain and expand our iron and steel industries. Without it, dangerous depletion and shortages may well develop.

"3. The St. Lawrence power project is necessary to supply low-cost power to defense industries. Expansion in the Northeastern States will be seriously limited without this new source of power.

"4. The present legislation makes the St. Lawrence project self-liquidating by the charging of tolls on navigation and by receipts from sale of power. The project, therefore, is not so much a public-works project as an investment which will be repaid. To that extent it will not be an ultimate burden on the taxpayer and instead will be a great new asset, not only for national defense, but also for the national economy in general. While this point, by itself, would not be enough to justify the construction of the St. Lawrence project now, when joined with the other considerations it speaks strongly in its favor. The economic justification for this project is also much clearer than it is for many of the other currently authorized developments, some of which I have opposed.

"5. In a long-range defense program it will be helpful to increase industrial capacity and productivity of labor in such a way that the standard of living of our people will not have to be diminished too greatly. Prerequisite to this expansion is additional steel capacity. Official studies disclose that to increase steel capacity to 125,000,000 tons—25 percent above the present level—this country will have to import 64,000,000 tons of iron ore. In addition to developing the low-grade ores in Minnesota, this gigantic undertaking requires that we do everything within our means to make new sources of iron ore like those in Labrador available to our steel mills. The St. Lawrence project is necessary to achieve this. Otherwise, if we allow such large raw-material shipments to be dependent wholly upon open-sea transportation, they would be vulnerable to enemy submarine attack.

"6. The navigation features of the project will also make possible the expansion of the iron and steel industry in the Great Lakes area of the Middle West and lead to a better balanced location and dispersal of the industry and of the metal fabricators which it supplies. It is to the Nation's interest that this dispersal take place and that new steel capacity should not be concentrated solely in the already heavily industrialized eastern seaboard States.

"I hope the Congress may review these plans at an early date and give its approval to the historic project this legislation would authorize."

Mr. BENTON obtained the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of making a brief statement, without losing his rights to the floor?

Mr. BENTON. I shall be glad to do so.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the people of Minnesota will be pleased to learn that a joint resolution is being introduced today to authorize the development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin, both the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and the power project. I am proud to be a cosponsor of that joint resolution, which today has established bipartisan support. It is my hope and expectation that hearings will soon be held by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and that the joint resolution will be approved by this Congress.

The Great Lakes waterway is the lifeline of our area's industrial wealth. It is particularly crucial to meet our current defense emergency. We learned from the last war that strategic materials resources are not limitless. The great iron ore deposits of Labrador must be exploited and ore brought to the United States by the safest, shortest, and cheapest route—through the St. Lawrence River.

The St. Lawrence seaway project provides for a 27-foot channel from Duluth and the heart of the Great Lakes through the St. Lawrence and out to the Atlantic Ocean, a distance of 2,400 miles. It would open Minnesota and our whole midwest region to the trade of the world. When the seaway becomes a reality, Minnesota products will be sent into the markets of the world. Our wheat and flour, flaxseed, dairy foods, lumber, farm machinery, and other manufactures will compete in the world markets. Our cities on the shores of Lake Superior—Duluth and Two Harbors—will become busy ocean ports. This will, in turn, benefit our inland cities, Minneapolis and St. Paul for example, and our whole State. The people of Minnesota cannot help but benefit from our cities' growth in agriculture, manufacturing, and shipping.

Not only will the St. Lawrence project assist our agricultural and manufacturing trades but will also stimulate our iron ore industry. High grade iron ore from our Lake Superior region supplies nearly 85 percent of America's steel industry. From these reserves in World War II, steel for the weapons of our victory were forged. Once again our iron and steel will go forth to protect our way of life.

Furthermore, the St. Lawrence project will develop supplementary ores to relieve the superior ores now being depleted. This will save our fine cities of Hibbing, Virginia, Coleraine, Buhl, Ely on the Mesabi, and Crosby and Ironton on the Cuyuna. The seaway would stabilize the economy of our State and resolve our uncertainties about the future. The seaway will stimulate the development as well of a very vital ore, Mr. President, one which may be the difference between life and death of this Nation, namely taconite, a product which is found in limitless quantities in the northern section of Minnesota. Our interest in the St. Lawrence seaway is not a selfish interest, however. Our entire Nation needs the seaway. It will reduce the cost of defense items and commodities manufactured by the use of power projects. It will make available to the United States and Canada 13,000,000,000 additional kilowatts of cheap hydroelectric power every year.

The State of Minnesota has supported this project since 1919. The State of New York and New England States expect to receive electric power from the dam on the St. Lawrence River. We in Minnesota want to see them get it. We want their electricity bills to drop and their standard of living to rise. When easterners are prosperous they buy of our products—particularly those shipped over a cheap water route. Any great economic development that is helpful to one region of the United States will result in national benefit, and so it is with the St. Lawrence seaway. The St. Lawrence seaway is a vital national defense project and should be considered as such.

The St. Lawrence seaway is as vital to the defense of this Nation as is the expansion of steel-producing plants. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, if we are going to expand the steel production of this country some 15,000,000 tons, we had better be sure that we have the raw material from which that steel can be made—namely, the iron ore—and we should be equally sure that that iron ore can be transported at reasonable cost over a safe and short route of transportation.

The St. Lawrence seaway is the key to Minnesota's future. It holds opportunity, development, and wealth. Our industries are entitled to the expansion brought by low transportation costs. The Middle West is entitled to send its products forth to world markets.

It is time for Congress to recognize the needs, not only of the Middle West and of our great State of Minnesota but of the whole Nation, insofar as transportation is concerned.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks a letter from one of the most distinguished citizens of the Midwest, one of the fine and great citizens of my State, Mr. Julius H. Barnes. Mr. Barnes is an eminent industrialist and merchant and an economic statesman. He has spent many years of his life promoting the development of the St. Lawrence seaway. I know of very few men in this country who know more about the facts and the engineering studies respecting the St. Lawrence seaway route than does Mr. Barnes. In his letter he has given testimony as to the value of the project. He has also presented—and I think this is to the benefit of the entire Congress—an evaluation as to the estimated operation rates and earnings possible for a normal 8 months of shipment on the Great Lakes by the use of the St. Lawrence seaway. I ask that the letter be printed at this point in the RECORD, and also ask that there be printed in the RECORD at this point an article written by Kenneth Crouse and published in the St. Paul Pioneer Press under date of January 18, 1951.

There being no objection, the letter and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DULUTH, MINN., January 18, 1951.

Hon. HUBERT HUMPHREY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My personal appreciation of the real statesmanship evidenced by you in two recent actions.

First, for being a cosponsor for the ideal of international relations, presented by Owen Roberts and his associates.

Second, for your convincing message to the AFL meeting in Detroit which I hope will persuade that great labor body and its subsidiaries to recognize, under today's conditions, the great national value of the St. Lawrence opened after 50 years paralysis of the usual American enterprise for enlarged facilities, lowered transportation costs, and the generation of electric power in an electrified Nation.

Thank you especially for both actions.

In 1941 the record of hearings on the St. Lawrence agreement before the House committee will show that the Commerce and Industry Association of New York, an organization of business men largely screened into national prominence by their native ability and enterprise, testified through an employed engineer. His testimony, I remember, was a statement that the 1940 generation of all America in electric power totaled 160,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours and he added the opinion that this was adequate for any foreseeable requirements. Today, only 10 years later, we are using substantially 360,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours and we still need more in this electric era. This illustrates how good judgment can be warped by misinformation, by local prejudice, to the discredit of their really large national confidence for the future.

I venture to enclose you a tabulation of what it would mean to Duluth-Superior and to the ports of Chicago and Milwaukee when the miracle, new-type bulk freight carrier of the Great Lakes is operating, of which a number are now under contract for building, and what it could do in low-priced transportation when two-way cargoes ore and grain may meet. Out of my long years as a grain exporter and a ship operator, I am not afraid to have this tabulation submitted to any competent fleet operators.

What it would mean to the whole agricultural West to have access at such economy of transportation cost for the products of the West does not require more than a recognition of world history of commerce following the channels of economical movement. And the phase of prosecuting better a great war in which we may be forced into introduces a human element that would appeal to every American, in the safeguarding of American lives.

I know your heart is in this project. You are warranted in appreciation of its great economic, political, and human significance. More power to you.

Sincerely,

JULIUS H. BARNES.

ESTIMATED OPERATIONS, RATES, AND EARNINGS POSSIBLE FOR NORMAL 8 MONTHS ON LAKES

New ships designed transport on 27-foot proposed Great Lakes-St. Lawrence channels—20,000 tons ore, 600,000 bushels grain, 16 miles speed.

Reliable estimate 8 months' freight earnings, $1,000,000, would provide reasonable net earnings over 12 months.

(NOTE.—J. H. B. feels earnings should be substantial on large private investment to provide construction (estimated $5,000,000).)

Water distances basis these calculations:

	Miles
Duluth to Buffalo	980
Duluth to Montreal	1,334
Duluth to Seven Islands	1,985
Duluth to New York, all water	1,383
Chicago to Montreal	1,241
Montreal to Seven Islands	650
Buffalo to Seven Islands	1,000

Estimate I

600,000 bushels grain at 8 cents, Duluth to Seven Islands	$48,000
20,000 tons ore at $2, Seven Islands to Lake Erie ports	40,000
Earnings this round trip, 18 days, including 3 days light Lake Erie port to Duluth	88,000

Estimate II

(Probable seasonal adjustment grain carriage (no grain 2 months))

9 trips, 162 days, at $880,000 per trip	$792,000
7 trips, ore only, 70 days, at $40,000 per trip	280,000
Season, 240 days, this scale grain and ore	1,072,000

Estimate III

Ore only, 26 trips, 9 days' turnaround each, at $40,000	$1,040,000

HUMPHREY ASKS AFL SUPPORT OF SEAWAY

(By Kenneth Crouse)

WASHINGTON.—The American Federation of Labor was urged yesterday to give its support to the St. Lawrence seaway.

In a message to an AFL conference in Detroit, Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat-Farmer-Labor, of Minnesota, called on the labor group to back the project as a matter of grave importance to our national security.

The AFL has for many years been opposed to the waterway. At its 1950 convention, however, it was decided that because of defense and other developments the AFL should reexamine its position. Heading the conference of State and local AFL leaders now under way on the issue is George Haberman, president of the Wisconsin Federation of Labor.

In his message Senator HUMPHREY declared that if the United States and other free nations of the world are to triumph in the struggle against barbarism, we must open the St. Lawrence seaway as a matter of highest priority.

Even with existing ore reserves in northern Minnesota and all-out development of low-grade ores, the Senator said, the steel industry will still have to import a substantial amount of iron ore. He added that this could best be shipped to steel mills through the St. Lawrence waterway.

He concluded, "By developing the St. Lawrence Basin, we shall have provided our Nation with an economic asset beyond dollars-and-cents calculation. We shall have opened a route which bestows the advantages of cheap transportation of the products of our midwestern farms and factories and one which will stabilize the entire steel industry.

"Although we cannot ignore the peacetime considerations, we must set them aside for the time being because we face the plain fact that lives and strategic materials depend on our getting this project through."

DETROIT.—President Truman said the St. Lawrence seaway should be built as quickly as is physically possible to do so in a message here to AFL leaders.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, having been born in Minnesota, and having lived there until I was 18 years old, I take particular interest in the statement which has just been made by the Senator from Minnesota. I congratulate him on it.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is on his feet, and, if I correctly understand the deaf and dumb language, the Senator has, by use of that language, indicated to me that he wishes me to yield to him for 2 minutes. I am glad to yield for 2 minutes to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, a few moments ago I placed in the RECORD a statement which I had expected to deliver in relation to the measure which has just been commented upon by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY]. I wish to say that I am sure that Senators now will take a "new look" at this very important project.

It was my good fortune the other day to be at the White House and to hear Mr. Wilson, who heretofore, as Senators will remember, was very much opposed to the St. Lawrence waterway, speak favorably of it, showing that he has gotten the "new look," and views the project with a new look. Likewise, I trust that Senators who heretofore have been provincial, who have been looking at their own particular segments of the country, can no longer refuse to raise their visors and see that now we are involved in a serious question of survival.

That issue, I believe, must be apparent to all of us who heard Mr. Wilson, General Pick, and Secretary Chapman state how in the course of 5 or 10 years, unless this project is undertaken and completed, our country could well become a second-class Nation.

So I trust that the hearings will be brief, and that the one point will be stressed, namely, the matter of national security and national defense; and that those who were against us the last time we were privileged to advance this idea, will now, as I say, get the new look, raise their visors, and see that this is a matter of national survival.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut for yielding to me.

A WARNING TO THE SENATE

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I rise to utter a brief but very solemn warning. This week I called on former Secretary of State Cordell Hull. Secretary Hull honors me by permitting me to visit him every few months, and it has been my custom to do so since even before my service as Assistant Secretary of State.

As I entered the room Secretary and Mrs. Hull were watching on the television the proceedings at Lake Success. I wish every Member of the Senate could have been with me and could have heard Secretary Hull's wise and penetrating discussion of the vast problems with which we are faced today. I am sure Secretary Hull will not mind my reporting to his old colleagues in the Senate that he is deeply concerned because we here are devoting so much of our time to matters of relative insignificance, while the world is trembling on the edge of catastrophe. I am sure he will not mind my repeating his distress at the Senate's political partisanship in these tragic days.

As I left Secretary Hull, he escorted me to the door; and in shaking hands he referred to these days as "days of chaos and unspeakable danger." I made a note in my notebook of that phrase, and I asked Secretary Hull's permission to use it, because it reminded me of his eloquent statements during his years of service in the Senate and as Secretary of State. I hope my colleagues in the Senate will remember these words of our wise and experienced leader, Secretary Hull, as I make my point in this speech and sound my warning.

Mr. President, I speak now because this is the first opportunity I have had to get the floor since we last recessed; and I speak because it is my considered judgment that since we recessed, the Senate, through the processes of its own internal and party machinery, has added immeasurably to the chaos and the unspeakable danger of today's world.

I refer specifically, Mr. President, to the appointment of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] to the Senate Appropriations Committee's subcommittee which is responsible for the budget of the Department of State. I think that even in normal times we could question a procedure which would give the potential power of life or death over any Government department — the power to grant or withhold funds, or to allot them in detail—to any Senator who had proved himself an implacable and, in this case, I may add, an irresponsible enemy of the Department concerned.

Mr. WELKER. Mr. President——

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I decline to yield until I have finished my brief statement. It will not take more than 5 or 6 minutes.

In these days of chaos and unspeakable danger, we must question an appointment which gives over to a ruthless propagandist such enormous potential control over the destiny of the Department of State.

Mr. WELKER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the violation by the Senator from Connecticut of rule XIX, paragraph 2, of the Rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). The Senator from Connecticut will take his seat.

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Connecticut be permitted to proceed in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut may proceed.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, anyone who has appeared countless times before the Appropriations Committees, as I have, knows the great powers which rest in these committees and in the hands of each and every member of them who wishes to concern himself with the problems at issue before them. This enormous potential power over the destiny of the State Department is now in the hands of a man who is an announced foe and enemy of this Department.

I think the general principle I am enunciating would be applicable even if the warfare of this particular Senator against this particular department sprang from sincere and carefully considered conviction. However, there is more to the warfare in this case, as all of us in the Senate know. Senator McCARTHY's is a kind of guerrilla warfare. Each of us may have his own adjectives to describe Senator McCARTHY's attacks against the State Department on the floor of the Senate last year; but there is no doubt about what the adjectives add up to and what our private consensus is though few have chosen to state it publicly. Senator McCARTHY's performance can perhaps be summed up in the slogan: If you can't make one libel stick, try another, and then try another.

Mr. WELKER. Mr. President, I again call the Senator from Connecticut to order, and in that connection I cite rule XIX, paragraph 2, of the standing Rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would make inquiry as to the manner in which the Senator from Connecticut has caused an infraction of the rule referred to.

Mr. WELKER. The Senator from Connecticut has directly and indirectly, by words, inferred malicious and bad conduct to the junior Senator from Wisconsin, by imputing to him conduct and motives unworthy of a Senator in this Chamber.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Connecticut be permitted to proceed in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not satisfied that the statements made by the Senator from Connecticut constitute an infraction of the rule. Unless they do constitute an infraction of the rule, it would appear to the Chair that the Senator who has uttered the words is not out of order.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I think the rule which has been referred to gives a Senator the right to make the motion which has been made. The procedure which has been followed in the past is to move that the Senator be permitted to proceed in order. I make that motion at this time.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to make an observation. The Chair has no doubt that the statement made by the majority leader is correct; but the Chair has raised this question because he thinks it is about time for the Senate to give earnest consideration to a change in the rule, in cases in which no evidence is adduced in regard to an infraction of the rule itself, and in which discretion lies exclusively with one Member of the Senate to determine whether the Senator who has been speaking has been guilty of an infraction of the rule and is out of order.

The Chair wishes to give notice that, as a Member of the Senate, he will bring this matter to the attention of the Senate in the hope that consideration will be given to a change in the rule, which it seems to the Chair is not conducive to orderly procedure in this great body.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President——

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, my motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will take his seat.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Connecticut be permitted to proceed in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not debatable.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut may proceed.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I would not willingly or knowingly violate rule XIX.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I prefer not to yield. I fear that if I yield to my friend the Senator from Minnesota, I shall feel under obligation to yield to other Senators. I prefer not to yield until I finish this brief statement.

I did go over this statement with a Member of the Senate of long years of experience, so that I would protect myself against the danger of violating either rule XIX or any of the other myriad rules of the Senate with which I am not sufficiently familiar. I wish to make it clear that, if there is an infraction of the Senate rules in anything I am saying, it is not because I did not try to stay within the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will proceed in order.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, I myself have been the victim of Senator McCARTHY's attacks or libels. He came into my State three times during the recent election, to speak in the three largest cities of Connecticut. He attacked my colleague [Mr. McMAHON] and me, after resorting to his standardized assaults upon the Secretary of State and the State Department. In New Haven, he charged that Senator McMAHON and I supported policies which gave aid and support to Communists everywhere. Of course, I could, and did, publicly defend myself. The members of the State Department, however, who have been subjected to equally false and irresponsible charges, are helpless. In his speeches in Connecticut, Senator McCARTHY again and again sneered at Dean Acheson, about whom I hope to speak on the floor tomorrow, as "The Red Dean of Fashion." I, myself, listened to Senator McCARTHY on the radio and heard this phrase, this sneering phrase, "The Red Dean of Fashion." Here is a phrase to rival the best from the propaganda mill of the Kremlin. This kind of phrase is a perfect example of the worst and most terrifying aspect of the Russian propaganda.

In the future, State Department officers must suffer not only in silence, but, with this Appropriations Committee appointment, suffer in still another way. They will find their budgets manipulated by their tormentor, activity by activity, and division by division, behind closed doors, and for no reason they can fathom or refute. The junior Senator from Wisconsin is to be the judge, the jury, and the prosecutor of the State Department. He becomes his own kangaroo court. He is to share in the vast and almost unlimited inquisitorial power of this Appropriations Subcommittee. He is to help decide who gets what, and when. The attention he expects to give to this assignment, we do not need to guess. We read it in the Times-Herald this morning. The Times-Herald announces that Senator McCARTHY is "elated"—"elated" is the verb—is "elated" at this appointment; and, Mr. President, no wonder. For the first time, he has a big and powerful lever in his hands, and a ready-made platform on which to exploit it. And this occurs, to use Mr. Hull's phrase, in these days of chaos and unspeakable danger. The Republican Committee on Committees, under the Senate practice by which each party makes its own designations to committee and subcommittee assignments, is responsible for this action.

Is it to be wondered that whole sections of the American people tend to lose confidence in their representative form of Government? If the public understood the significance of this appointment, a quiver of revulsion would run from one end of the country to the other. Decent people everywhere would experience shock, surprise, amazement, and distress.

Further, I ask whether this is the way to inspire the best efforts of the hundreds of able and devoted people who hold key positions in the State Department. Who among us now would urge any friend to take a major position in the State Department, if he is to be subjected to unverified and unverifiable, silent, behind-closed-doors charges when he comes up for his budget? I ask whether any Member of the Senate would want to subject himself to the indignities and to the attacks upon his character, the strain and tension with his friends and his subordinates.

Only last night I had dinner with a group who were discussing, case by case, men of top ability who had refused to come to Washington to help Mr. Wilson and Mr. Johnston, or to enter the Government service at this time, because they were unwilling potentially to subject themselves to this kind of treatment and attack.

I should like to call upon the responsible leaders of the Republican Party to re-examine this appointment, and to re-examine it in the terms of the national interest in a time of crisis. I ask for the right to meet with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] and his 14 associates of the Republican Committee on Committees. I ask the privilege of presenting to them my views on the potential consequences of an action I choose to think was not adequately considered. I am told that such a request has not been made heretofore on the floor of the Senate. In that sense it is a most unusual request.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENTON. I am almost through, Mr. President.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield on the point he is making about the Republican Committee on Committees?

Mr. BENTON. I am almost through. I had refused to yield to other Senators before the distinguished minority leader came into the Chamber.

Mr. WHERRY. I was not aware of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut declines to yield.

Mr. BENTON. I prefer to wait a moment or two longer, until I shall have finished.

But, Mr. President, if mine is an unusual request, this is certainly a most unusual problem, and we are living in most unusual times.

Let me read the list of the 14 members of the Republican Committee on Committees. They are: Senators BUTLER, chairman; BRICKER, CAIN, ECTON, FLANDERS, IVES, JENNER, KEM, LANGER, LODGE, MALONE, MCCARTHY, M. C. SMITH, WATKINS, and WILLIAMS.

It so happens that I am the only Member of the Senate who has served as an operating executive of the State Department; and I think the distinguished occupant of the chair at this moment, the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], and I are the only two Members of the Senate who have served in the State Department. I am told that I am the only one in decades to have come into the Senate after experience as an operating executive in the State Department. I am sure from my own experiences, and from my own first-hand observations of the problem that is involved in this appointment, that many of the Senators, whose names I have just read, would not approve it. I cannot even believe that the appointment was discussed by this committee, because I feel sure that some of those Senators would have objected to it. And here we have the most important appointment of the year, yes, by far the most significant appointment of the year. Yet I doubt whether it was discussed by this key group of important Republican leaders. I am surprised that only the Washington Evening Star carried the news of this appointment on its front page. This shows how little the grave danger is understood, not only in this body but outside of it.

Mr. President, and fellow Members of the Senate, my warning is this: If this appointment cannot be reversed, all of us in the Senate, all of us who cherish the sober, judicious, and honorable traditions of the Senate, must now be doubly vigilant to speak up against the first signs of the new and worse siege of irresponsibility which I predict lies ahead of us. The American public, to whom a subcommittee may have little meaning, and the organs of information and opinion which serve the public, must now be prepared to watch and judge the performance of this subcommittee in the light of its extraordinary and dangerous composition. If we fail to do these things, the chaos can only be heightened, the unspeakable danger can only be deepened.

Mr. President, unless there are questions, I yield the floor.

Mr. WHERRY, Mr. BRICKER, and several other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, since the Senator from Connecticut declined to yield to me, I should like to make an observation. The Republican Party——

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, are the Senator's remarks about to be directed at me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there are certain rules by which we operate. Those rules have absolutely been maintained in connection with the appointment of Senators to committees, legislative committees and otherwise. I am quite satisfied that the members of the Republican committee on committees did not interrogate anyone with reference to his feelings about the State Department or how he felt regarding the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON]. They went ahead and organized efficiently according to the rules of the conference with reference to seniority. Of course there were some disappointments in connection with membership on some committees. For example, last year the Republicans attempted to place on the Small Business Committee certain Senators who had had long service in that connection, and we very humbly made suggestions to the majority party. But what happened? They were all ignored; their service did not count for anything. Oh, no; they had been somewhat hard on the administration, and, therefore, there would be new faces on that committee.

I am not saying, Mr. President, that the membership of the committee is not of a high standard, but the facts are that when we attempted to help straighten out the situation and endeavored to have members appointed to the committee who we thought would be very efficient and would help the Senate of the United States, the Democratic Party turned us down. It did a thing that had not happened before in 9 years—it wiped out the entire personnel and appointed other Senators over the suggestions of the Republican members.

Only recently the Vice President appointed to the Small Business Committee five Republican members, in spite of what we thought was a proper proportionate representation. When the matter was called to the attention of the Vice President he changed his decision, which I think was the proper thing to do, and appointed a sixth Republican Senator in lieu of one Democratic Senator who retired from the committee. But it required efforts on the part of the minority to have that done. We did not have any help then. Whenever we have attempted so to organize committees that they would promote the efficiency of the Senate we have not received cooperation from the Democratic side of the aisle.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, further to strengthen the remarks of the able minority leader on this question, let me say that I was present in the Appropriations Committee when the subcommittees were named. The very able and distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee is now the Presiding Officer. There was no question raised as to whether this Senator or that Senator should be seated on the various subcommittees. I was present when the Republican group was developing the various committees and subcommittees and discussing seniority rights of Members, because seniority rights of members of committees are recognized. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] gave consideration to each and every Senator in accordance with the seniority rights which he had earned, and each one was given consideration for appointment on the subcommittee of his selection. There was no deliberate attempt to pack committees, nor were there any deliberate attempts on the part of the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] to exercise his influence over any Member of the Senate. He received recognition in the appointments.

I look upon the distinguished Senator from Connecticut as a friend. He is not only distinguished, but is an able Senator; he is not only a former student of Carleton College, which is located in my own home town, but he is a member of the board of trustees of that college, and I should not like at any time to cast a reflection upon his ideals, because I have a high regard for him; but in this instance, I think the Senator from Connecticut has drawn upon his imagination with reference to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], who merely exercised his seniority right.

Mr. President, I am sorry that such remarks have come into the discussion on the Senate floor this afternoon, because I fear they will further confuse the public and further cause mistrust of this very able body, the United States Senate, insofar as the public is concerned.

I say again, Mr. President, that the Senator from Wisconsin earned his right to his seat on the committee because of his seniority.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Minnesota for his observations, which are absolutely true. I should like to say that I think the Republican Committee on Committees is represented geographically and with ability by some of the finest Members of the Senate. I paid a tribute to them in the conference, and I do so now. I think they did a masterful job in connection with our conference rules and seniority rules in placing Members on committees in such a way as to bring about the most efficient and the most able service which could be provided for the legislative committees and the special committees of the Senate.

Mr. President, I did not hear all the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut. He said there was difficulty in getting men to take office in the Government in Washington. My understanding has been, with reference to the formation of the Office of Price Stabilization, that even the Democratic Party itself has turned thumbs down on the appointment of many efficient men because they did not come through the proper channels of patronage. If we are to have a proper house cleaning, we need to bring able men into the organization of the Government. Such men should not be turned down because they belong to the Republican Party.

Mr. President, I do not know about those who are thin-skinned with reference to criticism. Certainly I myself, having been for 9 years a Member of the Senate, have been severely criticized; and I may say to the Senator from Connecticut that he will be criticized in the same way. The only thing to do is to live and to perform so that over the years criticism will be of no avail so far as a man's own leadership and service are concerned. Let people criticize if they want to. Always be right, and then let people criticize.

Mr. President, with reference to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY], he can be criticized from coast to coast, and he can be criticized around the world, and it can be said that he caused confusion; but I think he has done more to establish confidence in the hearts of Americans than has any other man I know of in the past 2 years. He is giving the people of America new heart in cleaning out the infiltration of communism in the United States. The Senator from Connecticut can stand on the floor of the Senate and insult the Senator from Wisconsin and be directed to take his seat; but when the service of the Senator from Wisconsin shall be concluded, I predict that he will go down in a blaze of glory. He has performed a great service to the people of the United States.

ALLOCATION OF TELEVISION FREQUENCIES FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I am introducing a Senate joint resolution providing that the Federal Communications Commission be directed to make a study of the problem of allocating television frequencies for use by educational institutions for the purpose of nonprofit educational programs.

The word "education" does not appear in the text of the Constitution of the United States, but the people of the country have realized since the birth of our Nation the necessity for education as the cornerstone of democracy. Thomas Jefferson once said that the risk of losing our freedoms is small if reason is left free to combat error. Daniel Webster phrased the same principle in the following words: "On the diffusion of education among the people rests the preservation and perpetuation of our free institutions." As early as 1798, Thomas Robert Malthus, a great English supporter of improved public education, answered the argument that broader public education would lead to the infiltration of dangerous ideas among the general public, by saying that, in his judgment, "an instructed and well-informed people would be much less likely to be led away by inflammatory writings, and much better able to detect the false declamation of interested and ambitious demagogues than an ignorant people." In fact, he continued, "those who object to the instruction of the people may be fairly suspected of a wish to encourage their ignorance, as a pretext for tyranny."

Despite the lack of mention of education in the Federal Constitution, the National Government has recognized since its inception a responsibility for assisting the several States in providing free public educational institutions.

The first specific example I would like to cite strikes very close to home, for the establishment of a land-grant policy by the Federal Government for the support of public education really began in 1803, with the admission of Ohio to statehood. By the act of Congress enabling the admission of Ohio to the Union, the sixteenth section of land in each township was reserved to the inhabitants thereof for the support of schools. Subsequent admissions to the Union contained similar, and later even more generous, land-grant provisions.

The passage of the so-called Land Grant Acts of 1862 and 1890, also known as the Morrill Acts, extended the policy of granting Federal lands for the specific purpose of the establishment by the States of colleges for the development of agriculture and the mechanic arts, which are now known as land-grant colleges. Today there are some 69 of these colleges in the United States, and the graduates stand among the foremost citizens of our Nation. In later years, through the media of grants, loans, and matching funds, the Federal Government directly assisted the States in the field of education, proceeding on the eminently sound premise that, since a republic is a popular government, an informed electorate is essential to our continuing prosperity and progress. In terms of land grants alone, approximately 100,000,000 acres of the 1,450,000,000 acres constituting the area of the continental United States, excluding Alaska, have been granted to the States or subdivisions thereof for educational purposes. In Alaska, over 21,000,000 acres of that Territory have been reserved for educational use. So the relationship of education and democracy is not only a close one, but is interdependent, and that principle has found expression throughout the history of our Nation.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the distinguished Senator from Ohio have a list of the land-grant colleges? I think the insertion of such a list in the RECORD would be of value to all of us.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I shall get such a list and insert it in the RECORD.

The principle of setting aside grants of land for educational purposes is strikingly akin to the well-established principle of reserving a part of our natural resources for future needs. There is a parallel between the great natural wealth of this Nation and the education of our citizens. In a world of crisis, we must rely entirely and completely on these two assets, and, in my judgment, we cannot survive without judicious attention to our resources in nature and in the minds of Americans.

The development of communications by radio wave brought Congress face to face with the problem of disposition of national resources, for the frequencies in the radio spectrum were early recognized to belong to all the people, jointly and in common. As guardian of the public right and interest in this vital resource, the Federal Communications Commission was established by the Congress in 1934. Recognizing the importance of education to democracy, the Congress provided, in section 307 (c) of the Communications Act of 1934, a requirement that the Federal Communications Commission study the needs of educational institutions and radio frequencies, with a view toward allocating or setting aside frequencies for educational purposes. As a result of this direction on the part of Congress, the Commission held hearings and a Federal Education Committee was formed in 1935. The then head of the Office of Education, Dr. John Studebaker, was appointed Chairman of the Committee. The task of that Committee was to meet with members of the radio industry and insure that educational needs were met, but the efforts of the Committee showed little real achievement.

Some educational institutions were allocated AM channels for educational purposes. The Ohio State University, in my home town of Columbus, Ohio, operates the AM and FM radio station WOSU on a nonprofit basis. I should like to mention briefly the success of the operation of Station WOSU. Purely for educational purposes, the station has programed what is known as the Ohio School of the Air for over 20 years. This program was the first of its kind in the Nation, and a recent study indicates that two out of three elementary classrooms within the 20-county primary listening area of the station listen to one or more programs of the station.

There were, during the thirties, a number of suggestions, in both Congress and the Commission, to assist these nonprofit educational radio stations. These suggestions included requiring networks to service educational stations on public service programs, requiring each commercial station to devote a certain percentage of time to educational programs and the allocation of high-power, clear-channel stations, on a ratio of one for every three States, to be devoted entirely to educational programing. None of these suggestions bore fruit, and, by and large, the records of educational purpose radio stations have not been as satisfactory as that of WOSU. Some have turned to commercial operation, although they are still operated entirely, or almost so, by students and faculty. One example of this is Station WWL, owned and operated by Loyola University of the South, in New Orleans, La.

On April 1, 1947, the Commission set aside the 88–92 megacycle band of the

FM spectrum for use by noncommercial educational stations, primarily to meet the requirements of those stations in that group who were unable, due to conflict with commercial stations, to broadcast during evening hours. This action on the part of the Commission was a further acknowledgment of the propriety of reserving for public educational purposes a part of the natural resources of the Nation.

The advent of television on a large scale poses new problems for the Congress and the Commission. In the few years since the war, millions of families have acquired television receivers. I have seen estimates that, within 3 years, there will be six to eight times as many television stations broadcasting as we now have. The impact of this new communication medium has already been felt in the schools. In some areas, children spend more time before the television screens than they do in the classrooms.

Educators know that the audio-visual approach of television provides one of the most effective methods of teaching. It is up to the Congress and the Commission to insure that at least a proportionate part of this great and newly developed resource is reserved for the use of all the people. If education by radio can be as successful as WOSU has shown it to be, then the same principle is applicable many fold to television.

It is further the duty of the Congress to indicate to the Commission its deep interest in the problem of the inter-relationship of education and television. For that purpose, and mindful of the well-established precedents which I have already cited, I am today introducing a joint resolution directing the Federal Communications Commission to make a thorough study of all aspects of the problem and to report to the Congress thereon. I am aware that the Commission has already made commendable steps in that direction. By the adoption of this resolution, however, the Congress will lend an added impetus to the action of the Commission, and, will impress upon the Commission the necessity for affording the American people, who are, after all, the true proprietors of the television frequencies, the choice of using at least an equitable part of this resource for educational purposes. Such action by the Congress is consistent with the American tradition and recognizes the affinity of education and democracy. It is in full accord with the principle, so well established throughout our history, of reserving natural resources for the benefit of what has proved to be our greatest resource—the intelligently informed minds of free American citizens.

Mr. President, I introduce the joint resolution and ask that it be published in full at the end of my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 28) to direct the Federal Communications Commission to make a study of the problem of allocating television frequencies for use by educational institutions for the purpose of nonprofit educational programing, introduced by Mr. BRICKER, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Communications Commission is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the problem of reservation of television frequencies for use by educational institutions for the purpose of nonprofit educational programing. The Commission is further directed to give consideration to the allocation of at least one frequency within each State or suitable geographic region to educational institutions for the purposes of educational programing. The Commission is further directed to report to the Congress as soon as practicable the results of such study and investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

FOOD AND FIBER FOR DEFENSE

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, under the emergency declared by the President of the United States, this country has now embarked on a huge defense program. First and foremost such a program requires ample food and fiber both for the military and for the public. In order to insure that such supplies will be available at all times it will be necessary:

First. To safeguard the farm-labor supply at the production level.

Second. To allocate materials to agriculture which will insure adequate machinery and repairs to maintain production.

I believe that a farm-policy council should be set up by the leading farm organizations of the United States, to alert and advise with the proper governmental authorities on these two pressing needs of agriculture.

An excellent editorial in the current February issue of the Country Gentleman very aptly states the need for such a farm-policy council, and I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LET'S STRENGTHEN AGRICULTURE'S POSITION

Farming needs to be better safeguarded under the defense production program. The farm labor situation, which could become critical by next summer, is an example of what can happen unless the interests of agriculture are properly looked after.

It isn't a matter that affects farmers alone. The public, which will have to do without some other things, will want plenty of food and the defense program requires ample supplies of food and fiber. But neither fact assures prompt attention to farm needs for all-out production. Somebody will have to take the responsibility for getting that kind of attention.

The Defense Production Act, passed by Congress, did fairly well in protecting farm prices. But it left the Department of Agriculture with little authority over the workings of the defense program. The Department can advise and can present claims for materials necessary for farm production. But this does not mean they will be granted. It will be only one of a number of interests pressing claims for materials, some of them with a stronger backing than agriculture now has in Washington.

Not only vigor in pressing farm requirements but an alertness in anticipating them is needed. The farm labor situation, reported in the Roundup columns on pages 4 and 10 of this issue, shows how important this can be. Such a loss of experienced farm workers, as now seems certain, may seriously handicap the heavy production program that has been called for. Farming is in a much different position than at the outbreak of World War II. At that time a surplus of farm workers had been backed up on the farms by the depression. Even then a farm manpower shortage soon developed. There is scant surplus of farm manpower now and farming is mechanized to twice the extent it was in 1941. Just any kind of worker won't do now.

This makes it imperative also that a shortage of spare parts be averted in the future. Many farmers keenly recall the time they spent and the distances they traveled trying to find needed parts during the last war. A far more highly mechanized agriculture couldn't stand that sort of experience again. Somebody will have to see to it that it doesn't happen.

Agriculture isn't in a position to do much about such things now. Outside the Department's services it has been represented only by a consulting committee on the National Resources Security Board, now superseded by the Office of Defense Mobilization. This committee was not fully representative of farming and has been of little effect.

Something is needed to strengthen the position of agriculture. For that purpose Country Gentleman suggests a farm policy council, set up by the leading farm organizations. Its job would be to keep watch over the needs of farming and to press them vigorously when they arise. Labor has such a council, and there has been no lack of vigor in presenting labor's case in Washington. A council, fully representative of agriculture, could be an effective voice in its behalf. It could cooperate with the Secretary if he were willing, as he should be, and reinforce his claims for needed farm help and materials. And it could work along the same lines with the two agricultural committees of Congress.

But before any such council can be set up, two things will be necessary. The various farm organizations will have to submerge their differences and work together for the common good of the farmers they represent. And there will have to be less thinking in terms of commodity groups and more in terms of agriculture as a whole.

This lack of unity and the struggle for special commodity gains together make up one of the reasons why agriculture isn't in as strong a position as it should be. The effects are felt both in Washington and in the attitude of the public, which isn't any too friendly toward farming and is inclined to take its food supply for granted.

These disadvantages should be removed. In this emergency farming requires a single effective medium through which its needs can get attention. It ought to have a responsible channel through which it can reach the public with the facts about agriculture. A farm policy council could render both these services. The farm organizations should see the opportunity and act upon it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McFARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

Gilbert J. Fortier, of New Orleans, La., to be comptroller of customs with headquarters at New Orleans, La.; and Calvin E. Wright, of Rupert, Idaho, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Idaho.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

Barbour C. Stokes and several other officers for appointment in the Coast and Geodetic Survey;

Dwight H. Dexter, and sundry other persons for appointment in the Coast Guard; and Joseph P. Adams, of Washington, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

UNITED NATIONS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Mrs. Anna Eleanor Roosevelt to be representative of the United States of America on the Human Rights Commission of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George P. Baker to be representative of the United States of America on the Transport and Communications Commission of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Leroy D. Stinebower to be representative of the United States of America on the Economic, Employment, and Development Commission of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIRECTOR OF INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AFFAIRS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Thomas D. Cabot to be Director for International Security Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John D. Erwin, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Honduras.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Monnett B. Davis, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Israel.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Stanton Griffis, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Spain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I think it would not be amiss if I were to say a word about Mr. Stanton Griffis of Connecticut, whose nomination as American Ambassador to Spain has just been confirmed.

Mr. Griffis is a resident of the State of Connecticut. His service to the Government of the United States, both in Poland and in Egypt, as well as in the Argentine, has been of the highest quality. I think it is particularly appropriate that a man of his ability, experience, and patriotism should be named as Ambassador of the United States to Spain. When he departs to undertake his duties, I am sure that we will all wish him the greatest success.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Horatio Mooers to be consul general of the United States of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William N. Fraleigh to be consul of the United States of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Dalton T. Pierson to be United States attorney for the district of Montana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Arthur Maguire to be United States attorney for the middle district of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Antonio C. Baza to be United States marshal for the district of Guam.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the Executive Calendar. Without objection, the President will be notified of all nominations confirmed this day.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE, DISTRICT OF IDAHO

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, with the approval of the distinguished acting minority leader [Mr. WELKER], I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination of Calvin E. Wright, of Rupert, Idaho, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Calvin E. Wright to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed; and, without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

Mr. WELKER. Mr. President, I should like to tell the distinguished majority leader and my colleagues in the Senate that I have nothing but praise for the appointment of the man whose nomination has just been confirmed as collector of internal revenue for the State of Idaho. I know that the people of Idaho will rejoice in the appointment of this distinguished native son to be their collector of internal revenue.

It was my privilege to attend school with this man; and though he be of opposite political faith, I find much to admire in him.

In conclusion, let me say again that the people of Idaho generally, both Democrats and Republicans, will rejoice at this very fine appointment.

I thank the majority leader.

COMPTROLLER OF CUSTOMS, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I make the same request with regard to the nomination of Gilbert J. Fortier, of New Orleans, to be comptroller of customs with headquarters at New Orleans, La.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Gilbert J. Fortier to be comptroller of customs, with headquarters at New Orleans, La.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the nomination is confirmed. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

AMENDMENT OF REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 101, Calendar No. 44. If agreed to, the motion will make the bill the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 101) to amend the Reorganization Act of 1949.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I may say that I do not intend to proceed today with the consideration of the bill. It will go over until Monday. I merely wish to make it the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, with an amendment, on page 2, line 17, after the words "period of", to strike out "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof "twelve", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Reorganization Act of 1949 (63 Stat. 203) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"TITLE III

"SEC. 301. During the time that this title is in force, and for any of the following purposes, but only in matters related to the national security or defense, namely, any of the purposes set forth in section 2 (a) hereof; the promotion of the national security or defense; the support and maintenance of the Armed Forces; the better utilization of resources and industries; the more effective exercise and the more efficient administration by the President of his functions as Chief Executive and as Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces; or the better coordination of agencies and their functions; the President is hereby authorized to transmit to the Congress, under this title, reorganization plans which shall, except as provided in this title, be governed by the provisions of titles I and II of this act.

"SEC. 302. Each reorganization plan transmitted to the Congress under this title shall—

"(a) be certified by the President in his message of transmittal to the Congress as submitted under this title;

"(b) be identified as being temporary;

"(c) become effective in accordance with the provisions of section 6 hereof, except that a period of 12 days prior to taking effect shall obtain in lieu of the 60 days specified in the said section 6; and

"(d) remain in force only until the termination of this title or until otherwise made inapplicable by or pursuant to law.

"SEC. 303. (a) In addition to the matters specified in titles I and II hereof, any reorganization plan under this title may provide for either or both of the following, which shall for the purposes of this title be deemed to be reorganizations:

"(1) The extension of any function of any agency to any other agency; and

"(2) The utilization of the facilities, services, or personnel of any agency.

"(b) The President may include in any reorganization plan transmitted under this title provisions for the appointment of officers and other personnel in such manner as the President shall specify.

"(c) There may be omitted from the message of the President transmitting any reorganization plan under this title reference to the probable reduction of expenditures to be brought about by the plan (provided in section 3 of this act).

"(d) No reorganization plan under this title shall provide for, and no reorganization under this title shall have the effect of—

"(1) abolishing or transferring an executive department or all the functions thereof or establishing any new executive department; or

"(2) changing the name of any executive department or the title of its head, or designating any agency as 'Department' or its head as 'Secretary'; or

"(3) abolishing, transferring, or consolidating the whole or any part of the civil functions of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army.

"SEC. 304. Upon the termination of this title, all functions, agencies, property, personnel, records, and funds affected by any reorganization plan then in force under the provisions of this title shall have such organizational status as may heretofore or hereafter be provided by law or by reorganization plan under titles I and II hereof.

"SEC. 305. This title shall terminate on June 30, 1952, or on the termination of the national emergency proclaimed by the President on December 16, 1950, or on a termination date designated by concurrent resolution of the Congress or by the President, whichever date is the earliest.

"SEC. 306. This title may be cited as the 'Defense Reorganization Act of 1951'."

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN B. SULLIVAN, OF MISSOURI

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives which will be read.

The resolution (H. Res. 104) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN B. SULLIVAN, a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read, and for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 62) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN B. SULLIVAN, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Under the second resolving clause, the President pro tempore appointed Mr. KEM and Mr. HENNINGS the committee on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, February 5, 1951, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1951

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Norman Shands, pastor, First Baptist Church, Spartanburg, S. C., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in this quiet moment we pause to recognize Thy presence in our midst and to seek the power, cleansing, and guidance of Thy holy spirit in our minds and hearts. We thank Thee for the great causes to which Thou hast called these Thy servants to address themselves, and for the confidence that must be in their hearts that their labors are always in vain except they be established by Thee.

We pray that Thou wilt enable us, not only here, but throughout our Nation as people of Thine, to discipline ourselves that we may be useful to Thee in achieving in the world the peace for which Thy Son lived and died, for we ask it in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, January 31, 1951, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 62):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN B. SULLIVAN, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The message also announced that pursuant to the above resolution, Senator KEM and Senator HENNINGS were appointed on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

PROCEEDINGS AT AUDITORIUM OF THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the proceedings that took place yesterday at the auditorium of the Library of Congress, the introduction by the Vice President of General Eisenhower, and General Eisenhower's address on that occasion.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice in the paper the general said there had been a misstatement about one year. Does the date appear there as it should be?

Mr. McCORMACK. This has been sent to the general to look over, I would inform the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that this address may be extended at this point, notwithstanding it may exceed the limit of an ordinary extension.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

REPORT OF GENERAL OF THE ARMIES DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER TO AN INFORMAL MEETING OF THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES HELD IN THE COOLIDGE AUDITORIUM, LIBRARY OF CONGRESS, VICE PRESIDENT BARKLEY PRESIDING

Vice President BARKLEY. Ladies and gentlemen of the two Houses of Congress, I wish to congratulate the Members of the two Houses on their full attendance here today to hear General Eisenhower report to us on one of the most important missions ever undertaken by any American. I regret that there will be no opportunity for questions to be propounded to General Eisenhower in view of the fact that his talk to us here will consume probably an hour or more and we have got to get back to our respective Houses for the 12 o'clock session, and in view of the further fact that he is to appear this afternoon before a joint session of the Committees on Foreign Relations and the Armed Services of the Senate, and tomorrow before similar committees of the House, and is to address the American people over the radio tomorrow night. It was felt that it would be impossible and inadvisable under these circumstances for him to be submitted to interrogation from the audience today.

With this preliminary statement I have the great pleasure of presenting to you a man of distinction, who needs no description, one who has just returned from this important mission to the Atlantic Pact states of Europe and is here to report to us as fully as he feels advisable to report to us here, and to report later to the committees and to the American people, General Eisenhower. [Applause, the Members rising.]

General EISENHOWER. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I am very deeply aware of the distinction implicit in the invitation to appear before the elected representatives of the people. I am also keenly aware of the responsibility that rests upon me in accepting such an invitation, a responsibility that is not, of course, easy to discharge.

The very great problems involved in the defense of the free world are so vast and so complex that no man could hope in a lifetime of study and reflection to solve them all. He can certainly not be sure of the accuracy of his conclusions. In my own case, to a lifetime of professional study I have recently been able to add the observations of a very hurried trip to 13 capitals, but that is most obviously a meager foundation upon which to base the conclusions that I have formed and am about to present to you.

So, aware as I am of this responsibility, I do assure you that I approach you in very deep humility and ask from you only this much on faith, that you do believe in the sincerity of my convictions. I have no end to serve, as I know you have no end to serve, except the good of the United States; and that is the reason I am talking here. [Applause.] And that is the reason I am back in uniform, and it is the reason I have the courage to appear before this body to express my convictions.

I am also aware of the very big responsibilities devolving upon you gentlemen. You will be forced from time to time, and soon, to make decisions that are going to be far reaching. In my opinion, they may determine the course of our civilization, whether or not free government is going to continue to exist upon the earth safely, and with all of the rights and privileges that devolve upon the individual citizen under that protection.

As I start this talk I think it would be well to establish a platform of understanding. Let us make certain assumptions. Now, the first, I have already made, that the Members of Congress here assembled and I have one object in common view, the good of the United States.

The next assumption I would like to make is that we are concerned not only with the protection of our territories of our rights, of our privileges, but we are also concerned with the defense of a way of life. Our own way of life has certain factors that must persist if that way of life itself is to persist for example, the freedom of the individual, his political freedom, his freedom of worship, and that he will have an economy based upon free enterprise. In other words, our system must remain solvent, as we attempt a solution of this great problem of security. Else we have lost the battle from within that we are trying to win from without.

I do not believe, for example, that the United States can pick up the world on its economic, financial, and military shoulders and carry it. We must have cooperation if we are to work with other nations. [Applause.] The results of the effort to be the mutual, the common good, the common security of the free nations of the free world.

Military defense is made up of many things. The things that defend the nation or that act for it on the field of battle are many and varied, and as complex as the nation itself. The fighting forces are but the cutting edge of a very great machine, the inspiration and the power for which are found in the hearts of the citizens. All of the various mechanisms that are necessary are represented in our industrial capacity, our economic processes, and so on, so that when we talk about defending the free world we are not merely talking about defense in the terms of divisions and battleships and planes. We are talking about what is in our hearts, what we understand with our heads, and what we are going to do as a body. And let me here say, gentlemen, that unless this assumption is correct I am out of place.

We are not attempting to build a force that has any aggressive, any belligerent intent; we are concerned only with one thing. In a world in which the power of military might is still too much respected, we are going to build for ourselves a secure wall of peace, of security. [Applause.]

This very moment I think is a good time to bring up this one thought: What we are trying to do cannot honestly be considered by any other nation as a threat to its existence, as a threat to any peaceful purpose it may have. If any such charge is made in the propaganda of the world, it is for a nefarious purpose, and any kind of attempt or announcement to move against us because of the simple modest actions we are trying to take is merely an excuse. I must say to you that that purpose would have been executed anyway if we did not do it, if that is the only reason they have for moving against us.

The NATO organization foresees and plans for the common defense of the free world with specific reference to those nations on the border of the North Atlantic. Since we are approaching this problem from the welfare of the United States, I think it well to pause just for a moment to review certain factors with you. These factors are: What is the importance of Western Europe to us? There are, of course, ties of sentiment; they are the people from whom we drew originally our genius, our blood stream; they are our relatives, and there are other bonds beyond those of sentiment that appeal to us in this job of protecting ourselves. We must look at all the common factors.

Behind our faith in them, since that is the basic assumption of the NATO organization, first of all in Western Europe there exists the greatest pool of skilled labor in the world. In western Europe exists a great industrial fabric that is second in its capacity only to that of our Nation. There are more than 200,000,000 people who are related to us. If we take that whole complex with its potential for military exploitation and transfer it from our side to another side, the military balance of power has shifted so drastically that our safety would be gravely imperiled, grossly imperiled. The significance of the Western European group of nations to us is even greater than that. They have with many areas of the world close blood, political, and economic ties. It is scarcely possible to imagine the fall of Western Europe to communism without the simultaneous fall of certain of these great areas, particularly those, and first those, areas which have a political dependency upon the European powers, the very areas from which we draw the materials which are absolutely essential to our existence, our way of life. No matter how strong we prove in keeping open routes of communication, we must always keep open, clearly we must keep open the areas, keep them open to us when we need their trade in order to exist. Take such items only as manganese, copper, uranium. Could we possibly ever exist without access to them?

I believe that such things as this are tied up in our concern with the western European complex in our determination—our decision that as I understand it has already been made—that we must defend them. But I refer again to the statement I have made, we cannot do this thing alone. All we would be doing would be to disperse our strength throughout the world unless we were sure first that we were being given full cooperation; and, second, that this strength of ours properly placed in other countries will there inspire the growth of still greater power and multiply every single effort that we make by comparable effort on the part of our friends.

As I said a moment ago, military strength is made up of various things of which the fighting forces are merely the cutting edge. One of the greatest factors in this whole thing is morale, and, ladies and gentlemen, almost the rest of my talk will be made up directly or indirectly in discussions of this question of morale, because morale involves understanding, it involves heart, it involves courage, fortitude, basic purpose.

Where my trip comes in is this: What have I been able to find out about the basic intent, the basic purpose, the basic morale of Europe? It is a complex question; and, again, certainly I do not consider that there is anything sacrosanct about the conclusions I have reached. Again I can only say they are honest.

We have heard for many years, five at least, much about the destruction of the European nations, about their material destruction, but above all about their loss of spirit, their loss of will, their unreadiness to do something for themselves. Of course, I think that Americans in general have not really tried to blame Europeans for this failure as we have seen it. They have tried merely to explain it. After all, Europe was occupied for 4 years; its industries were destroyed and its people lived in fear of the informer next door. They were crushed; their systems of government were overturned and they lived according to the dictates of an invader.

The effects of the Marshall plan have been marked and have been important to the partial rehabilitation of Europe, but it would be false and idle to say that there does not exist in many strata of society pessimism bordering upon defeatism.

But there is likewise evidence, ladies and gentlemen, of a rejuvenation, a growth of determination, a spirit to resist, a spirit again to try to live the lives of free men, to hold their heads up in the world, to do their part and to take the risk. I am going to quote to you a few examples, because I do not ask you to accept such a statement as that at face value I would rather give you a few examples of the things that influenced my own judgment.

On my arrival in France I talked with the Government there and found this: That to their conscription law they have now added a proviso that permits almost no exemption for any cause whatsoever. They have made it one of the strictest, most inclusive conscription laws that would be possible to devise. As of this moment their tour of service is 18 months, but they pointed out to me the very many factors that have limited it from being greater, and indicated that one of the most important of these was lack of instructors, capable instructors. They cannot get instructors because they are losing many of them each month in Indochina. But as that is relieved and they get more equipment, they will go further and extend the tour to 2 years.

They are determined to stand against communism both internally and externally with courage in their hearts. Most of it has been inspired, at least it has been strengthened by the consummation of the NATO Treaty. There is no question about that.

I moved into Belgium and found similar determination. In Holland I received statements of the increased military preparations that they are going to make.

Denmark, exposed as it is way out between the Baltic and North Seas, likewise is going to do everything that represents their maximum effort.

In Norway there is no question about the determination of their will to resist. Their attitude is that resistance to the point of destruction is preferable.

In Rome it was quite clear that there is a stiffening resolve to meet this issue face on. While they are limited in the amount of their military force by treaty, they have determined to make that force efficient and to put it unreservedly at the command of the NATO powers.

I am not even going to mention my several conversations in Germany and for a very specific reason. I personally think that there has to be a political platform achieved and an understanding reached that will contemplate an eventual and earned equality on the part of that nation before we should start to talk about including units of Germans in any kind of an army. I, certainly, for one commander, want no unwilling contingent, no soldiers serving in the pattern of the Hessians who served in our Revolutionary War, serving in any army I command. Therefore until the political leaders, the diplomats, and the statesmen find the proper answer, it is not for a soldier to delve in too deeply.

In little Luxemburg I had an unusual experience. I think you would like to hear about it as illustrating the readiness of the nations today to try to cooperate. They are very small; there are only 300,000 people there, but they set their jaws and said: "We will have universal military service with no exemptions." They said: "We are very badly handicapped; we have equipment for one battalion only. What we particularly need is more artillery equipment."

When I stopped in Ottawa I told the Canadians about this trouble and the Canadians said: "Why, we have some artillery; we can ship it tomorrow." When I got to West Point a few hours later, I was greeted with the information that the Canadian Government had approved of the transfer and just left the red tape to me and my staff to look after.

What I am trying to say is that out of these conferences I sensed the feeling that there will be a rejuvenation of spirit if we can put ourselves into this thing, not only with the sense that we must do it because there is no acceptable alternative, because standing alone and isolated in a world with the rest completely dominated by communism, our system would have to wither away, our economy could not thrive.

Just stop to consider, ladies and gentlemen, that there are in the free world today—and not counting all of the outlying segments in such places as Australia, New Zealand, South America, and other parts of the free world—in Europe and the North American Continent alone there are 350,000,000 people who represent the highest culture man has been able to achieve upon this earth. They are responsible for every advance of science, the arts, and culture; they possess great reservoirs of leadership that have not been touched; they possess on the average a higher understanding than any other people in the world; they have the greatest productive capacity. Thanks to our great wisdom in keeping the proper strength upon the sea and in the air we have access to the raw materials that we need. Why, then, are we frightened of totalitarian government? For only one reason, because they have a unity of purpose. True, it is a unity achieved by ignorance, by force, by the NKVD.

What we have got to do, the only thing we have to do, is to meet that unity with a higher type of unity, the unity of free men that will not be divided. Someone in achieving that unity has to take the leadership, and I mean some one nation, not some one individual. We cannot either individually or at the national level afford to look over our shoulders with a suspicious thought that our friend is not doing as much as we are. We must by example inspire and insist and get everybody to do his maximum. The fullness of his performance will be limited by his capacity only. All of us must make this problem that of the highest priority.

I do not say, ladies and gentlemen, that that has been achieved. I merely say that, if the presentation I have made of the military situation, the possibilities of development in the whole economic world based upon the loss or the retention of Western Europe within our own wall of security, if those presentations are only reasonably accurate, then it is clear that we must do this. What nation is more capable, more ready for providing this leadership than the United States? We have been spared much of the discouragement, the defeatism, the destruction that has been visited upon Europe. We are younger, we are fresher, and a further important point is that we are farther removed from the immediate threat. We do not dwell in the gray zone. This strength, as I see it, must grow up in the rear and be pushed out. I do not mean pushed out in the sense that as soon as we produce units they must be deployed all over the world. I mean financial, moral, military, and material strength.

Our friends must know it. Inspired by it and living with it they must produce equal amounts of their own, far more than equal in particular areas. Our view in the central position must be directed to many sectors. We cannot concentrate all our forces in any one sector, even one as important as Western Europe. We must largely sit here with great, mobile, powerful reserves ready to support our policies, our rights, our interests wherever they may be in danger in the world.

The point I make is that Western Europe is so important to our future, our future is so definitely tied up with them, that we cannot afford to do less than our best in making sure that it does not go down the drain.

I repeat that, given the premise that we must produce, there is, then, one element left, time. We must accept, we must always accept this disadvantage militarily, internationally, that goes with peaceful intent and defensive purpose only. Any aggressor picks a day on which he intends to strike, and he builds everything to that point. We have to devise a scheme that we can support, if necessary over the next 20 years, 30 years, whatever may be the time necessary, as long as the threat, the announced threat of aggression remains in the world. That means we must be ready at any time. One of the important times is today, and from here on. As long as we are determined to secure the peace we have to use, employ, or resort to force and military power. In so doing let us not forget that there is not a moment to waste.

This brings me to a very important point: One of the great deficiencies in Europe is equipment, military equipment. Not only was all of this taken away from them in the war, but their facilities, destroyed, damaged as they were, have since that time been all occupied in trying to restore some semblance of a decent standard of living to their millions. They have little in the way of munitions productivity, although it is growing, and some of it, indeed, is very good.

I believe that the transfer of certain of our units should be in direct ratio to what Europe is doing so that we know that we are all going forward together, and no one is suspicious of the other.

The great need of the moment, as I say, is equipment. The great, the crying need today, as I see it, is equipment, the impedimenta of armies, of navies, of air forces. It must be furnished quickly and properly, adjusted to this purpose of ours, the purpose of peace and security, to our ability to carry it forward without insolvency for year after year. I believe that within those limits we must now go into the production of equipment exactly as if we were preparing for the emergency of war.

We must remember that in World War II we used a system we called lend-lease, and I heard often in my headquarters people criticize this scheme of lend-lease. I never could feel that way about it, and I will tell you why, ladies and gentlemen. It took a rifle and a man to go out and advance the cause of the Allies against the enemies we had. If the United States could provide merely the rifle and get someone else to carry it in order to do the work that was necessary, I was perfectly content.

I believe in this thinking, particularly today. If we can put munitions in the hands of people that we know will serve on the side that is essential to our future security, to the kind of life our grandchildren are going to live, the only thing we need to know is that they are going forward with us. They are not lagging in their hearts or in their efforts.

I would say that in this particular subject of equipment the United States faces again the great proposition of transferring so much of its great productive capacity into the terrible business of producing munitions of war. You gentlemen are going to find it one of your most difficult, but at the same time one of your most important and immediate, tasks.

I believe as of now that with that equipment we will find a great rejuvenation in western morale. What we are trying to do, ladies and gentlemen, is to start a sort of reciprocal action across the Atlantic. We do one thing which inspires our friends to do something, and that gives us greater confidence in their thoroughness, their readiness for sacrifice. We do something more and we establish an upward-going spiral which meets this problem of strength and morale. The only thing that can defeat us is to establish a descending spiral born of suspicion, unreadiness on the part of each of us to do his job, the job that he knows in his own heart he must do.

I should like to bring to your attention a few things that I think are important to remember. Enemy propaganda has among other things, as it is reflected in the European press, tried to make it appear that the whole job is hopeless. He has shouted it from the housetops. If they say it is hopeless, they must have a purpose. Let us not believe too freely enemy propaganda, or the propaganda of somebody who wants to defeat our peaceful, our sane, our utterly just purposes. Let us not forget the strength of America, its great people, its history, its broad acres, its productive capacity, its great capacity for leadership. And then let us keep in our minds the kind of organization we sha.. have when we bind that up heart and soul and in material ways with our frien is across the sea.

I come back again for a moment to the question of morale. Nobody can defend another nation. The true defense of a nation must be found in its own soul, and you cannot import a soul. We must make sure that the heart and soul of Europe is right. That is one of the obligations, gentlemen, that is imposed on me and my staff. I cannot conceive that the United States ever consented to accept the responsibility for acting in Western Europe except with those two reservations, that their representatives would do their utmost to see that they were all advancing together and that the United States was not being made merely an Atlas to carry the world upon its shoulders. I can see that each one of you in your great responsibilities as the lawmakers of this Nation has an element and a part of that responsibility individually. But we must not watch that so closely that we fail to get out in front to provide the leadership that will make this thing a complete success.

So this faith in America is one that lies at the bottom of this whole thing. Faith that the leadership she can provide will inspire the same kind of feeling, the same kind of effort in our friends abroad. And there I am sure we must exercise a bit of patience. It takes some time for our purposes—no matter how plainly we think they may be written upon the wall—it takes some time for others to understand those purposes and to gain faith in them. Remember, we have our own doubts and divisions, and we have our own debates. Think how that is multiplied in Europe where there are 10 of these nations in this organization, and they have all of the nationalistic factors to increase the intensity of the debate. We must have patience. Some of their problems are very, very serious. France, in the war against communism in Indochina, is losing monthly more than half of the men she can produce as instructors, the instructors they need to produce the army in France which they are so desperately trying to do. They have promised in spite of that to have by the end of the year 1953 roughly 25 battle-ready divisions. That is the kind of effort they are making.

Britain has similar things to face. Others, too, have problems. So while we may get a bit impatient when we think they do not see instantly what we are trying to do and what they should do in order to have the effort mutual and equal, we must have patience, ladies and gentlemen. Leadership must have patience or it cannot succeed.

And now there is one other point. I tried desperately to bring to you gentlemen specific types of comparisons that would convince you today of Europe's intent and of Europe's accomplishments, but when I tried to take such items as the proportion of gross national product that is turned into military purposes, when I tried to take the terms of enlistment, or the terms of service under conscription, when I tried to take the number of men that are actually in uniform or the kind of force they were trying to produce, the amount of their national budget that is put into military purposes, I found it impossible to make such comparisons. I started to talk about it in one nation and a man said to me, "General, we are amazed at the amount of your national product that you can devote to this great purpose. We understand that you are going to put about 20 percent of your gross national product into military or semimilitary purposes. Come with me, come out to the villages and come to the farms and see what a 5-percent reduction in our standard of living means." I looked at that squarely in the face.

I would like to bring you specific criteria, and I find myself disappointed in being unable to do so. I do come back to this, however, the defense of freedom is exactly like the appreciation for freedom, it is in the heart. It is a job that each of us here can do.

And though I cannot bring you back specific criteria by which you may judge for yourselves in the materialistic way, I do hope earnestly that each of you will take the opportunity to go to Europe and see whether you appreciate and sense this coming rejuvenation, this great determination that I think I sense. I assure you that when I get a headquarters established every one of you will be welcome there. Some of you were in my headquarters some years ago. It will be a nice return visit if you come back.

The cost of peace is going to be a sacrifice, a very great sacrifice individually and nationally. But the total war is tragedy; it is probably the suicide of civilization.

I came back, ladies and gentlemen, with the purpose of rendering just a report. It is not my proper role to be exhorting the Members. I am trying now to make my words those of education; I am trying to make them those of deep conviction that the world, our world, has arrived at a moment of decision. I have come to the conclusion that we can go on following the basic principles of our system safely and surely, subject to the tasks that I have here so briefly tried to outline. We can do it without constituting of ourselves or of our forces a threat to any other nation. Any attempt so to describe it would be for propaganda purposes only.

I close, ladies and gentlemen, on one note only which I have not to this moment mentioned, because it does not lie completely within my province, but it is important. That is our own efforts to let the world understand what we are about, what we are, and sometimes our own efforts to have our own people understand what we are trying to do. In any event, I believe that the United States needs a very, very much stronger information service. In our case I would not call it propaganda, because the truth is all we need. We do not have to falsify the record nor our intentions. [Applause.]

I think most of you know it has been my invariable practice when I appear before a body such as this to ask for a question period. As has been explained to you by your Presiding Officer, it was decided that it was impossible today. But I am, I believe, going to be in joint meetings with four committees of the Congress. I assure you that, so far as it lies within my power to do so, I will answer as honestly and sincerely as I know how every single question which you may choose to ask me.

This has been a very great honor, ladies and gentlemen. I cannot tell you how much it means to me that you have assembled to hear the conclusions that I have drawn and the beliefs that I hold with respect to this very, very great task.

Thank you very much. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Vice President BARKLEY. General Eisenhower, I am sure I express the views of every Member of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, and of all those who have been here this morning when I say I thank you not only for the information which you have conveyed to us but for the sincerity, the obvious, transparent sincerity with which you have done so.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

We have been under great obligation to you; and we know that under your leadership the cause of democracy in Europe, America, and the world will be advanced.

The meeting is now adjourned.

(Thereupon, at 11 o'clock and 25 minutes a. m., the meeting adjourned.)

INVESTIGATION OF EDUCATION, TRAINING, AND LOAN GUARANTY PROGRAMS OF VETERANS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 93 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of nine Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed, effective January 3, 1951, to conduct a full and complete investigation, evaluation, and study of the alleged abuses in the education and training and loan guaranty programs of World War II veterans, and of action taken, or the lack of action taken by the responsible officers and employees of the Veterans' Administration and State approving agencies to prevent abuses under Public Laws 16 and 346 (78th Cong.) as amended.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress the results of its investigation, evaluation, and study, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

For the purpose of carrying out this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States whether the House is in session, has recessed, or had adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof or any member of the committee staff may administer oaths to witnesses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to file a privileged report for printing in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 95, authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct studies and investigations relating to matters within its jurisdiction.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, may the gentleman from Ohio inquire what is the privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk read the report. The Clerk will reread it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 95, authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct studies and investigations relating to matters within its jurisdiction.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio and Mr. COX rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. For a question.

Mr. COX. For a statement. The gentleman violates an agreement we had on the floor.

Mr. SABATH. I did not violate any agreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asked unanimous consent to have until midnight to file a report from the Committee on Rules. That was day before yesterday. The request was objected to. There was no agreement the Chair knows anything about.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I had an agreement with the gentleman myself. The Committee on Rules reported this resolution when a quorum was not present.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I approached the gentleman on the floor and made a statement to him. He said he would not offer this resolution until the committee had had opportunity to act on it again. Now, that was fair of the gentleman. Of course, I do not mean to say the gentleman intentionally violates an agreement, but he has violated an agreement.

Mr. SABATH. No. Wait a minute. Mr. Speaker, to make matters clear, two of the Republican Members left the committee—the committees remained in session—to answer a roll call. We had seven Members and there was no objection.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is mistaken. There were six. I counted them.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution has not been properly reported by the Rules Committee.

Mr. SABATH. It has been reported.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think an inquiry by the Chair will determine there was not a quorum present, and that the resolution was not before the committee at that time.

Mr. COX. That is right. That is a correct statement.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I must protest, Mr. Speaker, and I must make the point of order inasmuch as I regret to do so.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, even if a quorum was not present, no point of order has been made. But a quorum was present, and I can give you the names of the seven Members who were present. They were Mr. COX, Mr. COLMER, Mr. MADDEN, Mr. DELANEY, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. LATHAM, and myself. Seven of twelve makes a quorum. But I withheld it because the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] objected due to some misunderstanding with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]. Since that time I have learned that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has agreed with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] on the assignment of committees and because the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] assured me that an agreement has been reached with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] as to the number of subcommittees, I present it today. A quorum was present. The committee had jurisdiction.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield there, the gentleman will recall that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Texas were not present. There was not a single Republican present.

Mr. SABATH. There was a Republican present.

Mr. COX. Not a single Republican was present. This was not on the agenda but it was called up after the Republicans left, and there was not the majority present.

Mr. SABATH. I will ask the gentleman whether Republicans were present or not.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make any unanimous-consent request at this time. The House cannot transact business unless the point of order of no quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. By request I withhold the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot withhold it. He must withdraw it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, I will withdraw it then. I understand I can make it again pretty quick.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman certainly can.

Mr. SABATH. I withdraw the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 33 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That, effective January 3, 1951, there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of nine Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the problems of small business existing, arising, or that may arise, with particular reference to (1) whether the potentialities of small business are being adequately developed and, if not, what factors have hindered and are hindering the normal operation of established small business and/or its development and enterprise; (2) whether agencies, departments of the Government, or Government owned or controlled corporations are properly, adequately, or equitably serving the needs of small business; (3) whether small business is being treated fairly and the public welfare properly and justly served through the allotments of valuable materials in which there are shortages, in the granting of priorities or preferences in the use, sale, or purchase of said materials; and (4) the solution of the problems of small business during the continuance of the existing national emergency.

The committee may from time to time submit to the House such preliminary reports as it deems advisable; and prior to the close of the present Congress shall submit to the House its final report on the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable. Any report submitted when the House is not in session may be filed with the Clerk of the House.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to borrow from Government departments and agencies such special assistants, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any properly designated chairman of a subcommittee thereof, or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 3, strike out "to borrow from Government departments and agencies such special assistants,".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 1, lines 2 and 3, strike out "nine Members" and insert in lieu thereof "eleven Members."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the pending resolution—House Resolution 33—deserves the wholehearted support of every Member on both sides of the aisle. There is nothing partisan, nor is there anything controversial, in the proposal to reconstitute the committee of this body which has devoted constant attention to the problems of small business for nearly a decade.

Throughout my connection with the House Small Business Committee—and I have served on the committee since its inception—all of the committee members have worked together harmoniously and in a spirit of sincere cooperation. The committee has approached the problems of small business without partisanship or a desire to make political capital out of them. Whatever differences of opinion the committee members may have in other fields, they are agreed that small, independent business must be preserved as the bulwark of our economic system. They are agreed that private enterprise must be kept free and competitive. And they have worked together toward those objectives.

I am confident that there is no Member of the House who does not share these views. The most important action which this body can take to demonstrate its interest in small business is the continuance of the small-business man's own committee in the House.

HISTORY OF THE SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

The House Small Business Committee was created by the Seventy-seventh Congress just 3 days before the infamous attack on Pearl Harbor. Its value to the Nation has been attested by the fact that each succeeding Congress has unanimously continued the life of the committee. Throughout the past decade, encompassing the World War II years, the postwar readjustment period, and now the period of mobilization against another menace to our way of life, the House Small Business Committee has given unlimited attention to every major problem confronting small business.

There is not sufficient time for me to recount the accomplishments of the committee during this period, but I should like to call your attention to a few highlights. In the early years of World War II, when many thousands of small businesses throughout the Nation were closing their doors through inability to obtain scarce materials or defense contracts, the committee conducted hearings which led to the passage of the Smaller War Plants Act.

After the war the committee gave invaluable assistance to small-business men undergoing the difficult experience of reconversion to a civilian economy. It was instrumental in the passage of legislation providing thousands of small businesses opportunity to handle war-surplus materials. It gave continuing attention to such problems as credit facilities for small business, Government competition with private enterprise, and the many problems involved in Government procurement.

WORK OF THE COMMITTEE IN THE EIGHTY-FIRST CONGRESS

In recent months the committee has centered its attention on the problems of the current mobilization period. It successfully sponsored and supported small-business amendments to the Defense Production Act of 1950. It was instrumental in the establishment of small-business offices in the Department of Defense, the National Production Authority, and the Economic Cooperation Administration. It was successful in expanding the number of outlets for Government procurement information from 65 to approximately 6,000 throughout the Nation. It is acting as the protagonist of small business over Government procurement policies, and it has drafted legislation to create a special Government agency to assure small business full participation in the mobilization program. In addition, the committee has aided hundreds of individuals and firms with specific problems through Members of the House.

These are only a few of the results which the House has obtained by creating a special committee to study the problems of small business.

SMALL BUSINESS PROBLEMS IN THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY

Every Member realizes that these problems will increase in number and complexity as we go further into the mobilization period. It will be impossible for individual Members to handle the problems brought to them by small-business men in their districts in the ensuing months. Other committees of the House are fully occupied in dealing with various phases of mobilization, but not specifically with its impact upon small business. The small-business man's only hope that he will receive adequate consideration by the House is through the House Small Business Committee. It is my hope that the House will adopt House Resolution No. 33 by a unanimous vote.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, it is my contention that the House Small Business Committee is one of the most necessary committees of the House because of its almost unlimited opportunities for service to the largest business increment in the American economy. The old adage, "Great oaks from little acorns grow," applies to our business enterprises. Three score and 10 years ago the economy of our country consisted of only small businesses. Today these have grown into huge industries which produce and supply us with the major products used by most of the 150,000,000 people in our Nation. If conditions change to such an extent that small-business units cannot be formed and cannot prosper, the future industrial expansion and development of business would be endangered.

Recently a distiguished engineer wrote a brochure on progress in America which I have seen since the 1880's. He pointed out that in the last decade of the nineteenth century there were no electric lights, no telephones, no streetcars, no motor vehicles, no carbon steel, and no engine-driven ships. Within a period of less than 25 years dozens of vast industries were developed by inventions in the fields of public utilities, transportation, and communication. Most of our great present-day inventions, most of our great industries, and our entire economic structure were begun, continued, developed, and expanded to their huge proportions in little more than a half century.

We have tremendous industrial strength—great laboratories, thousands of technicians, and a considerable number of billion-dollar corporations. We should not permit our economic structure to become top-heavy with powerful combinations which tend to weaken the foundation of smaller enterprises. We must not forget the small-business producers, wholesalers, distributors, and retailers who would be swallowed up by the giants if not wisely protected and preserved. Both the big and little people should have definite functions and opportunities in the American competitive system.

There are serious competitive handicaps which small business must overcome even in normal times: inability to obtain equity capital and long-term financing; shortages of certain raw materials and finished products; unequal opportunity to compete in markets; lack of credit for development and expansion; and others too numerous to mention. The mobilization program increased and intensified these handicaps to such an extent that many small concerns may be forced to quit doing business.

At this time the most acute problems facing small business are in the field of procurement. The Small Business Committee has already begun the fight for realistic recognition of the rights and resources of small manufacturers who should be given greater opportunities to contribute a proportionate share to the defense program. Results of World War II should be a warning to us as we enter this period of accelerated preparedness for possible world war III. The closing down of a large number of small businesses was a great wastage of capital, materials, and manpower. At the same time economic concentration increased by leaps and bounds. Although big corporations are expected to produce a great amount of war matériel, it is not best for the whole economy to have large corporations controlling an unreasonably high percentage of production. Such control makes it difficult, if not impossible, for small firms to obtain contracts on which production costs can be met and materials essential for both military and civilian production.

The Small Business Committee has an unprecedented opportunity to keep procurement officials aware of the abilities and facilities of small business which should be integrated in the national defense program. The officers and staff of the committee will continue to maintain an open forum where small-business men can be heard and appropriate action taken to give all possible assistance. Many of us send our constituents to this committee for information and guidance. Its services will be needed more in the biennium ahead than in any period since its creation at the beginning of the last World War.

Mr. RIEHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Select Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives was established in 1941 3 days before Pearl Harbor, when our effort in World War II was just beginning. The advent of war caused an immediate and serious crisis for small business. The very life of small business was threatened. Unjust economic conditions arising out of mobilization of industry seemed likely to deprive the small and independent business units of the very opportunity to survive.

During the previous war and the difficult postwar years the committee rendered an invaluable service to the small-business men of this country and to the country as a whole. By its efforts procurement policies were modified to make it possible for small business to participate in the war effort. It was instrumental in enacting legislation which assured small business of a fair share in war contracts. It helped the little fellow in making readjustments both to war and to peacetime production after war.

The present crisis confronting small business is no less severe than it was 10 years ago. The events of the past year point to the extinction of thousands of firms unless our mobilization program is redirected. Few of these firms are today participating in the war effort. Many lack materials for civilian production. Small business has been begging for contracts which have gone to large concerns. It is the story of 1941 all over again.

No one will challenge the assertion that we need the producing facilities of these small businesses in the war effort. In the aggregate they far exceed the facilities of our industrial giants. It will be impossible as it was in World War II to attain our maximum effort unless we utilize to the fullest extent the resources of small business. The loss of this essential productive capacity would be a great tragedy.

Small business lies at the roots of the American economic system. It is the bed rock upon which our whole economy is built. It is the very basis of the American way of life. Without it the competitive system will fail and freedom as we know it will disappear. We are fighting totalitarianism just as we were in 1941. The essense of totalitarianism is regimentation and control. It thrives on bigness, on subservience, and on special privilege. We must convince the world that a free economy operating under a democratic Government is more efficient and more capable of building a high standard of living than totalitarianism.

This demands the continued prosperity of independent businessmen. A free and competitive system in which there is freedom of opportunity, a constant spur to efficiency and prompt penalties for inefficiency will produce more wealth not only for the war period we are now entering but in the days of peace to come.

It was once said, "The only way to enrich America is to make it possible for any man who has the brains to get into the game. No system is renewed from the top; it is renewed from the bottom. Limit opportunity, restrict the field of originative achievement, and you have cut out the heart and root of all prosperity." We must not cut out the "heart and root" of our economic system.

The Small Business Committee has a vital part to play in this great task of preserving our free institutions. It has already demonstrated its usefulness in the nearly 10 years of its existence. A review of its accomplishments during the Eighty-first Congress indicates the importance of its work. Among these the following are the more outstanding:

First. Investigation: The committee has instituted several important investigations of problems pertaining to small business. Among these are its study of identical bidding on Government contracts. This led the General Services Administration to issue a regulation making it incumbent upon all civilian agencies to award a contract to a small-business concern when two or more equal bids are received. The committee's investigation of consumer-credit controls was instrumental in securing a relaxation of regulation W in 1947. It has made notable studies of the steel industry, of oil imports, of cement distribution, and of the fur industry. It has placed on a continuing basis an investigation of the operating effectiveness of the antitrust agencies. This has already begun to pay dividends in the form of increased operating efficiency of these agencies. It has prepared a 50-year history of antitrust legislation which has been widely acclaimed.

Second. Assistance in legislation: The Small Business Committee is not a legislative committee of the House. Nevertheless, it has rendered very valuable service in enacting legislation. Some of the measures upon which it has been active are: recent amendments to the Economic Cooperation Act, amendments to the Sherman and Clayton Acts, a uniform statute of limitations in treble damage suits under the antitrust laws, Public Law 280 eliminating premium payments on contracts for the purchase of Government royalty oil, the Small Business Act of 1950, Public Law 776 granting technical aid to small business, and many others.

Third. Assistance in procurement: The committee has been very active in helping small-business men who are trying to become Government contractors. It has made much information accessible to small producers and has helped in the latter's dealings with procurement officers. It has lifted a heavy load from our shoulders in taking care of the many inquiries and complaints from the public. More than this it has spurred the procurement officers themselves to a greater awareness of the needs of small business and to an increased willingness to make use of the latter's facilities.

Because of its past record and promise of continued usefulness I believe the life of the committee should be extended through the Eighty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE USE OF CHEMICALS IN FOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 74 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That, effective from January 3, 1951, the select committee created by House Resolution 323 of the Eighty-first Congress is authorized to continue the investigation and study begun under authority of such House Resolution 323 and for such purposes shall have the same power and authority as that conferred by such House Resolution 323. The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress, the results of its investigation and study, together with such recommendations for legislation as it may deem advisable.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution will continue the authority of the Select Committee To Investigate the Use of Chemicals in Food Products.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I observe that the resolution continues the so-called Delaney committee, which started its operations late in the Eighty-first Congress, in the second session. The committee has done exceptionally good work. It has a rather important task ahead of it for the protection of the health of the people of America. On both sides of the aisle there seems to be general agreement that the committee must and should carry on.

Mr. MITCHELL. The resolution would continue the Select Committee To Investigate the Use of Chemicals in Food Products.

Under the able chairmanship of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY], the committee, which was established just last year, has filed an interim report. This report, in the opinion of the Rules Committee, outlines a field in which further investigation should be conducted. There are many indications that this study will result in suggestions of legislation which may be necessary if the public is to be protected adequately by the food and drug laws.

This, in my judgment, is a very important task especially in view of the fact that the average citizen takes it for granted that Federal law does protect him fully from the presence of harmful ingredients in foods.

The committee report states that while 704 chemicals are used in the preparation of foods, only 428 are known to be safe. This need not indicate that the other 276 chemicals are harmful when used. It does mean, however, that the safety of these 276 chemicals has not been established to the satisfaction of the Food and Drug Administration.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 38 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Armed Services, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations relating to matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committee under rule XI (1) (c) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, and for such purposes the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such rearings, and to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], and now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of the subject being dealt with and of the background of the great Committee on Armed Services, and the experience that it has had in this field, the Committee on Rules was happy to report the pending resolution. The adoption of this resolution will, in my opinion, result in practically all of the committees of the House asking that they be given subpena powers, and a denial of this request to any single committee will be a difficult thing to do. I am convinced, however, that these are matters which should be cleared with the leadership, and where they are related to national defense, they should likewise be cleared with the leadership of the majority, for there are on foot schemes to use the investigatory powers of committees to perpetrate gigantic frauds upon the American businessman, who ought not to be put on the griddle just for the sake of getting all the grease that his hog contains. He ought, however, to be held to a strict accounting and made to keep faith with the Congress and the country and live up to all of his engagements.

Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was glad to see party lines melt under the rays of the genuine affection that this body bears for the great man who presides over it. The gentleman who occupies the high position of Speaker of the House of Representatives is no political accident. The high station which he holds he earned by patient toil. He is no counterfeit because the coiner who stamped him is God. That which I say of our presiding officer I can say and do say with equal earnestness of his distinguished predecessor, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. I say it with the same earnestness as regards the most moral man I ever knew, the majority leader [Mr. MCCORMACK]. I say it of the brilliant CHARLEY HALLECK, LES ARENDS, faithful PERCY PRIEST, and of the noblest Roman of them all, BOB DOUGHTON, and particularly do I say it of HOWARD SMITH, the "Old Ironsides" of the fleet that sails the sea of this, our little legislative world.

Mr. Speaker, this is the country of every one of us, and in dealing with matters affecting its welfare it is of tremendous importance in these times of stress that we present a solid front. Soon we will have coming before us a question that will test our metal, a question which has to do with the drafting of the children of the country into the armed services. Protest is arising all over the country to the drafting of 18-year-old boys.

I appreciate the objections that are raised. They are strongly persuasive, but our situation is most serious. I believe it to be vastly more serious than most of the country realize. I fear that to hesitate in the following of our military leaders would be taken by people in other parts of the world as an indication of an indisposition to go all out in the endeavor to save this, our beautiful America, which we call our home.

I hope the House will accept this resolution without a single dissenting vote. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and the great committee over which he presides with supremely great distinction are entitled to this vote of confidence.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I feel that all of us, regardless of political affiliation, can join with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] in the remarks he has just concluded on this floor as to the patriotism and capabilities of the men and women in this House. It seems to me it is also proper to say that the strong leadership, the great patriotism, which the gentleman from Georgia described, pertains on the minority side of the House as well as to the majority, and that all of us, whether we call ourselves Republicans or Democrats, are vitally and deeply concerned with the welfare and security of this great Nation.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, the membership of the House is entitled to know the full content and portent of this resolution and something of the discussion which took place in the Rules Committee, which has original jurisdiction over this particular resolution, at the time it was considered and reported favorably.

This is indeed a very important resolution, placing upon one of the great standing committees of this House perhaps the heaviest burden and the greatest responsibility any legislative committee has been asked or instructed to assume in all the years we have had a Congress. I regret that the chairman of the great Committee on Armed Services, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], is not present, but I am sure he will agree with that which I am about to say as being a true reflection of that which has gone on, and of the expressed desires of the members of the Rules Committee as to what can and should be the purpose and accomplishments of his committee under this resolution.

In the budget which the President submitted to the Congress a few weeks ago one section provides that more than $41,000,000,000 of American funds be expended upon national defense. The authorization of most of these expenditures, certainly the planning of these expenditures, will come under the jurisdiction of the Armed Services Committee. Most of the members of that great committee have had many years of experience in connection with military matters.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

This resolution places upon the Armed Services Committee the responsibility, as well as the power and the authority, to investigate and to study plans, expenditures, and proposed laws for all military purposes, and the actions of our military authorities under them. This committee not only has to pass upon the authorizations for expenditures, but it also has jurisdiction over such legislation as selective service, and many other similar activities closely associated with our national defense.
